Mr. Remsburg's pamphlet on the "False Claims of the Church" has gone around the world, and meets everywhere a hearty reception from Freethinkers. In Wanganui, New Zealand, is published a very able Freethought Review, in the last number of which we find this appreciativ notice: "Lectures, brilliant, logical, and convincing, are delivered from time to time in the interest of Freethought, but the address under notice surpasses all we remember having seen, in its statistical range and the comprehensivness with which it notices the salient features of Christianity. The address abounds in facts, figures, suggestions, and deductions, and is an excellent summary of the arguments against the Christian system. . . . For all purposes of ordinary controversy on the subject of Freethought and Christianity, 'False Claims' is a perfect armory of weapons of attack."

In noticing some of its exchanges, the Sociologist, published monthly by A. Chavannes & Co., Adair Creek, E. Tenn., says of us: "The Truth Seeker is an iconoclastic journal. The sworn foe of superstition and error in all its forms, its motto might appropriately be, War, war to the knife, and the knife to the hilt, for it never lets a chance go by to hit superstition a resounding blow. It is a first-class exponent of what we call fighting Liberalism. It was founded several years ago by D. M. Bennett. First a small monthly in a little town in Illinois, it has flourished till now it is the largest Liberal weekly in the country. D. M. Bennett has been one of the most maligned men in the United States. Not only has he been abused and reviled, but he was condemned to thirteen months' imprisonment in the Albany Penitentiary for selling a book entitled 'Cupid's Yokes.' A man of pure life and kind heart, his position as the editor and founder of The Truth Seeker marked him as the victim for the hate of men who liv by preying upon the foibles of humanity. But if those men could imprison they could not conquer, and the number of men who recognize Mr. Bennett's true worth is steadily on the increase. His untimely death, partly brought about by the sufferings he endured in prison, has not checked the usefulness of his paper. Under the direction of Mr. E. M. Macdonald, it still flourishes. Besides numerous articles of a polemic character, it contains a serial story by S. P. Putnam, a department for children, 'Notes,' 'News,' 'Gems of Thought,' 'Odds and Ends,' and numerous letters from correspondents. Besides The Truth Seeker, the firm publishes also Liberal books, one of the best specimens of which is their last publication, the Truth Seeker Annual and Freethinkers' Almanac, a perfect gem, both in contents and finish, and which we would recommend to be sent for by those who are not yet acquainted with The Truth Seeker publications."

The Catholic Chronicle has the merit of being straightforward in its arrogant assumption of divine right for the church, as can be seen from the following remarks concerning Mr. Bradlaugh:

"Bradlaugh is an Atheist, an avowed outspoken sneerer at Christianity, at God. For him there is no God, no Christ, no Christianity, no church, no minister of religion, no priest. He avows all this nonbelief, declares it to the world, not merely as his own sentiments, but as a protest to the world against religion, against the world's 'superstition.' There may be other Atheists in the English Parliament, but he is the Atheist. He and his friends, the English Radicals, do not desire his entry to Parliament for his own sake as much as for the sake of Atheism. His election by a majority of the voters of Northampton is taken as a victory for Atheism, and his admission to the House of Commons will be the triumph of Atheism. It may be said that the will of the people who sent Bradlaugh to Parliament should be obeyed by the House of Commons, that they are the best judges of the kind of men they want there. We say, no; the people of Northampton hav not the right to send an avowed Atheist to Parliament, and if they send one the House of Commons hav the right to keep him from taking a seat. In writing on this subject some months ago, we stated that though England is not a Catholic country, it is a Christian country. The aim of Bradlaugh and his friends is to wrench England from Christianity, to make it, in its legislature and its laws at all events, similar to the countries of Continental Europe, from the legislatures and the laws of which God has been banished. The English people do not want to see Atheism triumphant in their laws and their legislature. To an Atheist this may sound like bigotry, but we cannot see how it can sound like bigotry to a Catholic."

Of course these remarks apply to our country as well as to England. It is therefore well to know the course the Catholic church will pursue when she gets the upper hand in any legislativ body in the United States.

CHAPTER XXV.

FATHER AND SON.

Harry went directly to the tent of his father. He hadn't the slightest idea what to do; only there was in him a tumultuous determination to get those prisoners free.

The general greeted his son with cold kindliness. Intellectually these two were much alike. They had many sympathies of thought and feeling, only the father was hard as adamant, while the son had much softness and sweetness of disposition, and this indeed was the source of his dereliction. His character was not of the stern and indomitable sort. He dreamed of the ideal, while he could not contend for it against difficulties. He was prone to grasp the lesser good because so easily acquired. He rejoiced in the beautiful, but he desired its possession without much effort on his own part. Mightily impulsive, he was not enduring in his purpose. He never meant to desert Amy. Only by degrees did his passion and zeal melt away. By the careful manipulation of his father manifold combinations and interests were induced by which he was kept from executing whatever desire he might have. The father was too wise to directly oppose his son, or in any way arouse the tremendous impulses that lay dormant in his nature, and let Amy and her child alone for the time being. So the years sped by, and Harry was fighting side by side with his father, and with a sad sincerity, too; for the great wave of Southern feeling possessed him, as it possessed so many an ardent mind, with irresistible compulsion.

"You should not have done this, father," said Harry; "let these men escape."

"I see no reason for that. They are spies."

"Possibly, but they ran this risk to save my child."

"Your child? Grant it. But your child was in my hands, and therefore perfectly safe."

"It may be, but you had no right to take it as you did."

"I simply obeyed the law. I wanted my property. You might have done with the child as you would so long as you kept her."

"I would not have kept her. She belongs to her mother."

"I won't dispute with you, since the child is gone. I suppose the mother has her."

"I hope so, but it is uncertain."

"We won't quarrel about that, but these men must suffer the penalty."

"I protest against it."

"That will do no good."

"I beg of you to grant to me this one favor."

"Impossible."

"I command you to do it," said Harry, with flashing eyes.

"On what compulsion?" said Bolton, with a mocking smile.

"It is murder! it is murder!" cried Harry. "You do it from vengeance."

"I have a right to do it, and I will do it. My word is law."

"I had rather die than that these men perish."

"That's a mere feeling. In a few days you will be all over it."

"You mistake. I am weak, but I am not evil. What shall I do?"

"Simply mind your business," said the father, with a cruel sneer. "This is my affair. Order the troops to fall in."

"Never! This murder shall not be committed if I live."

"Help yourself if you can. Officer of the day!" Bolton arose, as if the matter was entirely at an end.

"Stay!" cried Harry. "I have yielded many times to your will, but now I will not. It is life or death." Harry cocked his pistol, deliberately raised it, pointed it at his own temple and met his father's fierce look unflinchingly. "One step, and this ball speeds to my brain. Call out, and you will see me dead at your feet. Order the release of those men."

If the pistol had been pointed at his own head Bolton would not have been moved a bit; but he knew instantly that Harry meant what he said, and that if he stirred the fatal shot would speed.

Harry was, after all, the very idol of his father's heart, the thing he thought most of in life. The love of the father was entirely selfish, but it was love nevertheless, and the mightiest passion in his being. He trembled. For the time being, the son had the mastery.

"Quick! send it out," cried Harry imperiously.

Almost mechanically the father obeyed. He summoned an orderly and dispatched it to the officer of the day.

Harry was still standing like a marble statue, every nerve strained, and his soul gleaming from his eyes like the glitter of a snake's. It was a wonderful fascination, the fascination of intense and overpowering feeling permeated by a triumphant will. It was like the focus of a magnetic battery, and for a while Bolton was utterly helpless.

Harry knew that the order would be worthless unless he could gain a little time, five or ten minutes, for the flight of the prisoners. Every particle of his being was concentrated to this supreme effort. He kept the pistol pointed steadily at his head, and his eyes fixed with unerring flame upon his father's. For ten minutes each remained in this awful silence, and then Harry dropped like a stone. Instantly the father rushed to the door, summoned an officer, countermanded the release, and ordered an instant search for the fugitives. The camp was in an uproar. Every nook was examined, but nothing could be found of the escaped prisoners. They seemed to have vanished into the bosom of the earth.

CHAPTER XXVI.

MASKS AND FACES.

An old man and an old woman sat smoking and dreaming, apparently, before one of those half mud shanties in which the poor whites were wont to exist. Evidently they got a very spare living from the little lot of land which they cultivated. A few straggling hills of corn seemed to be about all there was. A melancholy-looking cow roamed sedately about the premises. A hen or two fluttered here and there, and a mule that seemed to be all bones and hind feet made out to get some sort of sustenance from a dreary mass of hay and stubble.

The troops dashed up to the very door and inquired if they had seen anything of the fugitives. Invariably they opened their sleepy eyes, puffed forth a column of smoke, and answered,

"Nothing this way."

Dinner time approached, and the old woman, occasionally assisted by the old man, proceeded to get the meal, which consisted of, as usual, hog and hominy.

Every now and then a fresh squad of soldiers would wheel up with volleys of questions, and then thunder off again, while the unsophisticated octogenarians placidly followed them with their quiet eyes, as if they had mighty little interest in all this havoc of war.

Very sedately and deliberately they ate their humble meal. They seemed to enjoy it hugely, and smacked their lips with more than usual vigor, and then took their place before the door in the sunshine, and puffed the fragrant smoke, and spoke a word or two at intervals of half an hour or so.

"I guess they are gone," said the old man.

"I guess so too," said the old woman.

"They've had quite a hunt."

"It looks like it."

"I don't believe they caught 'em."

"Nor I."

"I'm pretty sure of it," remarked the old man vigorously.

"I know it," said the old woman heartily, and there was a burst of subdued laughter from one and the other, while their eyes twinkled merrily.

"I must have a rest," broke in the old woman, and she flung off her gray locks, and behold! the face of Cupples came smiling to the surface.

"So far all's well," said the old man as he shook himself and straightened out, and exposed the stalwart form of Jones.

"Not hung yet, but it's a mighty close scratch still. How Columbus did bundle us into these clothes, and set us down here like a couple of dolls ready made for the occasion! It was a stroke of genius."

"I wonder how it all came about."

"I don't know. Harry must have done something sharp. The way we was hustled out of that guardhouse made my head swim."

"We must shift for ourselves now."

"That we can do, but we must keep the farce up. We are in a net-work of danger, and the slightest mistake will snap our heads off."

For a couple of weeks Cupples and the sergeant munched and dozed, milked the cow, circumvented the heels of the mule, made believe cultivate the straggling corn, lived on hog and hominy, and kept up between themselves a very subdued sort of conversation, as they were constantly afraid that somebody might overhear.

"The camp is moved," said the sergeant one bright morning, "and I guess we'll start. Harness up the mule, if you can do so without breaking your neck."

"Hold on to his heels while I tackle his head," said Cupples. "That'll be the safest way."

By their united efforts the mule was finally harnessed into the dilapidated cart. He had a very forlorn yet fierce appearance. There was vengeance in his eye, though his heels were apparently submissive.

"We'll take along what corn we have for market, and the old cow. She may serve us a good turn. As for the hens, I ate the last one this morning, and I never felt so old in my life. My stomach must cover centuries," said the sergeant.

Quite a procession they made as they started forth on their adventurous tour. Cupples made one of the nicest old women imaginable. He seemed to take to the character with a natural grace and dignity. The sergeant performed his role with admirable effect. He seemed to have sprung from the very soil, like the scarred and crooked oak. As for the mule, he placidly pursued his way, with an occasional jerk that almost upset the rickety vehicle that bore all the earthly goods of the quaint pilgrims. The cow brought up the rear, with a vivid remembrance of the lean kine. Almost every bone in her body seemed to be on exhibition, is if some kind of a Barnum had the management of her picturesque skeleton. Slowly they traversed the winding and rugged roads. It was a resplendent day. Never did the wind blow so sweetly and softly. The great trees towered gloriously in the sunlight, and appeared like gorgeously decorated sentinels of the palaces of the sky that to the imagination opened on every side. The fields were almost dancing, and the meadows stole away with verdant splendor to where the glittering stream went bounding on, or glassed itself in delicious nooks and corners. Nature was in fine spirits, and flashed forth in multitudinous smiles and glances. Even the mule seemed to step a little more daintily than usual, and his kick had a gentle fervor born of the sunny atmosphere. The cow also gave more vivid tokens of being able to furnish on demand a first-class porterhouse steak.

"Here's a good place for dinner," said the sergeant, as their little pageantry rolled up alongside a huge boulder and the mule seemed disposed after an energetic flourish of his heels to take a noonday nap.

"Let's try it then," said Cupples. "I have no fears of my appetite if the rations hold out."

"Anything will do—even the mule's hind leg. I could digest one of his heartiest kicks."

They all ate together, and seemed to make a very happy family in the noonday glory.

"Richard's himself again," said Cupples, after a hearty meal of corn-cakes and a bit of bacon. "I could conquer worlds now."

"Keep your courage up, for I think we'll need it," said the sergeant. Almost immediately the long arches of the forest thundered with the tramp of cavalry, and soon our little company was surrounded by about fifty soldiers.

"What have you here?" said the officer in command.

"There's a cow, and a mule, and some corn. We want to find a market for them," said the sergeant.

"You may go farther and fare worse," said the officer. "Fall in and we'll take your stuff. When we arrive at headquarters you shall be paid."

There was no help for it but to join forces and march again into the enemy's camp.

About the middle of the afternoon they halted, and preparations were made for a night's sojourn.

"Here's a tumble-down shanty. Let the old man and woman go in there. It's the best we can do for the fair sex," said the officer.

"Fair sex," said Cupples laughing, as he rolled into his airy quarters, for the shanty was in such a ruinous condition that it seemed to be about half out doors. "It's the first time my beauty ever did me a favor. I didn't know I was so handsome. Hurrah for the old woman!"

"Somethin's up," said the sergeant, as they cosily snugged together and prepared for their night's sleep. "This fellow has some dispatches. If we could get them we'd know something of the plans of the enemy."

"Have I got to risk my neck again?" said Cupples. "I think we play this game for too high stakes altogether."

"Never mind. We've made up the pot, and must win or lose. I'll have those papers, and I'll find out what's going on, and somehow I'll get back into our lines. Farther than that I know not. Let's go to sleep."

"That's my trump card," said Cupples. "I'll play it."

In five minutes they were sound asleep, as likewise was the rest of the company, save the sentinels.

Again the brilliant morning came, flooded with music, gemmed with bright-winged birds and dews and flowers.

"If anything happens, meet me right here, Cupples," said the sergeant. "When I get those dispatches we must run for it."

"You'll find me here, or else nowhere," said Cupples valiantly.

The day's march was taken up. They were a jolly company on the whole, and made the forest ring with merry songs and laughter.

"We needn't hurry, men," said the captain. "We shall get to camp by noon. If that cow bears us company she will make a good square meal."

"You'll be sure and introduce us to the general," said Jones. "I want to get my money right off."

"Bolton will do the fair thing," said the officers. "He pays good prices, or, at least, promises to pay, and that's just as good nowadays."

The sergeant and Cupples winced tremendously, but all to themselves, when they heard the general's name. Would they have to face him again?

"Not much," said the sergeant to himself. "Now for a bold stroke, a dash for liberty, and perhaps the capture of some important secret. I'll have it, or I'll die."

Warily he watched his chances. None seemed to appear. They were marching through a dense forest, and among rugged hills. There were chances to escape, but no opportunity to secure the papers which the officer carefully guarded in his own breast. Passing along, they came to a wildly magnificent spot. There was a natural bridge of rock over a rushing stream of waters. The waters went whirling and seething and hissing along with the strength of a stormy sea. The immense volume a few yards from the bridge plunged into an awful chasm. It was a glorious sight to behold the swift battalions of white-crested billows throng to the dazzling edge, and as if with the sound of a trumpet plunge headlong forward. The whole company paused to look at the enchanting scene—a picture of surpassing loveliness and sublimity. It seemed like some giant's mighty cave, who was holding some fair maiden in his gloomy hold, and the restless and plumed waves were leaping to her rescue. Suddenly, with a quick jump and herculean grasp, Jones had the body of the officer in his iron embrace, and went headlong over the parapet of rocks into the resounding flood. The rest gazed horror-stricken on the glancing bodies, as in fearful struggle they swept over the edge of the cataract, and then there was a general rush alongside the stream to see where the mangled bodies might reappear. Instantly Cupples dashed back into the depths of the forest, and hastened in the direction of last night's encampment.

Science.

Reasons for Thinking that Life Began at the Poles.

As every one knows, the earth is flattened at the poles and bulged at the equator, as it should be if it was once a revolving liquid globe. This givs to the polar sides an increased area of radiating surface, and to this extent an increased loss of heat. Thus it is evident that the earth is, and always has been, radiating more heat into space polewise than any other one way, and this, to a limited extent, has kept the polar regions in advance of the equatorial in the process of cooling.

Another effect of the same cause and bearing in the same direction is this: The equatorial diameter of the earth is about twenty-six miles longer than its diameter polewise. This condition also favors the advanced cooling of the polar regions. First, the earth is so much thinner polewise than equatorially, and consequently there is less mass per square foot to be cooled by polewise radiation than by equatorial; or, secondly, this difference of diameters is equivalent to having had a layer around the earth of molten matter to be cooled thirteen miles in thickness at the equator, and tapering off to nothing somewhere north of the Tropic of Cancer and south of the Tropic of Capricorn in excess of the molten matter to be cooled by polewise radiation, and this would hav tended to keep the polar regions constantly in advance of all other parts of the earth in cooling.

In addition to all this, it is obvious that the shape given to the earth by this difference of diameters—this flattening at the poles of itself—would somewhat lessen the angles of incident and reflection of the sun's rays within the polar regions, which would still more decrease their effect, and so reduce the offset to loss of heat by radiation within these polar regions.

Can it then be doubted that the frigid zones first became cool enough to maintain life as we now see it on the earth?

To state the matter briefly, the polar regions hav received less heat from the sun, hav had less matter to cool, and hav radiated heat into space more rapidly in proportion to mass than the equatorial belt or any other parts of the earth's surface. In the light of these facts it seems to me the following conclusions cannot be well avoided:

First.—That the polar zones, having led the advance in cooling, hav had in turn all the temperatures, climates, and climatic conditions which at any time the torrid and temperate zones hav had, in addition to long later periods of cooler temperature and climates than either.

Second.—Therefore, that at one epoch or another the polar regions of the earth hav enjoyed all the various temperatures and climatic conditions necessary to maintain all the well-nigh infinit forms of life, both vegetal and animal, which are now, or ever hav been, upon this globe. At the risk of being tedious let us state this hypothesis in another way.

The whole globe was once a molten mass too hot to maintain life. The polar regions were then too hot for that purpose. These same regions are now too cold to maintain such life as we find on other parts of the earth. Nothing, then, can be more obvious than that the temperature of these now frigid zones, in sliding gradually from the first extreme of heat to the last extreme of cold, must hav passed slowly through all the grades of temperature and climatic conditions which were exactly suited at one time or another to all the varieties of plants and animals which now liv, or ever hav lived on the earth.

There is no escape from this conclusion, except by asserting that the usual climatic and concurrent conditions did not in this case follow along the line of lowering temperature. But this is not only raising a groundless objection, one without a single fact to support it, but it is also one which disturbs, contradicts, and reverses the usual order of things. Certainly the onus probandi should rest on him who invokes the supposition.

Of course the usual number, in considering this question, will very properly ask whether there was time enough for organic development after the polar zones were cool enough to maintain life, and before the other parts of the earth had reached the same temperature and climatic conditions. Well, time is the infinit factor in every calculation of this sort; nature, reason, and observation unite in saying "it is illimitable and all-sufficient." Certainly there has been and will be time enough for everything.

If the first isothermal belt, including the highest heat degrees in which any life is possible, had swept southward at the rate of one English mile in a millennium, it would hav taken about 6,000,000 years for it to hav traveled from the north pole to the equator. This would seem a sufficient lapse of time for a great advance and development of all forms of life moving within the zone. I am well aware that eminent geologists are assuming much longer periods for the life-history; for instance, Professor Dana mentions 48,000,000 years as an estimated minimum of time since the commencement of the Silurian age, while Sir William Thomson estimates geological time at 100,000,000 years, Haughton at twice that period, and many others at thousands of millions. Now, without courting an earnest approval for these, or any estimates for that matter, of the lapse of time since life began—the data being so insufficient and the conclusions so widely different—yet it is eminently conservativ, in view of them and other accepted calculations, to claim, so far as time is a factor, that a first life-bearing climate might hav commenced anywhere and traveled everywhere (and all sorts of organisms might hav traveled with it in the natural thoroughfares) over a globe only 25,000 miles in circumference without moving faster than one mile in ten millenniums.

On the other hand, a zone of torrid climate beginning near and surrounding the north pole, and creeping thence to the equator at such a slow pace, would hav given ample time in its long journey for the development of highly complex forms evolved from the very simplest, for all organisms moving within its isothermal limits.

There was time enough and to spare for vast and highly developed orders of life within the frigid and temperate zones before any movement, and probably before the equatorial belt was cool enough to maintain life, certainly before the first torrid climates near the poles became cold enough to exclude it. We may, therefore, safely conclude, if the code of natural laws has been uniformly in force—

First.—That life commenced on those parts of the earth which were first prepared to maintain it; at any rate, that it never could hav commenced elsewhere.

Second.—As the whole earth was at one time too hot to maintain life, so those parts were probably first prepared to maintain it which cooled first.

Third.—That those parts which received the least heat from the sun, and which radiated heat most rapidly into space, in proportion to mass, and had the thinnest mass to cool, cooled first.

Fourth.—That those parts of the earth's surface, and those only, answering to these conditions, are the arctic and antarctic zones.

Fifth.—That as these zones were at one time too hot, and certain parts thereof are now too cold, for such life as inhabits the warmer parts of the earth, these now colder parts, in passing from the extreme of heat to the extreme of cold, must hav passed slowly through temperatures exactly suited to all plants and all animals in severalty which now liv or ever lived on the earth.

Sixth.—If the concurrent conditions which hav usually followed lowering temperature followed the climatic changes in this case, life did commence on the earth within one or both of certain zones surrounding the poles, and sufficiently removed therefrom to receive the least amount of sunlight necessary for vegetal and animal life.

It seems almost superfluous to say that those parts of the earth which first became cool enough to maintain life had a climate warmer at that time than that which we now call torrid. It was for an epoch, and probably a very long one, as hot as it could be and maintain life.

It is also quite obvious, in the light of the foregoing considerations, that as the temperate zones hav always received more heat from the sun, and hav had more mass per square foot to cool, in proportion to radiating surface, than the polar zones, so, on the other hand, they hav always received less heat from the sun and hav had less mass to cool, in proportion to radiating surface, than the torrid zone; and so when the artic zones cooled from a tropical to what we now call a temperate climate, the temperate zones had cooled down to that temperature which we now call a torrid climate, while the equatorial belt was still too hot for any form of life. Thus the lowering of temperature, climatic change, and that life which made its advent in these zones surrounding the poles, hav crept thence slowly along, pari passu, from these polar regions to the equator. Doubtless, through all geologic time, wave after wave of climatic change and corresponding forms of life, including the remotest extinct species, from laurentian to alluvium, from eozoon to mammal, whose several biographies in the rocks, are now called epochs, hav followed each other in succession from this originally prolific polar zone to the equatorial belt.—G. H. Scribner.

Protoplasm.

Protoplasm is a real substance, found in considerable abundance in nature, not only within the tissues of organized beings, but, as we might almost say, in a mineral state, wholly disconnected from such beings. There is no more doubt that it is elaborated out of the inorganic elements than there is that ammonia or common salt is thus elaborated. It is a true chemical compound, in which the proportions of each element are known. It contains approximately 54 parts of carbon, 21 parts of oxygen, 16 parts of nitrogen, 7 parts of hydrogen, and about one part of sulphur and phosphorus.

The great truth that now comes squarely home to us is that life is a property of matter. It is simply the result of the movements going on among the molecules composing a mass of protoplasm. It is a phenomenon presented by this most highly complex form of matter, and which is never absent from it. To kill protoplasm is to destroy its composition, to degrade it into a lower order of substance. The activities, powers, functions, and susceptibilities possessed by this substance, whose combined effect we denominate life, are but the relations which the substance sustains by virtue of its constitution to the forms of matter around it. They are its properties, just as astringency, transparency, etc., are the properties of alum.

In reaching the substance, protoplasm, we hav not only reached the fact of life itself, but in its properties we behold all there is essential to life.

The moner is Hero's engin, the vertebrate is the modern locomotiv; the power that propels is the same in both. The observed advance is not in the force, but in the organization.

It was undoubtedly in the sea, that great receptacle for all forms of matter, that the first beginnings of life took place. In the sea there now exist millions of beings of lowly organization whose bodies consist almost exclusivly of protoplasm, either in its undifferentiated state, or but slightly modified into cells and simple aggregate of cells.—Lester F. Ward.

Evolution.

What of evolution to-day? I can only reply, The battle has been fought and won. A few stragglers on each side may still keep up a scattered fire, but the contest is over, and the victors hav moved on to other fields.

As to the origin of species, once thought to be the key to the position, no working naturalist of to-day who sees the great problems of life opening one after another before him will waste time in discussing a question already solved. This question, so long regarded as beyond solution, has been worked out by that greatest of naturalists [Darwin], whose genius all intelligent men now recognize, and whose recent loss the whole civilized world deplores.

Not only do we know to-day that species are not permanent, but every phase of life bears witness to the same general law of change. Genera, families, and the higher groups of animals and plants are now regarded merely as convenient terms to mark progress, which may be altered by any new discovery.

All existing life on the earth is now believed to be connected directly with that of the distant past, and one problem to-day is to trace out the lines of descent. Here embryology and paleontology work together, and the results already secured are most important. The genealogies of some of the animals now living hav been made out with a degree of certainty that amounts to a demonstration, and others must rapidly follow.

In this, and in all other departments of natural science, the doctrin of evolution has brought light out of darkness, and marks out the path of future progress. What the law of gravitation is to astronomy, the law of evolution is now to natural science. Evolution is no longer a theory, but a demonstrated truth, accepted by naturalists throughout the world. —Prof. Marsh.

The Situation Here.

Our London correspondent, in a private letter, says:

"If Freethought is progressing as fast with you as here, it is going ahead faster than Christianity did in the first centuries. The only difficulty is the want of proper organization, which is very defectiv with the good folks here."

The situation in England is very similar to that in America. There is an immensely strong undercurrent of Infidelity flowing through the land, but it is unorganized and widely scattered. Nevertheless it sweeps along, undermining the church foundations, and forcing the faithful to be constantly making repairs. The educated occupants of the pulpits hav been caught in it, and many of them are adding to its constantly swelling volume. Creeds are being revised, the Old Testament thrown away as possibly partially inspired, but on the whole an obstruction to "religion," the New Testament pruned of its hell-fire doctrin, and miraculous impossibilities; altruistic philanthropy is taking the place of the selfish egoistic charity which givs a dollar with the expectation of getting back a hundred dollar's worth of personal comfort in heaven, and a general broadening out and overstepping of orthodox lines is apparent everywhere. The treasures of the city of gold are rapidly being exchanged for good done here on earth. Christianity has become a commercial commodity, purchasable with good clothes, a high-priced seat in a fashionable church, and a regular donation to that particular church's pet charity. Long faces and "I am a poor worm of the dust" sentiments are not now necessary to "conversion;" the self-abasement of a half century ago is out of style and not considered in good form. In many parts of the country Calvinism has faded into Universalism and Universalism into nothing. The churches are sustained by business men for the sake of their wives, and their wives go for the sake of the society. Easter, which the Christian world celebrated last Sunday, is the designated day for donning spring bonnets and airing the preacher's eloquence on the subject of a "risen lord and savior," instead of rejoicing over the grave giving up its dead; fast days are feast days, and there is no general disposition to heed the frantic shrieks of a few old-style dominies who hav not yet became accustomed to the new order of religious things.

This breaking up of orthodox lines has been occasioned by several things, among which we may enumerate the acceptance of the philosophy of evolution; the general advance of civilization, rendering a religion originating among a barbaric people crudely ridiculous; the revision of creeds and expurgation of absurd dogmas; the rapid rise of a rationalistic biblical criticism, destroying the sanctity of the Bible and removing the old-time reverence for the book; the progress of investigations conducted scientifically, which upset the foundations of Christianity, and lastly, as we hav said, by the abandonment of the fundamental positions of the church by her most eminent preachers.

This is about the situation of the churches in the large cities of the East. In smaller places, where news travels slower, and two-thirds of the people never heard of Darwin and the researches of his school, where the male inhabitants vote for General Jackson and thrash the Jews they encounter because eighteen hundred years ago the Hebrews crucified Christ, and the news has just got around, there is not so much progress. In the cities the preacher who vilifies the Freethinkers is usually dishonest; he knows better, but chooses to do it. Through the country towns the preacher is generally honest in his belief that Infidelity is of the devil and leads to hell. He really believes in a hell, and that the saints rejoice at the eternal punishment of sinners, even though those saints may in this world be their nearest relativs or warmest friends. These country places all need stirring up, and the ministers need educating. This is being gradually done, and scarcely a week passes that "Another Heretical Preacher!" is not found among the headlines of the daily papers.

On the whole, we can assure our London friend and correspondent that Freethought is progressing rapidly, perhaps as fast as in England. And the condition of the outspoken, activ, aggressiv Freethought party is much the same. Solid to resist persecution, it becomes apathetic and careless under no provocation. The Liberal journals are the head and front of the movement, yet they are not supported as they should be and might be. We presume THE TRUTH SEEKER experience is the experience of the most. A few hundred of our friends do all the work. Hundreds more do absolutely nothing to spread the truth, being content with having found it for themselvs; and hundreds more forget to pay at all. Last week over three hundred names were stricken from our list because of arrearages varying $3 to $8. This sort of neglect keeps the publisher's noses right down to the grindstone of impecuniosity, and forces us to look seven ways for Sundays, as the old saying is.

There are a few very strong Leagues in the country, and a few which exist on paper only—they may be counted as dead. But there are several hundred Leagues and societies placidly existing—activ when occasion demands, apathetic when the need is over. Between four and five years ago two hundred thousand names were put upon one Liberal petition; double that number could probably be obtained now with half the labor, were it necessary.

But notwithstanding this, organization is as defectiv here as with the good folks in England. The only man who could organize the Liberals, if he could, will not; those who would, cannot, for lack of means. This is the fault of nobody in particular, but everybody in general. Last winter we asked for responses to help organize and conduct a Liberal reading-room and free library in this city. We received one letter in answer, and three or four verbal promises of help. We treasure that letter, and hav entertained ideas of framing it. It seems, after all, as though Ingersoll's sarcasm that some folks became Liberals to save pew rent had a grain of truth in it. We know of a well-to-do Liberal down in New Jersey who spends about ten dollars a year for Freethought literature, and fifty dollars a year to support his local church because his wife attends. That is sixty dollars a year for mental recreation for himself and and wife. It always seemed to us that he ought to divide it more equally. However, this is to some extent a free country, and a man has a right to do as he pleases with his own.

Summed up, the situation here may be put down as fair to good. The only fear is that some of the churches will get ahead of us in social works if we are not wide awake. Take an independent church that repudiates the creed of its fellows, that positivly has no hell, and no heaven more ethereal than our Banner of Light friends promis us, no God more unreasonably personal than Herbert Spencer's Unknowable, and that is a tolerably good Infidel institution. Mr. Beecher presides over just such a church.

Of course the great want is organization, but this is not a fatal defect, and will undoubtedly be remedied by time, not only here but across the Atlantic, where Mr. Bradlaugh has already a compact following held together by their love of secular principles and the monstrous injustice perpetrated upon their leader by Parliament. Foote, Ramsey, and Kemp found no lack of sympathizing friends throughout their infamous persecution—friends who not only sympathized by word of mouth, but took up the work and carried it on with trebly accelerated velocity. Considering how recently and how reluctantly the prisons of both England and America hav given up their victims, we think the Freethinkers of both countries hav reasons to be measurably satisfied. Certainly, with all the drawbacks, we hav more ground for hope and encouragement than the Calvinistic churches.

Andrews and Spencer.

This week we print the pith and marrow of Herbert Spencer's contribution to the current number of the Popular Science Monthly. Mr. Spencer's position in the scientific world is well known. He stands as the representativ of Individualism as against the state Socialism represented in this country most vigorously if not authoritativly by the Positivists of the Comte school. Mr. Spencer's doctrin might be stated in the words of the old saying, "Every man for himself, and the devil take the hindmost." The devil in this case is poverty, misery, and all the ills suffered by the incapables of society. The Socialists, whose ire has been raised by these utterances of Mr. Spencer, on the other hand contend that the capable individual should not only take care of himself, but shall be a factor in organized society which shall care for all. The objection to the first or anarchical philosophy is that it is cruel to the unfortunate; to the second, that it legitimatizes Authority, which curtails liberty, and has always been invoked to aid tyrannical governments. Mr. Stephen Pearl Andrews's lecture last Friday night before the Liberal Club was in reply to Mr. Spencer. Mr. Andrews has a sociological philosophy of his own, in which the principles of Universology reconcile the extremes we hav outlined, and while obtaining for humanity all the benefits conferred by having a consensus of the competent, or authoritativ government of the wisest, also guarantee to every individual the widest personal liberty in action and thought. We shall print enough of his lecture to enable the public interested in sociological matters, to judge whether Mr. Spencer's criticisms of the Socialists and land reformers are sound, and can stand the test of scientific dissection. If the great English evolutionist is wrong, Mr. Andrews is the one man in this country to demonstrate it.

Good News.

By a too brief note in the Iron-Clad Age we learn that the new constitution of California puts church property upon the tax list, and that the constitution was adopted by twelve thousand majority, the main contest being over this clause. Also that the state senate has refused to elect a chaplain.

Will some California friend, who is thoroughly conversant with the means by which this victory was won, giv us full particulars? It might help in the contest now going on in Iowa, and certainly will be a splendid example for other states to follow.

A New Book by Col. Kelso.

We hav now in press the "Bible Analyzed," a book of 833 crown octavo pages, by John R. Kelso, and expect to hav it ready for mailing by the 1st of May.

It is just what its name implies, an analysis of the Bible. It is, in fact, the most thorough overhauling and dissection that venerable volume has received since Paine gave his attention to the subject. Mr. Kelso is a clear, logical reasoner, and he states his positions in such a way that all must admit their correctness, and then his conclusions follow as undisput d and indisputable climaxes. In this new book the Old Testament receives a large share of attention, the stories of the creation, the deluge, the exodus, and the alleged miracles being held up to view in a new and novel manner. While reading the proofs of this work, we hav sometimes thought that if Paine's "Age of Reason and Examination of the Prophecies" had never been written, Kelso's "Bible Analyzed" would do as well. Two chapters are devoted to exposing the scientific, chronological, verbal, and other errors of the book; one long chapter deals with the devil, another with the heaven and hell mapped out in the holy writ; the Sabbath question is treated from a Bible standpoint; and the existence of a supreme ruler and the doctrin of a messiah are examined freely.

Mr. Kelso's "Deity Analyzed" and "Real Blas-phemers" hav received high and merited encomiums from the Liberal press and public, but we predict this new book will exceed these two in circulation and favor. The price is put at $3.00, which is little enough for a work of its size. Orders may be sent to us or to Col. J. R. Kelso, Turlock, Cal.

An Opinion of Comstock.

Mr. Anthony Comstock has been testifying before a legislativ investigating committee to the shortcoming of our city police. Reflecting upon his testimony, the Sun says:

"Mr. Comstock, by his apology at the conclusion of the proceedings on that day [Friday, the 11th inst.], showed that he is liable to make false accusations when under provocation, notwithstanding the fact that he is speaking under the solemn obligation of an oath. He first swore to a statement which was intended to convey, and did convey, the idea that during the administration of the late Benjamin K. Phelps as district attorney of this county, that officer and his assistants afforded protection to gamblers and gambling houses. He afterward swore to what was evidently meant to be a retraction of this flagrantly unjust imputation.

"The testimony of a man who acknowledges that he can be provoked into making inaccurate or even exaggerated statements under oath can hardly be scrutinized with too much care."

In plainer words, the Sun considers that Mr. Comstock is liable to tell a lie when it suits his purpose to do so.

So do we.

A Reprint.

So extraordinary has been the demand for THE TRUTH SEEKER of April 5th, containing Col. Ingersoll's lecture at Chicago, that we hav determined to reprint it next week for the benefit of those who wish copies to send to friends. Therefore all who hav unsuccessfully applied for copies of that date will please renew their orders, and they shall be served. Single copies 7 cents; in quantities of ten and upwards, 5 cents each. Send your orders early.

A Letter that Cheers.

SEATTLE, April 1, 1884.

MR. EDITOR: Please find inclosed $25.50 for ten subscribers for THE TRUTH SEEKER, to be sent as directed in private letter.

My work in Seattle is finished for this season, and, I trust, with hopeful results.

I gave my last lecture to a full house, and the fourteenth of this course.

About the League here, and also the Progressiv Lyceum, and my work here in Seattle, Brother Walter Walker, secretary of Lyceum and League, will send you a full report soon.

Yours for truth, DR. J. L. YORK.

TO OUR READERS AND BOOKBUYERS: If you experience any difficulty in obtaining THE TRUTH SEEKER or any of our own or other Freethought works through any dealer, we shall feel greatly obliged if you will order direct from this office. We are fearful that many dealers do not take the pains they should to supply Liberal works—sometimes, even, wrongly reporting them out of print—thereby depriving the inquiring public of heterodox books, and preventing us from making needed sales.

Editorial Notes.

MR. BRADLAUGH'S experience with talented religious liars has been varied and extensiv. He is obliged, he says, to lose a great deal too much time in correcting falsehoods. Some of these are most absurd, some are monstrous. This is one month's experience only: A country hotel keeper positivly stated that he heard Mr. Bradlaugh, watch in hand, defy God. This hotel keeper has fully retracted and apologized and agreed to framo a printed copy of his apology in his own bar. This cost altogether six letters. A Chester clergyman announced that in a Sunday-school established by Mr. Bradlaugh at the Hall of Science, a child was brought forward of the platform to publicly repudiate and denounce his mother's Bible and his mother's God. This clergyman has apologized, and given up the name and address of the London clergyman who invented the story. This required in all five letters. The Rev. Geo. Kenyon, at Caledonian Road, Wesleyan Chapel, stated that Captain Shaw, of Weymouth, having been compelled to put into Great Yarmouth by stress of weather, "saw large placards announcing that C. Bradlaugh, M.P. for Northampton," was lecturing on religion. That Captain Shaw attended, and at the close opposed with prayer, Mr. Bradlaugh running away and leaving the meeting entirely in his hands. Of course there is not a solitary word of truth in this from beginning to end; but although it has been contradicted, no apology had been received up to latest advices. A resident of Crewe, as an instance of Mr. Bradlaugh's unreliability, alleged in public "that over twenty years ago he heard Mr. Bradlaugh lecture on behalf or the United Kingdom Alliance objects at the Temperance Hall, Grosvenor street, Manchester, as a paid advocate, and that very shortly afterwards Mr. Bradlangh delivered a lecture on the opposit side at Bolton, having been retained to do so." The resident of Crewe who was guilty of this unmitigated falsehood has offered no apology, although he has been compelled to admit that he had never heard Mr. Bradlaugh, as alleged. Mr. Moody, the revivalist, allowed it to be pretended in the Christian Globe, with minute details, that he had just converted one of Mr. Bradlaugh's supporters, the chairman of the Cromwell Club. Though specifically contradicted, neither Mr. Moody nor the Christian Globe has had the decency to retract this pure invention. In a book published by Messrs. Partridge & Co., written by Miss Barlee, there was an abominable libel founded on information furnished by a city missionary named Edgar Osborne. Messrs. Partridge, who are gentlemen, withdrew the libel on its being brought to their notice, and Edgar Osborne asks Mr. Bradlaugh not to put him to expense, as he has eight children. This business took in all fully twenty letters. He has had in addition to write about a score of contradictions of falsehoods as to the parliamentary contest, and of at least a dozen mistatements at to votes and speeches on Ireland. Mr Bradlaugh complains of the extra labor the contradiction of these absurd fictions entails upon him, for even good friends feel aggrieved if he passes them by in silence, and says that although he is at the trouble to squelch them in one place he finds the same falsehood repeated in another town and by another liar as lively as ever. He thinks of putting in his paper a "Liars' Contradiction Department," with an additional letter-writer for that work alone.

OF all the arrogant beggars ever heard of, the Catholics of Iowa must be awarded the palm. At a meeting called to oppose the bill now pending in the legislature of that state to tax private and sectarian school property and pastoral residences, the "Right Rev. Bishop" Hennessy said: "That our civilization is essentially Christian, and is almost universally conceded to be such by law-making bodies, is evidenced by the fact that the daily sessions of Congress and of state legislatures are usually opened with prayer by Christian clergymen; and a still more powerful proof of its Christian character is found in the circumstance that our statute laws as a body are based upon the principles of justice first enunciated by the savior, and since taught and maintained by the Christian church. The clergyman was an integral part of Christianity—he could not be disassociated from it; and to tax the residence in which he lived would be equivalent to taxing the church itself. It would yet come to this if the efforts to tax pastoral residence were not now promptly met and defeated. The men who advocated such taxation were not friendly to Christianity, or to the civilization which is its outgrowth, and if they were successful in their present endeavor they would only be emboldened to continue till the taxation of religious schools, charitable institutions, and church edifices was the rule instead of the exception. The bill was a menace to Christianity, and the best interests of society and of the state required that it should not become a law." When some respectable town allows itself to be run by the paupers in its workhouse will be the proper time to consider statements of this character, which would hav more weight if possessed of a particle of truth.

MR. LOVING, near Dennison, Texas, owed his neighbor, Mr. Wood, some corn. Mr. Loving was piously raised, but Mr. Wood was not, and therefore saw no impropriety in calling for the corn upon Sunday. But Mr. Loving could not countenance the asking for the payment of an honest debt upon the Sabbath, though Mr. Wood may hav been hungry, and feeding the hungry on the Lord's day was recommended by the Lord himself; he therefore struck Mr. Wood on the head with a hard-wood club. Mr. Wood went home, announcing his intention of calling on some more convenient occasion for the corn. He doubtless would hav done so, but unfortunately he died soon after he reached his home, and cannot now well keep his appointment. Mr. Loving had to giv bonds to appear before the grand jury in session at Dennison. This, says the paper from which we condense this account, is all there is of the story up to date, but it conveys a very useful lesson to all who are willing to profit by it. In the first place, we should never hav any business transactions on Sunday with men who hav been too piously raised. This is the lesson which sinners should learn from the Dennison tragedy. Those who are raised to regard Sunday as altogether inviolable should learn to make exceptions to the rule that no work should be done on the Sabbath day, but that such deviations from the rule should not take the shape of hitting a Sabbath desecrator on the head with a stick of hard wood. On these points, the average Sunday-school book should be carefully revised, in the interest of all concerned.

THE Christian Advocate has come to the conclusion that the stories of sudden deaths in the commission of "wicked acts" like blasphemy are not always reliable, and that the hasty decease is not a "visitaion of God." Is reasons thus:

(1) No man can prove that God did not then and there affect this man with the disease. (2) But Abner Kneeland, Ingersoll, and hosts of other blasphemers, hav said in most conspicuous places similar things. D. M. Bennett spent many years concocting and uttering elaborate abuse of God and Christ. (3) Many more hav said and done similar things, and hav not been attacked. (4) Many good men hav been similarly attacked in the pulpit, in prayer, and in giving testimony for Christ.

The conclusion, therefore, is that "in view of the great number of cases of blasphemy where nothing sudden or remarkable follows it," it cannot be certain whether any judgments are sent by the offended deity. Dr. Buckley is evidently aided in arriving at this point by the fact that more ministers are stricken down while testifying for Christ than blasphemers while denying him. This would indicate that ministers are displeasing to God, and as such a thought can by no means be harbored—as it would drive all the preachers out of the business—Mr. Buckley is willing to admit that "judgments" are rare occurrences.

THE Rev. N. M. Long, of Memphis, Tenn., to whom one of our correspondents refers, is the same that recently preached too broad sermons in his Presbyterian pulpit and was obliged to found an independent church of his own in consequence. Six weeks ago the Memphis city council closed up all the places of business on Sundays. Boats at the levees were forbidden to unload or load, and no one but the preachers were allowed to earn money on the "Sabbath." During that time several lectures to large audiences were given on the subject, and every preacher in the city discoursed upon it. The Rev. N. M. Long created a sensation by declaring the Sunday laws a blot on the statute books, and by taking the Freethought position that government had no right under the Constitution to force any man to observe Sunday in any manner whatever, having no more control over men then than on week-days. Ten thousand copies of the sermon in pamphlet form were distributed. Judge Craft took the pulpit in the Cumberland Presbyterian church against the young minister, and the Methodist ministers held a meeting and denounced Mr. Long. The city council has passed a resolution allowing the barbers to keep open till 10 A.M., and it is probable that when the war of puritanical fanaticism shall hav passed by other doors than those of the tonsorial establishments will be found openly inviting trade.

A RESPECTED relativ of the editor of THE TRUTH SEEKER living down in Aroostook county, Maine, writes us that the "sky-pilots," as he quaintly styles the preachers of that vicinity, hav been stirred into unwonted activity by the circulation among the people of the kind of religious literature which emanates from this office. This literature, he informs us, "hurts bad." It has brought the preachers from several churches into his district school-house, where they hav held revivals with such success that one individual, not remarkable for intellectual attainments, has become about half converted. The respected relativ also reports that he has had discussions with some of the "mummies," and in no instance hav they appeared desirous to reopen the debate. They "pile it on to the Infidels and unbelievers" at their meetings in his absence, but he has observed that when he attends their "circus" they are as civil as grown people at church. Our relativ has trod Southern soil, and has borne a musket in defense of the Union. We hav confidence in his ability, with the blessing of good health, to uphold the banner of Freethought in the Aroostook.

MRS. ANNA OTTENDORFER has added to the noble list of Liberal charities. Her death, which occurred week before last, is not the first revelation of her broad-minded generosity, as she has always been prominent through unostentatious gifts in aiding worthy charities. The probating of her will reveals munificent donations, as follows: $25,000 to the Isabella Heimath at Long Island City; $10,000 to the United Relief Works of the Society for Ethical Culture of New York; and $10,000 to Das Nationale Deutsch-Americanische Lehrer Seminar of Milwaukee; $10,000 to the Deutscher Frauenvercin zur Unterstutzung Hilfsbeddurftiger Wittwen, Waisen, und Kranken of New York; $10,000 to the German Hospital and Dispensary; $5,000 to the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children, and $5,000 to the German Hospital in Newark.

THE Annual African Methodist Episcopal conference was held this year in Newark. It was composed of colored ministers. Some of the dusky brethren were distinguished by a plainness of speech which may well be emulated by their more eminent and hypocritical white confreres. There was "a heap o' trubble on de ole man's mind" who presided, which he eased in this way: "The trouble is to raise funds. Preachers are much worse to get money from than stewards or trustees. They are the meanest men in the world when it comes to money matters. We want more trust in God and more brains. A man who enters the A. M. E. ministry with littttle in his heart and less in his head isn't going to get along." After this the brethren shelled out, and the bishop was placated.

LAST Sunday was the anniversary of the alleged resurrection of Christ. It is the custom in this city for people to put on new clothes on Easter Sunday and to appear in more gorgeous apparel than usual. This seems inappropriate. Since clothes are the "badge of lost innocence," they are hardly a thing to boast of under any circumstances. But on the anniversary of the resurrection of the person who redeemed mankind from the consequences of that lost innocence, it is particularly distressing to see the emblem of sin flaunted so openly. Considering the sacrifice by which good Christians obtained this "badge," they appear unbecomingly proud of it.

IT is the opinion of George Bancroft, who has been called the Father of American History, that "our great united commonwealth is the child of Christianity." It will be observed that this opinion differs materially from that of Jefferson, Franklin, Washington, and Paine, who were themselvs in fact the parents of the commonwealth. It is an unwise child that don't know its own father. Yet this nation has for more than one hundred years refused to recognize the paternity which the eminent historian claims for it. It would be interesting to hear the argument by which Mr. Bancroft supports his remarkable assertion.

MAJOR MOORE, the head of the American Salvation Army, was in jail last Saturday charged with grand larceny to the amount of $652.50. He finds it difficult, says the Sun, "to apply to the administration of that body here the principles adopted with such effect by Gen. Booth in London." Is this a covert way of saying that in England Gen. Booth steals with impunity?

"MANY a seeming accident," says the Christian Observer, "illustrates Cowper's lines:

> "God moves in a mysterious way
> His wonders to perform."

We should say so, and would point to the recent floods in Ohio as a conspicuous illustration of that fact.

Letters from Friends.

HUNTSVILLE, ALA., March 20, 1884.

MR. EDITOR: It seems as if the clergy, or at least one out of the 75,000 preachers is coming to his senses, for I read in the Daily American, Nashville, Tenn.: "Rev. N. M. Long's sermon in opposition to the enforcement of the Sunday law has created a profound sensation among all classes. Ten thousand copies of the sermon hav been ordered printed for a general distribution." Yours for liberty and for one's own thinking, HENRI PALING.

WARRENSBURG, Mo., March 17, 1884.

MR. EDITOR: I send you two papers containing the lecture delivered by Talmage in St. Joseph and Kansas City. It is certainly encouraging to Freethinkers to see how utterly weak and illogical is the defense made for Christianity by its ablest exponents, such as Black, Fisher, and others. Their arguments are splendid campaign documents for Liberalism; and the sincere and earnest searcher after the light and truth cannot be disappointed who reads them.

Yours, etc., FERD. CARROLL.

WALLA WALLA, W. T., March 30, 284.

MR. EDITOR: THE TRUTH SEEKER for a long time has been a welcome visitor to our home, especially to father, but gradually it won its way to all of us, as truth always will win its way into the hearts of young or old who are willing to receive it. Now it is looked for and enjoyed by every member of the family, which, of course, enhances its value to our parents.

We think the Children's Corner and the serial story valuable additions to your paper, as many a fact is communicated and impressed upon the youthful mind through the agency of an interesting story, which might be passed by if told in another and less attractiv way. So I say success to the Children's Corner. With sincerest wishes for the continued prosperity of THE TRUTH SEEKER, CHARLOTTE WHITE.

FAIRVIEW, ALA., April 5, 1884.

MR. EDITOR: Inclosed please find money order for five dollars. I see by the tab on my Bible, THE TRUTH SEEKER, that it is high time it was renewed, so please make my tab read 85 instead of 84, which calls for three dollars out of the five; and please send me "Crimes of Preachers," by M. E. Billings, 25 cents; the TRUTH SEEKER ANNUAL, 25 cents; "Apples of Gold," by Miss Susan Wixon, $1.25; "Two Little Red Mittens," by Jennie Butler Browne, 10 cents. Now the other 15 cents you can use to help pay postage or do as you choose with it. It is a fine place this. Everybody here pulls a great long face one day in seven, but six out of seven the devil takes the pot every time. But I am going to try and introduce THE TRUTH SEEKER if it takes the hair, although they did not pull much of any hair out in Atalla, but those long-coated chaps would make up mighty ugly faces at me sometimes, just as much as to say they had an empty stomach, but I am not much on taking hints unless they kick me at the same time. Well, I must close by wishing every success, and a hearty good-bye for the present. W. L. NELSON.

DEERSVILLE, OHIO, March 26, 1884.

MR. EDITOR: Inclosed please find $2 to place to my credit for the good old TRUTH SEEKER that the Christians so much hate. Please accept my thanks for continuing my paper after the time paid expired. I hav been waiting for other names, but as yet get none. Floods being in order, people hav to make up what God has destroyed in his wrath. Some of the people on the Ohio river think God has not kept his word, in saying he would not flood the earth again. But this is not the first time he has changed his mind (as Abe Patterson says). Now if God did really divide the Red Sea, and let those thieves and cutthroats pass over dry-shod, he might hav been kind enought to hav pied the waters in these rivers five or ten miles high in their channels, and not let it overflow the land and towns, and thereby have shown that his "tender mercies are over all his works." But our Christians here says he did it for some wise purpose. But, indeed, I can't see the wisdom. Perhaps I am too blind to see it. But I do wonder if he did make the Red Sea part. Can you tell us? And again please let us know whether the whale swallowed Jonah, or Jonah the whale? A. AULD.

CORVALLIS, OR., April 3, 1884.

MR. EDITOR: I see by the report in THE TRUTH SEEKER of Feb. 15th that there is a small amount needed in completing the great, grand, and noble work that will bear testimony of the love we bore for our hero and martyr, D. M Bennett. This work that has been done by the intellectual achievements of the lightning age will fill a two-fold purpose—yea, more, a standing monument, a living witness engraved on tablets of stone, written with pen of steel, resting in silence over the remains of one we loved and whose memory we cherish. Here deluded minds in silence will read and contemplate, communing with the dead, and here the poor, narrow-minded, bigoted fanatic, with all the hatred and animosity that was ever capable of having an existence in the minds of what would wish to be called human, be obliged to view the sentinel standing guard over the remains of one they persecuted with envy, malice, and brute force. And though he is dead his works will liv. No stake or fagot can hush the mighty work begun.

I would suggest that we should raise the means to hav the lithograph of the monument in THE TRUTH SEEKER, as many, no doubt, if not all, would like to see the picture. We should also hav it electrotyped, so it could be used at any future time. I suppose the cost would not fall short of forty dollars for taking four different views.

I send fifty cents toward the monument and fifty cents toward having the picture in the paper. The paper is now cheap, and it is for the people. Let each and everyone throw in their mite. B. F. WARDWELL.

RIVERSIDE, MASS., March 25, 1884.

MR. EDITOR: I received the five copies of the "Crimes of Preachers" all right. They hav been read by thirty persons, and are opening the eyes of the people. You need not be surprised if you receive my check for twenty-five dollars' worth one of these days to circulate in Turner's Falls and Northfield if Dwight L. Moody or any of those sky pilots hav more to say of Lake Pleasant. NATHANIEL HOLMES.

ALLIANCE, O., March 16, 1884.

MR. EDITOR: I notice the tab on the wrapper of my paper tells me the time has expired for which I hav paid, and I therefore inclose another year's subscription, and 25 cents for the TRUTH SEEKER ANNUAL.

Freethought is gaining slowly in our place. We hav a few professed Liberals who are so narrow-minded that they cater to church method and names, thinking to get the orthodox world to come in by so doing, while at the same time they are really going back to old-fogyism as fast as possible: 'Tis useless to try to blow hot and cold both at one time. If we would save Freethought for future usefulness we must keep it clear from all forms of Christianity. I am pleased with the manner in which Mrs. Severance shows up Moses Hull's catering in your issue of March 8th. I am utterly astonished at Hull's course, and think his day of usefulness to our cause is almost if not quite ended. I congratulate you on your success in making THE TRUTH SEEKER so interesting and instructiv. It has lost none of its former ring since you are conducting it. I am pleased very much with the Children's Corner, and hope its editor will not despair in well-doing

Respectfully, CARRIE E. WEIR.

CARROLLTON, ILL., March 20, 1884.

MR. EDITOR: I believe, now that the Bennett monument is completed, it is a good time to commence the Bennett Hall and Home of THE TRUTH SEEKER. Mr. Bennett has friends enough to build a good hall at fifty cents a share, and at that rate I will take forty shares; and if necessary I will double that. I hav very little money to spare, but my whole soul is in the cause, and I will do all I can consistently. I feel anxious to keep the name of Bennett before the world. I hav no doubt that there are plenty of friends who will be both able and willing to giv ten times as much as I can I am nothing but a poor western clodhopper, who started and has grown up with the state of Illinois. I am now gettting well up toward eighty, but I hope yet, if I don't see it, at least to hear of a good hall in the city of New York dedicated to that noble friend of humanity and liberator of humanity from the shackles of mental slavery of kingcraft. Now is the time to strike, when Mr. Bennett is fresh in our minds. But still such men as Mr. Bennett can never be forgotten. I hav no doubt that a good hall can be built in a very short time, if you only start the ball rolling. It seems that five years ago he had 200,000 warm hearts that came to his relief, and now I hav no doubt he has double that number. While Hayes refused to notice 200,000 at that time, he would now be glad to notice 100, for I think that is about the extent of his friends. Nobody seems to know or care where he is. No one seems to hav any use for him, not even the church. This inhumanity to man has even disgusted his best friends.

But I started this letter to ask you to send me the FREETHINKER'S ALMANAC. WM. BLACK.

CLEVELAND, OHIO, March 16, 284.

MR. EDITOR: If it would not be asking too much I would like to say a few words to your readers through your paper.

I hav been reading Elliott Preston's "Philosophy on the Half-Shell," and commend him for the stand he has taken in regard to vivisection, and I hope he may continue the same good cause. You may be surprised when I say I am ignorant of the subject, for I never heard of it until I saw it in THE TRUTH SEEKER. I hav seen and read of a great many inhuman monsters, but I never thought that anyone could be so inhuman as to torture a dumb brute under the plea of scientific investigation, for the assumed purpose of gaining knowledge to improve our fellow-men. I don't see how they are going to improve our condition any by torturing the dumb brute, and I would say to the vivisector that if he can't further the cause of humanity in any other way he had better stop altogether. It hardly seems possible to think that anyone possessing a mind capable of understanding could stoop to torture a poor dumb brute. Why, only think: here is a man (I don't know whether I ought to say man or not; brute would be more appropriate) who, if he mashes a finger or foot will cry out in pain, who will shrink at the bare mention of being put to the torture, but will take a poor dumb brute and put him through all manner of torment to gain a little knowledge that will do him no good, and will benefit no one else. There should be a law passed that would put a stop to it. All honor to Elliott Preston for lifting his voice in the interest of the dumb beast, and may he continue to cry "Stop!" to that inhuman work which the vivisector is engaged in.

I should like to say something about the Salvation Army and its work before I close. I attended their meeting last Sunday night, and they made quite an impression on me; but they seem to make a greater impression on the "bums," however, than they made on me, judging from the number that joined them. The army is composed of some of the hardest-looking seeds I ever saw, and the performance they got through is a caution to sinners. It makes the cold chills run down my back, or maybe I should say hot chills, for they preached hell fire and damnation until I almost imagined I saw the flames of hell ascending in the room. The performance on the tambourines was a caution, no mistake. The captain said they had come to Cleveland to stay, and were going to stay until every sinner was captured, or they would shake Cleveland to its very center. So if you should fail to hear from any of us poor sinners here you may know we hav been made prisoners by the Salvation Army. I hav been trying to find out if there is any common sense in the Army all this week, but I can find none at all. There are about ten I might possibly get along with in heaven, but if the balance of that Army go to heaven, I want to sell out my mansion in the sky. Please print a notice on pasteboard, "For Sale," and hang it in the window. Easy terms and long payments The Army is running in opposition to the variety shows here, but of the two the latter draw the most select audiences, and giv a much better entertainment. DENNIS A. LOSSING.

MIDDLEBURY, IND., March 7, 1884.

MR. EDITOR: Inclosed please find $3.50 for THE TRUTH SEEKER, "Crimes of Preachers," and the TRUTH SEEKER ANNUAL. I hav taken your paper as long as it has been in existence, and will continue to take it as long as I liv. But I am getting old, and as this may be the last you will hear from me, I take this opportunity to giv you a scrap of my history. I took on the changeable garb of man in the year 1806. I was nursed, rocked, stewed, and steeped in the corrupt yet dying cradle of superstition, bigotry, priestcraft, and intolerance for the first twenty-three years of my life. Then the sun began to shine. The vapors commenced to scatter. Cloud after cloud passed away. Reason begins to assert its supremacy. The scene changes. But just as the opium-eater who resolves to turn over a new leaf, atom after atom was my being changed. I finally found myself standing in the light, awakened from the trance which now holds in its viperous stupor millions of human beings. I hav been branded hundreds of times as a vile skeptic, Atheist, and Infidel. I hav been slandered and abused by the priesthood, and would hav been burnt at the stake a thousand times if they had only had the power. And why all this? Simply because I do not believe that a certain, little, insignificant, cranky, ignorant, illegitimate Jew controls the mighty universe. But they are not so bad as they used to be. I hav seen a great change. Light and knowledge are afloat; mankind are beginning not only to think but to reason. The movement and progression of science are as irresistible as the motion of atoms or the revolving of spheres. To stop progression and Freethought would be to exterminate the human race. To hold it stationary is impossible. To let it go on, as it must, is to not only slaughter untruth, but to bury it so deep that even its bones shall never again come to the light of the world. The mystic veil of superstition is wearing threadbare in the glaring sunshine of the nineteenth century. All mankind are tending toward that perfection which all nature has been reaching for since the first vegetable cell existed. I hope that the noble cause of truth may go on uninterrupted, with THE TRUTH SEEKER at its head, until the earth becomes old with age, and is incapable of the lowest forms of life.

ISAAC IVINS.

OKETO, KAN., March 17, 1884.

MR. EDITOR: I think the tracts you sent me are to the point; they speak my views exactly. I am the only Freethinker in this community, and therefore I hav a hard road to travel. The Christians are all picking at me, but I hope I am enough for them. I hav good backing in THE TRUTH SEEKER and other publications from your office.

I was amused, a few nights ago, on a visit to one of my neighbors, a Bible Christian. In the course of the evening my Christian friend got his children to speak their Sunday-school pieces. This was done to see what I would do. They all spoke God pieces to be sure. I will copy one piece that was spoken. Here it is:

"God made man, and man made money;
God made bees, and bees made honey;
God made Satan, and Satan made sin;
God made a hole to put Satan in."

This was the last piece spoken. They asked me if these were not nice. "Certainly," I said, "they are;" but I thought differently. This started my friend to preaching to me. I listened to him and said nothing to him in his own house nor before his children, till his wife told one of his little girls to ask me to speak a piece. I begged to be excused, but no excuse would be accepted. So when I saw I had to speak, I told them I would speak the piece that Ella spoke, but I would speak it in my way. Here it is:

"Nature made man, and man made money;
Nature made bees, and bees made honey;
Man is the devil, and the devil is sin;
And THE TRUTH SEEKER is digging a hole to put the devil in."

This put a damper on the evening's enjoyment; so I left. The next morning I met my neighbor. He says, "Good morning, truth seeker" (this is the name my neighbors hav given me). I said, "How do you do?" Says he, "I am sorry you spoke that piece last night." "Why," says I. "Because one of my children asked me this morning if THE TRUTH SEEKER was another god!" I asked him what he told the child. He said it was Mr. Bigham's God. "Well, then," said I, "of the two gods mine is the best, and besides, I hope the piece I spoke last night will so work on your mind that you will become a subscriber to THE TRUTH SEEKER, and your eyes will be opened and you will then see how the preachers hav kept you in the dark."

My love and good wishes to all the Freethinkers in the land.

JAMES BIGHAM.

ALEXANDRIA STATION, March 18, 1884.

MR. EDITOR: I hav traveled a great deal the last nine years, and THE TRUTH SEEKER has followed me everywhere. I was all through California in 1875. At that time THE TRUTH SEEKER was to be found only at one place in San Francisco, on Second street. I had a lot with me and left a few copies at Los Angeles, at Santa Barbara, Lagraciosa, San Luis Obispo, and all along the coast. At Milwaukee also I only found it in one place. Now I see it is all over, and I rejoice in the thought that I may hav co-operated a little in its success, and I intend to keep on helping all I can, but at present I am in a dry field. Giv me an intelligent man or woman unfettered just enough to read THE TRUTH SEEKER and I guarantee salvation. There is intelligence enough here, but the other condition is lacking, yet I find a few brave enough to dare open their eyes and examin, and those I hav got pretty well enlightened. I can never cease thanking all the Liberal papers, particularly the king of reform, THE TRUTH SEEKER, for the great improvement I see going on all around from day to day.

Before I close I must relate a little anecdote. My wife is French and does not speak very good English, though she understands it well. When I came here a year ago she remained at Mooers, N. Y., about eight months. The minister, who had not dared tackle me during the two years I lived there, called on my wife with some of the neighbors to present him. He talked religion to her an hour or two and tried to get her to join him in a prayer, but she told him she never prayed and would hav no praying done in the house. In the course of his pious conversation he spoke of the sweet by and by where strife and troubles are no more. He also alluded to the other place and its head manager, Reverend Lucifer. Mrs. Laperche asked him who created the devil. "God, of course," was the reply. "And what did he make him for?" was the next question. "Oh," says his reverence, "he was once an angel in heaven, and he, or they (as there was several of them), rebelled against God, and he then made hades and precipitated them therein." "Oh," says Mrs. Laperche, "there was once a row in heaven! What guarantee hav you that such a thing will not recur? Hav they abolished the sale of liquor there since? Let me go back into the earth. I am sure there will be no row there!" The man of God retired thanking the Lord that she had not more English, as his position might hav been critical in the presence of two or three of his docile sisters.

Yours ever and forever, I hope, in the good work of U. M. L.,
CHARLES LAPE HE.

GRAND RAPIDS, MICH., March 16, 1884.

MR. EDITOR: Find cash inclosed for one dozen of Remsburg's "False Claims," and one copy of the TRUTH SEEKER ANNUAL. I am happy to inform you that the good work is going on here bravely. We are going to build a $30,000 Liberal church in this city this summer. In spite of revivals, salvation parades, and all, the Liberals are gaining ground every day. O. H. RICHMOND.

LANARK, ARK., March 31, 1884.

MR. EDITOR: Inclosed you will find $1.25, for which you will please continue THE TRUTH SEEKER. For the 25 cents please send me the TRUTH SEEKER ANNUAL. I must hav the ANNUAL. I intend to make it do missionary work, for at last I hav got several to read THE TRUTH SEEKER. In a short time I will remit in full. I don't want you to stop the paper. I like it better than any paper I ever read, and I am now sixty-two years old. I hav them all bound, making seventeen volumes.

T. H. MONTGOMERY.

VERONA, PA., March 18, 1884.

MR. EDITOR: We are happy to see in this week's TRUTH SEEKER the noble stand you take in defying the board of trustees with respect to our Bennett monument and inscriptions. You hav done the right thing, and we hope every reader of Mr. Bennett's noble paper, THE TRUTH SEEKER, will try and contribute some little toward defraying the debt that is left, and we hope those who hav not sent anything will do so at once, and let the world see that Infidels are prompt to pay their just debts. Yours truly, WM. FRAY.

PROVIDENCE, R. I., April 7, 1884.

MR. EDITOR: I hav read Mr. Prichard's letter in THE TRUTH SEEKER of April 5th, and it appears to me that there is a good opening for Liberals, and they should avail themselvs of this opportunity. It seems rather discouraging for one to start alone, and as there may be others like myself, who are somewhat timid about starting alone, I would suggest that a party be formed and we set forth at an early date.

If this suggestion meets the approbation of any I would be pleased to hear from them through the columns of THE TRUTH SEEKER, or by private letters. S. L. DANA.

FABIUS, N. Y., April 7, 1884.

MR. EDITOR: Please find inclosed stamps for two TRUTH SEEKER ANNUALS. We are more than delighted with the Children's Corner, and feel like sending many thanks to that good old man, J. Hacker, for first urging the introduction of such a department. Many thanks to the editor for the publication. Love and thanks to Susan H. Wixon for editing it.

We also thank you for the department in your paper devoted to "Letters from Friends." One seems to meet their personal friends there. It is so social like, just as good as a class-meeting. In fact, we are thankful for THE TRUTH SEEKER from the first page to the last page. HELEN M. S. BILLINGS.

EL MONTE, CAL., March 30, 1884.

MR. EDITOR: Inclosed find $2 35, for which please send me the following list of your eye-opening and mind-convincing Liberal gospel tracts: TRUTH SEEKER ALMANAC, "Crimes of Preachers," "False Claims," "Crimes and Cruelties of Christianity," "Materialism and Crime," "Scientific Materialism," "Christianity and Materialism," and "John's Way." I want to scatter them among the flock. May be the mental food dealt out to them by the above shepherds of freedom will satisfy their spiritual appetites, when they know what kind of sheep in wolves' clothing their bell-wethers are. I hav been a reader of your paper for nine years.

Yours for liberty, J. E. CLARKE.

STERLING, ILL., March 21, 1884.

MR. EDITOR: I hav been a reader of your paper but a short time, but what I hav seen of it I like very much. In fact, such works as Col. Ingersoll's, Elliott Preston's, and those of many other writers, are worthy of perusal, and your paper abounds with their best.

If I could say anything new in regard to the Bible, I would with pleasure, but wiser heads should come first in all things, especially in great things. I find it necessary to remove from Rock Falls to New Windsor, Ill., and consequently would like to hav my paper forwarded to New Windsor. There are many Liberal men in that town, and they are the leading citizens. I never saw half so many dishonest Liberals as I hav Christian men. I would take a Liberal's word in preference to a Christian's every time where dollars and cents are concerned. My creed is do to others as you would hav them do to you, do as near right as you know how, and if there is such a thing as a God he will reward accordingly, or I do not want to associate with him. If I do right, yet do not believe the Bible, and God should send me to hell, I would willingly go to avoid the fiend or monster, and keep such company as is fit for a gentleman.

C. ENDERTON.

EAGLE CREEK, OR., March 20, 284.

MR. EDITOR: I am sorry I hav to inform you of the death of our old friend and neighbor, Philip Foster, one of the oldest pioneers of Oregon. He died March 17th. He was born in the state of Maine, Jan. 29, 1805. We celebrated the day with toasts and a good supper. He said a few words in praise of the author-hero that brought the tear to my eye. He was also a great admirer of D. M. Bennett, and had taken THE TRUTH SEEKER from the very first number. There was a large attendance at the funeral, but for the want of a York or an Ingersoll little or nothing was said at the grave.

I will inclose in this three dollars to pay for the paper.

Yours fraternally, HENRY MCELSANDER.

LAKE CITY, PA., March 14, 1884.

MR. EDITOR: Inclosed please find $1, for which send me five copies of Paine's "Age of Reason." I want them for missionary work. I find them, with Remsburg's speech, the best missionary works I can get. I hav nine, all out at the present time. I can get people to read Paine's "Age of Reason," when they find out he believed in a God, that will not read anything else. And when that is once read the mind of almost any man is pretty sure to keep marching on.

I see that good, pure man, Elliott Preston, still livs and works in behalf of the poor dumb creatures of creation. I think the murderer that strikes his victim dead at a single blow a gentleman by the side of the vivisector or any man that will uphold him. If all people were like me, vivisection would come to an end within twenty-four hours. How anyone can believe in a personal God after reading of all the horrors of vivisection is more than I can tell. A God that would not strike the criminal dead would be worse than ten thousand devils boiled into one. The man or woman that will inflict needless pain has all the contempt I am capable of bestowing upon them. I only wish they could see themselvs as good, kind people see them.

Well now, dear Eugene, with best regards for yourself and THE TRUTH SEEKER family, I am,

Kindly yours, J. K. TOMPKINS.

PITTSBURGH, March 17, 1884.

MR EDITOR: Find inclosed $1.25, for which send me a copy of your almanac. The remainder you may add to the monument fund, with a hope that the trifling sum needed will soon be raised. I only contribute to a something that will stand for years with the glorious and brilliant truths engraved thereon, serving as an index to point out the pure light of truth, which I hope will shine out brighter and brighter until all people shall be enlightened and lifted out of the mire of superstition and ignorance, and be able to make themselvs free and independent beings, governed by no creed or orthodox religion, which by its cloak of hypocrisy is only a blinding street leading them further and further away from the lights of truth contained in all nature. I hope for the rapid advancement of Freethought and truth, and I feel proud to be able to say that the Liberal element of this city hav not been sleeping these past few years; they are growing stronger in numbers and power. And I hope the time is not far distant when I shall see them meet in an elegant hall of their own, dedicated to the true and noble cause they advocate.

I would feel pleased to see a more extended circulation of your valuable paper, which is a power in itself to enlighten the masses who are groping after truth under the dark shadow of the church. Every true Liberal should see that their paper is read by one or more of their friends. It will work itself into every household, and thus secure thousands of supporters to this only true and good cause. With my best wishes for your continual success, H. H. TIMBY.

FORT SULLY, D. T., March 11, 1884.

MR. EDITOR: I am rather late with my order to renew, but I'll get there at the eleventh hour, anyway. Please find inclosed $5, $3 of which apply to my subscription; 50 cents for trial subscriber; 25 cents for TRUTH SEEKER ANNUAL; 25 cents for "Godly Women of the Bible;" and 50 cents for Paine's "Age of Reason." For nearly three years THE TRUTH SEEKER has been a source of pleasure to me, and, from the appearance of things, is doing good work wherever found by any sensible man. I hav struck a corner at last where your valuable paper finds goods soil, and you may reap at some future time from the good seed planted in your columns. Sully is located on the eastern bank of the Missouri. Company 4 of the 11th U. S. Infantry are stationed here, and, of course, couldn't get along without a chaplain; but if you could see the enthusiasm and interest taken in preaching you would change your mind immediately. I hav searched the post library through, but can't find much Liberal reading in it. I am at a loss to know what good is derived from preaching to a soldier; far better the money should be appropriated toward better pay or more rations. I am not wearing the blue myself; at times I wear government socks. I am, therefore, disinterested as far as pay is concerned; it is anything but fair for a man (a soldier), some with families, to work for thirteen dollars per month, come to the scratch whether or no, obey orders, no matter of what nature; while, on the other hand, a post chaplain ranges in salary with a captain; and what is he doing? Doing nothing, except talk about two hours a week on a subject that hardly anybody cares about. I would like to see some of our leading Liberals take a turn in Dakota this coming season, and see who is in this neck of the woods. My only trouble in the Liberal cause is a lack of proper command of the English language, that I might more readily handle the arguments so often brought against me. Most of my countrymen here are of the same opinion, and it matters not whether German or English,

"Es ist kein faden so fein gesponnen Er kommt doch endlichan die sonnen," truth will prevail.

Your for universal mental liberty, FRED GARING.

OPEN LETTER TO MARY V. CARPENTER.

SNOWVILLE, VA., April 6, 284.

FRIEND MARY: If life were as much of a tragedy as thee seems to think it to be, few would cling to it as earnestly as they now do. The very fact that we prize and value life shows that it is enjoyed and loved. I do not deny that there is sickness, sorrow, sin, and crime; floods, cyclones, wars, shipwrecks, and all manner of disasters; but, taking the race as a whole, these are only as mere spots upon the surface of the sun. I am talking about what is. I do not attempt to sophistically deny that men suffer. It is only too self-evident. But I claim that nine-tenths, if not ninety-nine-one-hundredths, of human life is spent in comfort and comparativ happiness. Will thee deny that thee has nine hours of peace and pleasure where thee has one of trouble and unhappiness, or nine hours of health where thee has one of sickness? Look around upon thy home neighbors—can thee not find nine who are joyful, happy, hopeful, and contented where there is one who is the reverse? If thee cannot, I can.

Only a few days ago a man was telling me that he believed that very few were satisfied with their lot as married people, and that most of the married ones were disappointed, discontented, and unhappy, and would gladly unmarry and try again. I said, "Well, we will run over the town mentally and see." We took them house by house, and could not place a finger on one couple that we really thought would care to unmarry if they could, and I am positiv not one in ten would be as happy with another wife as they would be with their own—especially those who hav lived together for years and grown accustomed to each other's idiosyncrasies. No doubt thee has read in the old school-books of the prayer made to Jupiter that the people might bring all their afflictions and cast them into a pile and then each one exchange his for that of some other man. And then when they had tried their new afflictions a day or two they all desired to take back the old one again, and how rejoiced they were to be back again into the same old ruts. It is just so with us now. We are continually making our lamentations over the sorrows and misfortunes of our own race, and forgetting the joys and blisses that are so abundant the compensations that are so plentiful. I know when I hav had a severe attack of toothache, sick headache, or neuralgia—the feeling of rest, peace, and content, of self-gratulation and exaltation that I feel after all is over is almost worth the suffering endured to obtain it.

Thee says, "Life is painless because natural." And is not death natural also? What is death but a simple going to sleep? Many die in sleep and feel no change. I hav seen the grandparent, the parent, and the little child die, but I've never seen any evidence that death is painful. One severe attack of sick headache is more painful than a dozen ordinary deaths. The best physicians will tell thee that in a majority of deaths there is no pain, and no sensation even.

It is only too true that none of us are as well born, well reared, and well lived as we might be, but the nearer we reach these desirabilities the more health and consequently happiness will be insured us. No, I hav never died, but we hav the testimony of hundreds who hav died to all intents and purposes, been drowned, frozen, hanged, shot, and stabbed, and finally brought back to life, and a majority say that dying was comparativly painless, but the coming back to life was the hard struggle.

I don't understand why, if thy life has been so miserable, and thee believes that of the whole race is equally so, thee should cling to a belief in and desire a perpetuation of it after death ends all. Thee will take thyself along, and if so unhappy here how can thee hope to be better off in a beyond? There cannot be a life anywhere that is exempt from the sufferings, sins, sorrows, and crimes incident to humanity. We may lessen them, we may eradicate a few of them, but some of the old ones will remain, and many new ones will come.

We dread death just as we dread old age. We prize youth, health, strength, vigor, and vim. We would like to keep them and to liv forever in the prime of them all. But this wish will not create its fulfilment. Hence my motto is, One world at a time, and enjoy it in its fulness. Be useful, good, temperate, kind, and benevolent. Seek the sunshine and liv in its beams. Carry a glad heart and a cheerful countenance. Thee will shed happiness all around thee and make thy presence a harbinger of joy to those who are so favored as to be with thee.

There are croakers enough, and we need more hopeful, grateful, generous, whole-souled people. We need more who seek for the bright side of life, more who realize that happiness is the normal condition of all organized beings. Health is normal, sickness is abnormal. To hope is normal, to despair abnormal.

Try it again, Mary, and write when some wave of sunshine floods thy life, and see if thee cannot tell us a more cheerful story.

"Though the eye may be dimmed with its grief-drop awhile,
And the whitened lip sigh forth its fear,
Yet pensiv indeed is the face where the smile
Is not oftener seen than the tear.

"There are times when the storm-gusts may rattle around,
And spots where the poison shrub grows,
But are there not times when nought else can be found
But the south wind, the sunshine, and rose?"

Ali's Punishment.

Ali Ben Achmet, from his tent,
Looked out upon the firmament.

He saw the wonder of the skies.
And watched the pallid moon arise,

And mused upon the promis made
By Allah's angel, fire-arrayed,

Who in a dream, long years ago,
Had spoken to him, soft and low:

"Thy deeds of good hav won this grace,
That some day thou shalt see my face.

"Ask not when this reward shall be,
But some day I will come to thee;

"Be ready to receive, therefore,
Great Allah's angel at thy door."

Long years had passed o'er Ali's head
Since first those words of hope were said;

But every night before his door
Ali had placed from out his store

Half his supply of dates and bread,
And milk and pomegranates red,

And watched to guard them from the clutch
Of hungry hand's profaning touch.

"Touch not," he said; "these things are stored
To wait the angel of the Lord."

And as he sat and prayed that night
The angel came in glory bright,

Ali fell low upon his face:
"Allah, I thank thee for this grace."

Then, rising, to his door he went:
"Enter, I pray thee, thy servant's tent."

"Nay," said his guest, "I go not in The tent of one defiled by sin!"

Poor Ali stood in sore surprise:
"Is my life sinful in thine eyes?"

"Hav I not given all my days
To Allah's love and Allah's praise?

"See here, where lies the wasted sum,
Of food laid by lest thou shouldst come."

"There," said the angel, "lies thy sin
Forbidding me to enter in.

"For how shall I take joy in food
That did no human being good?

"The sick and poor whom thou'st denied,
The hungry, who still hungry died,

"These hadst thou fed with what I see,
The gift would hav been made to me."

Ali Ben Achmet bent his head;
"Allah hath punished pride," he said.

—Selected.

The Human Hand.

The haud is a servant of the brain. It is composed of twenty-seven bones, arranged in three groups. The wrist, called in anatomy the carpus, has eight bones; the middle, or palm of the hand, is called the metacarpus, and consists of five bones, while the fingers, or phalanges, hav, as you can readily perceive, three bones each; the thumb, however, has but two. This part of the human body is symmetrically and beautifully made, and is gracefully adapted to the work required of it.

The brain directs, the hand performs, and it has elaborated many inventions, worked out many problems, built houses, palaces, manufactories, stately ships, noble academies, halls of state, and grand mausoleums for the dead It has reared obelisks and sphinxes that still remain impenetrable and unreadable, firm and enduring, after the lapse of centuries unknown, while their founders hav long ago faded into dust. Elegant works of art, dainty garments, sculptured forms of beauty, and canvas glowing with loveliness, are brought into being by the human hand. The products of earth, of animal and insect, are deftly woven by the hand into fabrics of cotton, wool, and silk.

The hand of Franklin brought the lightning from the clouds and made it minister to the necessities of man. The hand of Morse "put a girdle round the earth," and made all nations talk together. Edison annihilated space, united towns and cities by word of mouth, and changed dark night to instantaneous brilliancy and beauty by his electric light. Away back in the past the hand of Gutenburg lifted the veil of ignorance, and made knowledge possible to all by means of "the art preservativ of arts."

Thus might we go on relating the work of the human hand, how it has measured distances lifted the eyes to behold the wonders and grandeur of starry world in all their magnificence and greatness; floated ships on all seas, and compelled the earth to yield of its abundance, wresting from its grasp its gold, its silver and precious metals, and all would but increase our respect for this deft symbol of the power that guides and directs it.

We often hear of soft, white hands, of hard, brown hands, of handsome hands, and so on, but whether black and smutty, dirt-stained or of lily fairness, the hand that performs the good deed, that helps the unfortunate and distressed, that relieves the wants of the poor and needy, that ministers to the sick and weary; in short, the useful hand, is the one that is most beautiful to us.

The hand we do not like, no matter how fair soft, and white, it may be, is the idle, useless hand, that shrinks from honest toil; the hand that stealthily takes that which is not its own; that is raised to strike another; that does mischief; that is employed at the gaming table; that holds to its owner's lips, or to the lips of another, the wine cup, in whose dregs lurk danger, disease, crime, ruin, death—such hands we do not like.

Many noble deeds of which the world never hears are performed by those who pursue their quiet way, unconscious that they bear the insignia of heroes and benefactors.

In the city of Boston, in an upper chamber of a fine brick edifice, there is, to-day, a gentleman who possesses singularly beautiful and shapely hands, but the right hand is lame and weak. It became so in this way: Years ago he was passing along a street in the populous city where he resides, when all at once he observed a little child toddling along, and almost beneath the feet of a wild-eyed, infuriated horse. At the imminent risk of his own life, he snatched the child from the mad animal's path and rescued it from the jaws of death. The child was taken into a store near by, and its rescuer went on his way with a sprained and aching wrist, which was useless to him for many weeks afterward, and the original strength of which has never been fully regained, and never will be. The kind-hearted stranger never knew even the name of the child that he saved from death, but the lame hand is a perpetual reminder of the incident. He does not mind, however, the inconvenience arising from a weak and injured hand, for that hand saved a human life. This gentleman has performed many good and gracious deeds of benevolence and kindness, which, if they were all changed to stars, and woven into diadems, would crown him with glory and light all his way on the journey through this world.

On one occasion he visited a poor man who had been sick a long time. Sickness and poverty denied the feeble one many comforts and necessities. A well-meaning, kind-hearted gentleman was praying at the bedside when our friend entered. When the prayer was finished, and it was a good, loving, heartfelt prayer, and when, with many kind wishes, the gentleman had taken his departure, our friend stepped to the bed, and said: "You hav had a good prayer, and instead of my offering another I will giv you this little tract. It will get you medicin or something to make you comfortable. When I come again I will bring more," and he handed the sick man a five-dollar bill The smile and glad tears that illuminated the face of the sufferer were worth many times the amount bestowed.

So should our hands be trained to perform good and noble deeds, and when at last we rest from our labors, those who survive us may say as they caress our then still pale hands, "These hands were employed in useful labors, in doing good, and only good, to all the world." For a good deed is never lost; it radiates far and near, its influence is wide, its value priceless.

Nine-Block Squares.

H	A	F
C	E	G
D	I	B

If the numbers arising from the successiv additions of a constant addend be written in a nine-block square in the order of the letters A, B, C, etc., as shown in the diagram, the sum of each of the columns and horizontal and diagonal lines will be the same. If you count by ones, and put 1 for A, B will be 2, and so on. If A be 2, then B must be 3, etc. If you use the count by threes, and put 1 for A, B must be 4, C 7, etc. You can put any whole number for A, but the next in the count must be in B, and the next in C, etc. Strange as it may seem, this is no magic, but follows a precise mathematical law. There are no miracles. All things can be accounted for if we only know how. The law, of which I hav presented a few features only, admits of a more general expression, and is extended to embrace the squares of all odd numbers, however large. It admits, too, of the most rigid demonstration. The youths of this Corner will obtain "cumulativ proof" of what I say from every additional square that they make from this formula, but there is a general and conclusiv method of demonstration that is much more satisfactory. This is perhaps as hard as I ought to make it, and I shall not hav anything now to say of the "zig-zag method of elimination in algebraic epuations." I will close by presenting you with a diagramatic formula for a twenty-five-block square that can be filled out according to the directions for the nine-block square. There is scarcely a limit to the different squares you may thus form.

Correspondence.

CHARLES CITY, IA., April 3, 1884.

MISS WIXON, Dear Friend: We take THE TRUTH SEEKER, and I think it is the best paper in the universe. I read it through each week, commencing with the Children's Corner.

I hav solved some of the puzzles and I thought I would write to you and giv the answers.

I hav read the last lecture of Col. Ingersoll's entitled "Orthodoxy," and think it is splendid.

Your sincere friend, ANNA MAHARA.

"Handsome Is That Handsome Does."

It was Saturday afternoon, and all the boys had congregated, as was their custom, in Mr. Lindell s barn. They were stretched in every attitude on the hay, and Tommy Dunn was lying in a very dangerous and therefore very delightful position on one of the big beams.

"What are you going to do when you get to be a man?" inquired Tommy, as he gazed at the family of swallows that had made their nest in the ridge of the old barn.

"I suppose I'll help father run the place," replied Jimmy, soberly.

"I'm going to keep store," announced Eb Parsons, who was in the habit of making the most advantageous "swaps" of any boy in school.

Many of the boys had no clear idea of what they were going to do; but all were surprised when Tommy announced, boldly, "I'm going to be a circus rider."

Several had longings to become lawyers or physicians, but none had hoped to become one of those gorgeous gentlemen in pink tights and spangled trunks who had appeared in the circus which was in town the week before.

"But father says that a circus actor has to begin to practice when he is a boy," objected Jimmy.

"Of course," agreed Tom. "I practice every day."

"On what?" asked Jimmy, with a sly smile; for he knew well that Mr. Dunn would never allow Tom to drive his team, much less practice circus acts on their backs.

"Well, I havn't tried a horse, so far," Tom admitted; "but," he added, regaining his composure, "I swing on a trapeze and jump over boxes almost every day."

"Guess you'd find a difference if you tried a real horse," remarked Eb Parsons.

"Say, Jimmy, couldn't you get one of your father's colts to let me hav a try on?" asked Tom.

"I don't know; I'll ask him," said Jimmy.

He went to look for his father, and found him directing some men who were building a wall.

"Father, can we hav the colts to ride a little while?"

"The colts!" answered his father; "why, my boy, they are not broken yet. Take old Jack."

"But old Jack looks so bad," objected Jimmy.

"Handsome is that handsome does, Jimmy; and old Jack will do better by you than the colts would."

Jimmy went back to the barn not at all satisfied.

"Father says we can hav old Jack."

"Old Jack!" exclaimed Tommy; "a pretty circus horse he would make!"

"He looks more like a horse than your dry goods box that you hav been practicing on."

"Well, I suppose if we can't hav what we want, we've got to take what we can get," muttered Tom.

Accordingly the horse was led out.

"He'd make a good subject for a horse-doctor," commented Joe Fisher. "You ought to put him on a package of horse liniment, and lable him 'Before using.'"

Meanwhile, the boys were busily engaged in clearing the barn floor, and putting up a rope to make the ring. At last it was finished. Tom dropped from his perch on the beam on to the horse's back, and losing his hold, slid down on the floor.

"He's got a slippery back anyhow," Tom remarked, as he climbed on a manger in order to mount again.

Jack stood perfectly still, surprised, no doubt, by these strange proceedings, but evidently haying a clear idea that his first business was not to hurt the boys.

"Stand on his back," urged one.

"Stand on your head the way the circus man did."

The latter seemed the most difficult, and consequently the most attractiv to Tom's disposition. He scrambled up, and after several unsuccessful efforts, finally succeeded in balancing himself on his hands. The boys were in a fever of excitement.

"Start the horse," urged two or three, and before Tom could let himself down, Jack had taken a step forward in obedience to some one's order to "G lang."

It was only one step, but that was enough to make Tom lose his balance, and fall heavily to the floor. Jack stood perfectly still, and allowed the boys to drag Tom, who was stunned by the fall, from between his feet.

Fortunately Tom was not seriously injured, but it cured him of all desire to be a circus rider. When he told his father about the accident, he finished the story with:

"And if old Jack hadn't had more sense than all of us boys put together, I'd hav been killed. 'Handsome is that handsome does,' Mr. Lindell says, and old Jack must be a beauty, for he certainly acted handsomely by me."—Allan Forman in Harper's Young People.

BIBLE MYTHS

AND THEIR

Parallels in Other Religions.

Being a Comparison of the Old and New Testament Myths and Miracles with those of heathen nations of Antiquity, Considering also their Origin and Meaning. With numerous illustrations.

The object of the work is to point out the myths with which the Old and New Testaments abound; to show that they were held in common with other nations; and then trace them to their evident origin and explain their meaning.

"It has long been acknowledged by the most eminent biblical students that the Hebrew scriptures contain a large mythical element; but, so far as we know, the present is the first complete and scholarly attempt to trace these myths to their source, and ascertain their original signification."—Boston Courier.

"Never before has there been given a volume to the reading world that shows the research for the origin of these myths as does this one just published by J. W. Bouton, of New York."—Boston Times.

"It is unquestionably true that the results of a rationalistic study of the Christian scriptures are nowhere else so accessible as they are now made in the work before us.—N. Y. Sun.

Poetry.

The Cry of Labor.

We are the hewers and delvers who toil for another's gain,
The common clods and the rabble, stunted of brow and brain.
What do we want, the gleaners, of the harvest we hav reaped?
What do we want, the neuters, of the honey we hav heaped?

We want the drones to be driven away from our golden hoard;
We want to share in the harvest; we want to sit at the board;
We want what sword or suffrage has never yet won for man,
The fruits of his toil, that were promised, when the curse of toil began.

What matter if king or consul, or president holds the rein,
If crime and poverty ever be links in the bondman's chain?
What careth the burden-bearer that liberty packed his load,
If hunger presseth behind him with a sharp and ready goad?

Ye hav shorn and bound the Samson, and robbed him of learning's light;
But his sluggish brain is moving; his sinews hav all their might.
Look well to your gates of Gaza, your privilege, pride, and caste!
The giant is blind and thinking, and his locks are growing fast.

—Jeffrey Roche.

Stray Scraps.

"Henry Ward Beecher said in Denver not long ago that Adam never fell, that he began at the bottom, and if he fell at all he fell up" (TRUTH SEEKER, March 8th.)

Beecher stole that from Freethinkers. That saying was current among us Liberals twenty-five years ago. Henry Ward will hav to try again to get ahead of us unbelievers.

I admire John Peck's writings, but does he mean to be understood (see TRUTH SEEKER of March 29th) by "There are many passages in Genesis which I could not recommend to the perusal of any ladies except Sunday-school teachers," that he could recommend their perusal to gentlemen? If so, I disagree. That which is unfit for a lady to read is unfit for a gentleman. Pure women should be duplicated by pure men. Why should not the "Christian consent to hav his daughters associate with the lowest and most abandoned wretches," etc., as well as his sons? Why make a reservation of his sons? Let us not hav one rule for "ladies" and "daughters," and another for gentlemen and sons.

"Experiences of an Old Man," signed "J. R.," in March 29th, are very interesting. "Conversation above tittle-tattle or money making," as he complains, is very scarce, as my experience also proves, and anyone above that, in many localities, must put their thoughts upon paper or make a tomb of them in their own breasts. His "two daughters are religious bigots," and two of his three sons not much better. I know of several aged Liberals in the same predicament. How can the children of Liberals be preserved in the truth of their parents? Certainly not by sending them to Sunday-school in early youth to learn that which their parents had to unlearn in order to become good, common-sense Liberals.

ELLA E. GIBSON.

Barre, Mass., April 7, 284.

To Go or Not to Go.

Thus far I hav obtained the following contributions towards going to see and investigate spirit phenomena:

Francis D. Lacy,	(promised)	$25.00
J. W. Truesdell,	"	10.00
Dr. E B. Foote, Sr.,	(paid)	2.00
A friend,	"	2.00

It will not be safe for me to start till I am assured of sixty or seventy dollars, so I hope friends who are anxious for me to go will not delay in sending the needed funds. It will take money for board, for seances, and for incidentals. I make no private personal appeals, for I want no one to help who does not desire me to go.

Mr. Slenker says I need not think myself a D. M. Bennett, to be sent around the world. I will say I trust no one would fancy me conceited enough to think that, but if we cannot all be Bennetts we can be humble and earnest workers and try to emulate our noble hero in his efforts to spread the truth and make the world happier and better because we hav lived. ELMINA.

PROBABLY the longest funeral procession the world ever saw was that of Lieutenant De Long, the arctic explorer, which traversed over 11,000 miles by reindeer and horse sleds and by railroad and ocean transit, as this list indicates: Matveh, by reindeer sled, to Yakutsk, 800 miles; Yakutsk, by horse sled, to Irkutsk, 2,342; Irkutsk, by horse sled, to Krosnoyarsk, 670; Krosnoyarsk, by horse sled, to Tomsk, 367; Tomsk, by horse sled, to Omsk, 582; Omsk, by horse sled, to Orenburg, 1,000; Orenburg, by railroad, to Moscow (about), 900; Moscow, by railroad, to Hamburg, 1,300; Hamburg to New York (about), 3,000; total, 11,051.

Ingersoll versus Lambert.

Ingersoll. If matter is eternal and infinit, can a God exist?

Lambert. There cannot be two infinits—two eternals.

I. Can a God exist independent of a creator?

L. So the church teaches—and the church is infallible.

I. How do you positivly prove God's immateriality?

L. The church teaches it and it must be true.

I. Did God create himself and the Universe and all intelligences from nothing?

L. It is not a doctrin of Catholics that God created himself.

I. How do Catholics account for the existence of a God?

L. Because nothing can exist without a God.

I. How do Catholics know that the Universe cannot exist without a God?

L. Because the scriptures say that God created all things.

I. Is that all the proof Catholics hav to depend on?

L. The Bible the church and tradition are infallible.

I. Does God himself know he is fallible, and "repents" for making man?

L. You are a bold blasphemer and you will surely go to hell.

I. Must I be damned for using reason and common sense?

L. You will be damned for not believing and obeying the church.

I. Did God create a man from dust, and a woman from a bone?

L. The Bible teaches thus, and it must be true.

I. Did God know that the devil fell out of heaven?

L. For God's sake, Ingersoll, don't blaspheme your creator.

I. Did God always know that the devil will upset all his divine plans?

L. There you are—blaspheming again; do stop it.

I. Did God die to reconcile himself to himself and to sinful man?

L. Yes, indeed. That is just what God did do.

I. Does universal salvation prove universal ruin to all "unbelievers?"

L. Yes, sir. This is the doctrin of my infallible church.

I. Is Christ absolutely very and eternal God?

L. He is, sir, and you must believe this or be eternally damned!

I. Did God die to save all mankind from going to hades?

L. He did, but most all mankind will go to hell notwithstanding.

I. Did Christ's natural body of flesh, blood, and bones arise from the tomb?

L. Yes, sir. Otherwise there will be no resurrection of the dead to life again.

I. Is the virgin Mary truly the mother of God?

L. If you don't know that she is the mother of God, you must be a natural fool!

I. Do priests forgiv all sins?

L. They do forgiv all who are true penitents.

I. Is the church of Rome absolutely infallible?

L. The church is as infallible as God himself is.

I. How can God be infallible if he "repents," and his divine plans fail?

L. Mister Ingersoll, will you never stop blaspheming?

I. Does God know that the Catholic church, popes, and heretics, are as absolutely fallible as the angels who were turned out of heaven for rebelling, and then God changed them into devils who tempt and damn mankind?

L. Yes, God knew all about it—but none understand this mystery but holy priests!

I. Some little whiffets know that God must hav had a creator; that the sun or earth do not obey man's bidding, that man must be a child before he can be a man; that a dead child, dead man, and a dead God, never come to natural life again; that rivers never change to blood; that cattle do not die but once; that "water" never stood erect, upright, like a stone wall; that a man cannot liv an hour in a fish's belly; that fire always burns man—and no miracle can prevent it; that snakes and asses never talk foolishness, as little whiffet Lambert does.

The fact is, Lambert does know that Catholicism, with all its nunneries, mummeries, flummeries, bulls, boasting, bombast, bugbears, devils, hell, damnation, pardons, indulgences, domineering popes menacing liberty, and secretly maneuvering to usurp all temporal power, must be closely watched, or little Catholic whiffets will surely gain the ascendency in this free, model, confiding, secular government.

Americans are unconsciously fostering a system of mental slavery, retrogression, degradation, superstition, falsehood, persecution, disintegration, and certain ruin; and eternal vigilance is the only means of protecting and continuing the American Constitution and government from a sect whose church authority is above all earthly governments.

Liberty, independence, progress, prosperity, happiness, and peace depend upon firm, united opposition to the persevering encroachments and constant innovations of priestcraft in all its dreadful, horrid, gloomy forms.

Priests will hav idleness, luxuries, wine, and women secluded in cloisters under religious vows. Compared with those brothels, Infidelity is absolute purity. Catholicity has its secret nunneries and private debaucheries, but its "little whiffets" are forbidden to join secret associations under pain of excommunication and eternal damnation.

Catholicism was borrowed and born of paganism. It is heathenish, tyrannical, bloody, and murderous; our enemies themselvs (priests and escaped nuns) being judges. Yet Catholic "whiffets" still promulgate their infallibility, and continue their unholy practices. Lambert knows that Catholicism is fabulous in doctrins and wicked in practice; that it is unphilosophical, unnatural, unjust, unmerciful, and infinitly horrible, impossible, and false.

If God's little whiffet will prove Catholicism infallible, he will make the loudest barking and prove the greatest miracle that God Almighty ever performed with a little whiffet priest since time began.

This little whiffet's sophistry, impudence, insolence, brass, supreme braggadocio, and wonderful egotism surely "beat the Jews." The little whiffet has not, cannot, possibly prove Catholicism pure, perfect, and infallible. This little whiffet must bark louder next time.

We do not fancy or practice vituperation further than to "answer a fool according to his folly." All Catholics liv in glass houses, and they should try to avoid throwing stones.

Until God's little whiffet growls and barks loud enough to prove that God created himself and the universe and all intelligences from nothing, we leave God's little barking, growling, biting cur "alone in his glory."

D. M. BENNETT'S LAST WORK.

A TRUTH SEEKER
Around the World.

FOUR LARGE VOLUMES.

With a steel plate engraving of the author in Vol. I. and each volume illustrated with forty-seven cuts.

BY D. M. BENNETT.

Late editor of THE TRUTH SEEKER, author of "A Truth Seeker in Europe," "Gods and Religions of Ancient and Modern Times," "The World's Sages, Thinkers, and Reformers," "Champions of the Church," etc., etc.

Handsomely bound in red cloth, $6.50; in leather, red edges, $9.50; in morocco, gilt edges, $10.50.

Readers of THE TRUTH SEEKER know the circumstances under which this work was written. The last words penned by the great author were for the fourth volume which was nearly completed at his death, and which will now contain an account of his world-lamented death and burial. Mr. Bennett was a very patient and faithful chronicler of the habits and customs of the different peoples of the many places he visited. The every-day life of all nations is laid before the reader by one who has visited them and beheld them with his own eyes. Particular attention is paid to the progress of Freethought in the various countries he visited, and the morality of so-called pagan nations is contrasted with the morality of Christian countries, much to the detriment of the latter The work is a

Freethinker's History of the World.

This work and "A TRUTH SEEKER IN EUROPE" should be in every Liberal's library Besides its intrinsic worth it is a memento of one of the greatest Freethinkers the world has known—of one who ranks with Voltaire and Paine in the force and clearness of his writings.

ANOTHER NEW BOOK!
New! Eloquent! Elegant! Splendid!
JUST PUBLISHED.
PROSE POEMS
And Selections,
BY
ROBERT G. INGERSOLL.

This new book is a gem. It is a model in every respect. In fact, one of the richest, brightest, best ever issued.

It contains, besides the celebrated "Decoration Day Oration," never before published, and all the famous "tributes" heretofore printed in various shapes, but never brought together till now, many other gems selected from the speeches, arguments, lectures, letters, table-talks, and day-to-day conversations of the author.

The work is designed for, and will be accepted by, admiring friends as a rare personal souvenir. To help it serve this purpose, a fine steel portrait, with autograph facsimile, has been prepared especially for it.

In the more elegant styles of binding, this volume is eminently suited for presentation purposes, for any season or occasion.

In workmanship the volume is a masterpiece. The type is large and beautiful; the paper heavy and richly tinted; the presswork faultless; and the binding, as perfect as the best materials and skill can produce. The book is quarto in size, and contains 248 pages. No item of expense has been spared to make the work worthy of author and public.

PRICES:

Silk-cloth, beveled edges, gilt back and side,	$2 50

TESTIMONIALS:

Read the following testimonials, and be convinced that our claims are correct in every particular and that your ailments can be eradicated without the aid of MEDICIN. THESE APPLIANCES ARE THE ACME OF PERFECTION:

Remarkable Cure of Paralysis in One Week.

CINCINNATI, Dec. 19, 1882.

DR. L. TENNEY—Dear Sir: As I feel greatly indebted to you for the benefit I hav received from your treatment, and the use of your Magnetic appliances, I can say without hesitation to those afflicted as I hav been that the effect was simply marvelous. Two weeks ago I was stricken with paralysis in my right arm and could not use it at all, but after wearing a suit of your MAGNETIC CLOTHING for one week, can use it quite as well as ever. I hav also been troubled with Dyspepsia and Kidney Complaint for a number of years, from which I hav suffered intensely, and, although doctoring all the time, never found but temporary relief. Since putting on your appliances I hav experienced great benefit, and if I improve as rapidly as I hav in the past two weeks, will soon be well. I would, therefore, recommend to those suffering as I hav your Magnetic appliances as the only means of effecting a sure cure. Yours respectfully,

WM. H. CLEMMER,
No. 80 Eastern avenue.

Remember that the same appliances which will effect a cure in a case of Paralysis will at the same time eradicate CATARRH or DYSPEPSIA in the same patient. We do not, like the Old School Physician, change medicins every day until, after dosing the patient almost to death, he may possibly strike something (if he is very skilful) that brings relief for the time being.

Neuralgia of the Heart of Six Years Standing Cured in Three Weeks.

SHULLSBURG, WIS., Dec. 11, 1882.

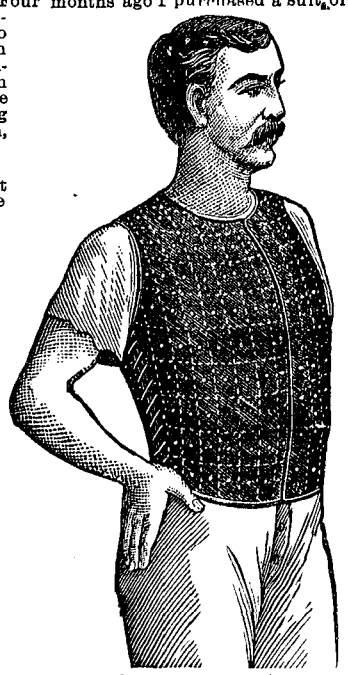
DR. L. TENNEY—Dear Sir: After wearing one of your MAGNETIC VESTS for about three weeks, I was entirely cured of Neuralgia of the Heart and Side, which had been a source of misery to me for the last six years. I had tried numerous remedies before without benefit, but as soon as I put on the MAGNETIC VEST I got relief instantly. With unbounded gratitude, I remain

Yours respectfully,
H. A. BROWN.

Ladies, read the following testimony from a lady who had been under drug treatment for eight years with nervous prostration and female weakness:

OSBORN, O., Dec. 15, 1882.

DR. L. TENNEY: Your letter just received; also the Clothing on Tuesday last. Fitted perfectly. FELT BETTER FROM THE FIRST HOUR I HAD THEM ON. Am not joking, and if I improve as rapidly as I hav since Tuesday, will soon be well. Will report again soon. Respectfully yours, E. J. K.



This lady reports herself entirely cured in less than six weeks after putting on the garments, and, although in bed, unable to get out, when applied, she nevertheless was able to ride twenty miles in two days after the application. The lady's name can be had upon application at this office, by anyone desiring to communicate with her.

Ladies, read the following testimony from a lady who had been suffering for two years with an Ovarian Tumor, and who had been told that nothing but the knife would save her life, and the chances were as 9 to 1 against recovery. In four months' time she is perfectly well, and has not taken a dose of medicin since putting on the appliances. Consult us when your physician tells you he can do nothinog for you; it will pay you.

SHULLSBURG, WIS., November 19, 1882.

DR. L. TENNEY, Dear Sir: About two years ago my health began to fail me; I became nervous, lost all desire for food, and, in fact, began to fail rapidly, so that I became alarmed and consulted several physicians of St. Louis, at which place I was then stopping, all of whom declared that I had an Ovarian Tumor, and that the only thing that would save my life would be the knife. About six months ago I grew rapidly worse, and had about made up my mind to take the only course that seemed left to me, and submit to an operation, when my attention was called to the Eureka Magnetic Appliances. As a drowning man will catch at a straw, so did I catch at this faint hope of a cure. Four months ago I purchased a suit of your appliances. From the very first I felt invigorated, the tumor, which had extended entirely across my abdomen, began to decrease, my pains became less from day to day, until now I am as well as I ever was in my life. Since putting on the appliances I hav not taken a single dose of medicin. My bowels, which before were constipated, are now regular. I would therefore cheerfully recommend them to anyone suffering as I hav, believing that they will do all and more than you claim for them. I remain,

Gratefully yours, MRS. MARY J. STEWART.

Remember that these appliances are not worn next the skin, but over the under-garment, and, unlike all other appliances in the market, they impart no shocks and leaves no sores.

Gems of Thought.

GOOD deeds are as contaglous as the bad, and a good example from a wise man will help many to also perform good works. The more we see of kind and humane actions in others the more we wish to excel in the same ourselvs. If men could realize at all times the great influence which example exerts upon those younger, and with less powers of mind, they would be more circumspect and guarded, and would wield a much greater influence for good.—D. M. Bennett.

THE seeds of virtue are natural to our constitution and, were they suffered to come to maturity, they would naturally conduct us to a happy life; but now, as soon as we are born and received into this world, we are forthwith familiarized with all kinds of depravity and perversity of opinions; so that we may be said to suck in error almost with our nurse's milk. When we return to our parents, and are put into the hands of tutors and governors, we are imbued with so many errors that truth gives place to falsehood and nature herself to established opinions. —Cicero.

LET any fair-minded person read The Light of Asia, and note how similar the supernatural incidents are in many instances to the supernatural incidents of the New Testament narrations, and the conceit that Christianity is a supernatural religion, or the only one, must receive a magnificent rebuke. Here are supernatural incidents related so remarkably similar to those of the New Testament that, if the latter are accepted as so many facts, there is no reason why the former should not be accepted also, in which case we hav two supernatural religions on our hands. —J. W. Chadwick.

THE very aim and end of our institutions is just this: that we may think what we like and say what we think.—"Think what we like!" said the divinity student; "think what we like! What! against all authority, human and divine!" Against all human versions of its own or any other authority. At our own peril always, if we do not like the right—but not at the risk of being hanged and quartered for political heresy or broiled on green fagots for ecclesiastical treason. Nay, we hav got so far that the very word heresy has fallen into comparativ disuse among us. . . . When the common people of New England [and of all America] stop talking politics and theology, it will be because they hav got an emperor to teach them the one, and a pope to teach them the other!—O. W. Holmes.

THE truth cannot be burnt, beheaded, or crucified. A lie on the throne is a lie still, and truth in a dungeon is truth still. The lie on the throne is on the way to defeat, and the truth in the dungeon is on the way to victory. No accidents of position can change the essential nature of things, or the eternal laws which determin their destinies.—Wm. McKinley.

THE Talmud tells us a beautiful story about Hillel. A certain heathen, who probably wished to throw ridicule upon the numerous religious institutions and practices of the Jews, as consorting oddly with their doctrin of the unity of God, had gone to Shammai, the head of the opposit school to Hillel's, and told him that he wished to become a Jew and desired to receive instruction from him, but only on condition that the whole religious instruction of the Jews should be imparted to him while he could stand upon one leg. Shammai chased him from his door indignantly. The heathen was well enough pleased by this result, and went on to Hillel, expecting to make fun of him in the same way. "Good, my son!" answered the rabbi gently, "make ready and attend: Do not to others what you would not hav them do to you. This is the substance of the law; the rest is only its application."—The Bible for Learners.

RELIGION must lean to science to discover what is the method which the divine thought has followed, what hav been the processes by which it has evolved the order we now behold. All facts really established by science, religion must lean to science—nay, more, ought to welcome and incorporate into its own view of the universe, allowing them to modify that view in as far as this may be necessary. In refusing to do this, in looking with suspicion, if not with positiv hostility, on the fresh discoveries of each age, religous persons, since the days of Galilee downward, hav often erred and given just grounds for complaint to the advocates of science.—Principal Shairp's Culture and Religion.

A MAN should always hav these two rules in readiness: the one to do only whatever the reason of the ruling and legislating faculty may suggest for the use of men; the other to change thy opinion if there is any one at hand who sets thee right and moves thee from any opinions. But this change of opinion must proceed only from a certain persuasion, or of what is just or of common advantage, and the like, not because it appears pleasant or brings reputation.—M. A. Antoninus.

THERE is this difference between happiness and wisdom; he that thinks himself the happiest man is so, but he that thinks himself the wisest is generally the greatest fool.—Colton's Lacon.

REJOICE with them that do rejoice and weep with them that weep. Be of the same mind one toward another. Mind not high things but condescend to low estate. Be not wise in your own conceits. Recompense no man evil for evils. Provide things honest in the sight of all men. If it be possible, as much as lieth in you, liv peaceably with all men.—Romans xii, 15–17,

THE "Yankee" who has had the keenness to see the best in science, literature, and modes of living in every nation under the sun, and the readiness to appropriate them, will presently see the superiority of simplicity to pretension and will be able to adopt quiet manners and to turn his breath through his throat instead of through his nose as soon as he has leisure to attend to such minor matters.—N. Y. Tribune.

PROSPECTUS OF

The Truth Seeker

FOUNDED BY D. M. BENNETT.

THE LEADING FREETHOUGHT JOURNAL OF THE WORLD.

LARGEST, CHEAPEST, BEST.

PUBLISHED EVERY SATURDAY, AT $3.00 PER YEAR; $1.50 FOR SIX MONTHS

SAMPLE COPIES FREE.

33 CLINTON PLACE, NEW YORK CITY.

Among the reforms THE TRUTH SEEKER aims to effect are:

Total separation of church and state, including the equitable taxation of church property; secularization of the public schools, abolition of Sunday laws, abolition of chaplaincies, prohibition of public appropriations for religious purposes, and all other measures necessary to the same general end.

Its sixteen large pages are filled every week with scientific, philosophic, and Freethought articles and communications by the ablest Freethinkers in the country. It givs all the Liberal news, and keeps its readers posted on current secular and theological events. It is the armory from which hundreds draw their weapons in contests with priesthood. All the Liberal papers are good, but THE TRUTH SEEKER is

THE BEST AND LARGEST.

It is conducted in a broad and truly liberal spirit, and givs everyone a hearing upon all subjects pertaining to the welfare of the human race.

OPINIONS REGARDING IT.

A paper like THE TRUTH SEEKER is something more and better than an advocate of truth. Through it its subscribers touch elbows with each other. Each reader knows that he is one of a goodly company who find comfort and inspiration in its pages. If they should meet each other they would feel like brothers and sisters. They hav lived under one intellectual roof, felt the glow of the same fireside, and broken together the bread of life. Such a paper is to thousands a substitute for the church.—GEORGE CHAINEY, in This World.

THE TRUTH SEEKER, founded by D. M. Bennett, is to-day perhaps the strongest foe with which superstition has to contend, and a long future of great usefulness is, we trust and believe, before it.—Winted, Conn., Press.

There ought to be five hundred subscribers to THE TRUTH SEEKER in this county, just to rebuke the infamous church bigots who are using force and fraud to suppress Liberalism.—Worthington, Minn., Advance.

This sterling and widely-circulated Freethought journal has won its way deep into the hearts of its readers. THE TRUTH SEEKER is a great paper, and deserves the most generous support of the Liberal public. The recent numbers received are splendid in every respect.—San Francisco Universe.

THE TRUTH SEEKER has gathered its resources, and will be a stronger, better, and brighter paper than ever.—Liberal League Man.

THE TRUTH SEEKER has become a necessity to the Liberal cause.—Kansas Blade.

Odds and Ends.

A LINEN shirt was first worn in England about the year 1250. There is a compositor in our office who has on that identical shirt.

A COLORED barber in Idaho has drawn the color line—he refuses to shave Indians. He evidently thinks himself better than the American government.

A CLERGYMAN who recently held service in Auburn prison preached from the text, "Go home to thy friends." His hearers were all willing, but couldn't seem to arrange it.

JOE HOXIE, referring to the bitterness of Southern ladies during the war, brought down the house by saying, "If the devil had been a woman, what a devil of a devil he would hav been!"

"Do you suppose eating angel-cake will make an angel of me?" asked a seraphic young lady of the worldly young man. "I've no doubt it will," he answered, "if you eat enough of it."

ADAM'S fall reached a long way. Adam and Eve were first placed in the Garden of Eden, where it was perpetual summer. When they sinned they were driven out into the cold world, and ever since that the sons of Adam hav had to pay $7 a ton for coal, and $500 apiece for sealskin sacks.

"Do you ever say your prayers?" inquired the old lady. "No'm. Don't never thay no pra'rs." "Dear me!" ejaculated the old lady in a shocked tone. "When you go to bed at night don't you pray to be taken care of until morning? Aren't you afraid something will happen to you if you don't?" "No; wot's de use. I ain't 'fraid o' nuffin. I thleep in de middle, I do."

"THERE'S a great fight in the Democratic party over the tariff question, Mr. Yager." "Vell, ouf dey got fight on dot question, meppy dem dramp der question oud." "It's a pretty hard thing to understand, the tariff. Can you explain the difference between a high and low tariff, Mr. Yager?" "To pee schure I oxblain dot. I don't peen no boliticals man, aber I know me dot. A high dariff him vas higher as a low dariff, und a low dariff him don't vas so high like a high dariff. Don'd you in der bapers some dings readt?"

SOME heartless wretch caught two cats, tied them by the tails, and flung them into the cellar of a Connecticut church. They kept pretty quiet until about the middle of the sermon, when they began to complain, and the pastor sternly remarked, "Will the choir please wait until its services are required?" And the choir denied making any noise, and finally, after long search, the sexton found and removed the cats. And everybody is laughing at the choir, and the way the members thereof are mad at the pastor goes ahead of the wrath of the maiden ladies who owned the cats.

"Do the girls' looks hav anything to do with the chances of securing a situation?" we asked the minister plenipotentiary of an employment bureau the other day. "Well, I should smile," was the reply of the guileless young man. "The prettier they are the better their opportunities?" "Not much. Now there's Mrs. Potiphar Brown, the minister's wife, just interviewing three damsels in the next room. Two are what you'd call pretty. The third's as homely as a hedge-fence, has a wart on her nose, a squint and tan freckles, and—" "You think the one with the tan freckles will—" "Take the cake, you bet. You don't get no airy fairy Lilian dumped down on the domestic hearth of the parsonage—not if Mrs. Potiphar Brown knows it."

"OF all the biblical characters," said Mr. Shinrack, putting aside the scriptures and addressing his interesting family, "I most admire David. Aside from being a great ruler, he was a poet, and a singer of great sweetness." "He was something like Andrew Johnson," replied the son, a young man whose career on the college play-ground has been spoken of in the highest terms. "Why like Andrew Johnson?" asked the father. "Because he was a tailor." "What, David a tailor?" "Yes, for the Bible says so," "The Bible says nothing of the kind." "Oh, yes, for don't you know that when Saul went into the cave David cut his garment?" After a few moments' silence, the father said to his wife: "There is an old horse-pistol somewhere up-stairs. Wish you'd bring it down."

"WHAT is the charge against this man?" asked an Arkansas judge as the prisoner was placed before him. "Killing an editor, your honor." "H'm, was the editor a resident of the state?" "Yes, your honor." "What hav you to say, prisoner, concerning this very serious charge? Are you guilty or not guilty?" "Guilty, your honor; I murdered him in cold blood." "Well," said the judge, "there is nothing left for me to do but to sentence you. The crime of murder in this state is becoming much too common. You are charged with killing an Arkansas editor, to which charge you plead guilty?" "Yes, your honor, I do; and I don't care if it costs me $50." "Prisoner," responded the judge solemnly, "you are fined $200, and stand committed until the amount is paid." The prisoner then swooned away.

THE operators at the telegraph headquarters in the Blackford block hav been much annoyed by repeated delays in forwarding telegrams from the branch office at the Union depot. One day last week Sheeney Ike approached the chief operator with a telegram in his hand, and a mingled expression of indignation on his honest Semitic features. "Mr. Langhorn, here is a telegram that must hav been delayed at the depot office for over eighteen hundred years." "What do you mean?" "Well, if you don't believe it, read it!" Mr. Langhorn read the dispatch, which was as follows:

"PALESTINE, April 14th.

"J. K. HEROD: Christ died yesterday. Come at once. LUKE."

The operator at the depot got his discharge that afternoon, and the gentile operators set up the cigars to Sheeney Ike.

THE TRUTH SEEKER

A JOURNAL OF FREETHOUGHT AND REFORM.

Entered at the Post-Office at New York, N. Y., as Second-class Matter.

Vol. 11. No. 17. | PUBLISHED WEEKLY. | New York, Saturday, April 26, 1884. | 33 CLINTON PLACE. | $3.00 per year.

Notes and Clippings.

MR. ROBERT BUCHANAN, the author, writes to the Pall Mall Gazette that the imprisonment of journalists is a barbarous practice, and unworthy of a civilized country.

SOME children hav naturally a discriminating mind. A clergyman was telling a marvelous story, when his little girl asked: "Now, pa, is that true, or is it only preaching?"

"AND do your workmen," asked a London visitor of a Lancashire mill owner, "do your workmen really liv in those hovels?" "Certainly not," replied the master; "they only sleep there. They liv in my mill."

GERALD MASSEY attacks the church of England on the ground that it spends a vast amount of money in propagating erroneous and false theology. Mr. Gerald Massey is correct. A good portion of England's wealth is diverted to the utterly useless support of ministerial idlers.

THE first temperance paper published in Europe was published by Joseph Lindsay. The first temperance paper in this country was by William Lloyd Garrison, and the first book in favor of total abstinence was written by Judge Herttell, all called Infidels.—Marion Enterprise.

A PHYSICIAN recently wrote a prescription on a piece of paper bearing a part of one of Joseph Cook's sermons on the obverse side. The druggist put up a dose according to the sermon instead of the prescription, and the unhappy patient who swallowed it expired in fearful agony.

THE Connecticut papers say, scornfully, that there was a great deal of boy's play about the Cincinnati riots. Well, yes, remarks the Burlington Hawkeye, they didn't amount to much from a Connecticut standpoint. There wasn't a young woman murdered, nor a preacher arrested in the whole three days' fighting.

MISS MARY MAGDALEN WINDSOR, of Annapolis, Md., lately a member of a Catholic sisterhood, lectured in Annapolis recently on the "Secrets of a Convent." She named several prominent priests of Baltimore and one formerly of Annapolis and charged them, together with Sisters of Charity, with gross immoralities.

HISTORIAN ANTHONY FROUDE, who was here in 1872–73 to deliver his lectures on "The English in Ireland in the Eighteenth Century," promises to come again with a fresh course next fall. He is going to Australia first, and will reach this country by way of San Francisco on his return. He means to lecture in the leading cities in the Union.

THOMAS K. BEECHER, of Elmira, an amateur clergyman and journalist, is trying to attain something of the notoriety of his big brother, Henry Ward Beecher. He has lately publicly advocated the entire propriety and even desirability of suicide, and now he thinks it is not wrong to hire ignorant men to vote the right ticket. So says the World.

THERE are some emigrants who are not particular about getting work. Here is the way the Philadelphia Call puts it: "Well, Pat," was asked of a recently arrived emigrant, "and how do you like America?" "It's a foine country, sor." "Hav you succeeded in getting work yet?" "No, sor; but I hav a frind in Washington who is afther getting me a pension."

THE vestry of the Protestant Episcopal church at Tamaqua, Pa., hav voted to close their church and dismiss their pastor, the Rev. W. R. Burk, because he persisted in marrying against their wishes. The rector is a resolute, independent, and courageous man, whose character is above reproach. When a few weeks ago he announced his intention of marrying, the name of the bride caused a commotion among some members of the congregation, who held that she was not a fit associate for them, nor a fit wife for their pastor. The vestry protested, but the marriage was celebrated, and the congregation absented itself from the wedding.

THERE is war in the Baptist church at Augusta, Ga. At 8 o'clock on the night of the 16th the lights were put out and a pistol fired through the window at the preacher, the Rev. Mr. Walker. A regular riot resulted. A police detail was ordered to the spot, which arrested a deacon and two other members. The fight was the result of a division in the church over the choice of a pastor. No one was injured.

AT a Boston seance a disconsolate widower succeeded in establishing communication with his wife, who had passed into the spirit-land from the Hub, of whose æsthetic circles she had been a member. The man inquired if she was happy, and if she liked her new surroundings, to which she replied: "Well, dear, it is very charming, and lovely, and all that, but of course you know, dear, it isn't Boston."

THE Rev. G. T. Harper, colored, has resigned his pastorate at Newburgh and accepted a call to British Guinea. He gave as a reason that he did not like this country, which, he said, was free only in theory. The spirit of caste and the color line were too distinct, and negroes did not get decent accommodations in the cars. Hence American Methodism loses another of its "lights"—in this case a dark lantern, so to speak.

MRS. MARY TUCKER, a widow, thirty-five years old, died at Carnie, Ill., on the 11th, and on her deathbed related a story of clerical villainy to which she ascribed her ruin. She said that after the death of her husband in Missouri she received the attentions of Elder Morris, a local minister of thirty-five years' standing and sixty years old. They became intimate and she submitted to an operation, which caused her death.

A GOLD watch was disposed of recently at a church fair now running in this city, by lottery, each ticket of admission being numbered, and a certain number drawing the prize. That is similar to the scheme of the candy dealers whom Comstock arrested not long ago for violating the lottery law; but this happens to be a government of the church, by the church, and for the church, so that any deviltry in the name of religion is allowable.

SENATOR BLAIR'S grand scheme for dividing up the surplus in the federal treasury among the several states for educational purposes is certain of defeat when it goes to the House. This bribe of millions is a brazen effort to break down the old-fashioned objection to federal interference in the internal affairs of states. But in this instance the attraction of an appropriation will be overcome by a fear that the effect of the bill would be to overrun the South with New England schoolmasters, who might become, in time, the political teachers and leaders of the black race.—Mercury.

AN occupant of a Pennsylvania prison whom the restraints of the jail had make religious, one day said to the chaplain: "See here; I never thought of such a thing before in my life; but a man will do almost anything to get out of a place like this. Now, I'll tell you what I'll do. You get me out of here and I'll join the church." The solemn impressivness with which he concluded the offer made the chaplain feel as if the man really thought he was making a sacrifice next in importance to surrendering his life. As soon as he recovered from his surprise he asked him: "What church will you join?" "I don't care a damn which. I'll join any church you say, only get me out." It is not recorded that the man was released.

KEELY'S latest rival is not satisfied with ordinary "vibratory" or "odylic" force, but goes in for a triple extract of some kind, in addition to which, not content with ordinary business methods for selling stock in his company, makes it a church affair, starts a big revival, and booms it for all it's worth. This strikes us as a pretty bald scheme.—Ex. Yes, and a great deal more than it is worth. Church affairs usually prove the worst swindles, and when a man in a church pulpit becomes a stock boomer or degrades himself morally, they are covered up so long that a great deal of mischief is done before it is known, and honest followers of the church are disgraced by clerical beats, robbers, and the other criminals who wear the church cloak to play the devil in.—Post.

THE Prince of Wales, says the London Freethinker, has sent a very sensible letter in reply to a complaint from Southend. Mrs. Sarah Sykes, of that town, an old lady of seventy, was fined 5s. and 10s. costs by the local authorities for selling sweetstuff on a Sunday. Young Mr. Sykes wrote to Albert Edward about the affair, and a prompt answer came through F. Knollys that "his royal highness the Prince of Wales regrets that the law to which you refer, and which bears so hardly and vexatiously in many cases, has not been repealed." Mr. W. E. Petherick, honorary secretary of the "Sykes Defense Committee," has had Albert Edward's letter printed on a window-bill as a warning to the "Sabbatarian bigots."

LORD COLERIDGE, since his visit to America, is treating his English friends with new applications of good old stories, among them this: He was, he says, at Mount Vernon with Mr. Evarts, and, talking about Washington, said: "I hav heard that he was a very strong man physically, and that, standing on the lawn here, he could throw a dollar right across the river onto the other bank." Mr. Evarts paused a moment to measure the breadth of the river with his eye. It seemed rather a "tall" story, but it was not for him to belittle the father of the country in the eyes of a foreigner. "Don't you believe it?" asked Lord Coleridge. "Yes," Mr. Evarts replied, "I think it's very likely to be true. You know a dollar would go further in those days than it does now."

JOHN SWINTON lectured on the evening of the 17th before the McAdam Political Science Club of this city, on "Lights and Shadows of London." He told of the splendors of Windsor Castle, and how, close by, could be heard the mutterings of thousands of oppressed residents of the slums of the Seven Dials. The frightful contrasts, Mr. Swinton said, could be the outcome of only such a government as the monarchy of England. He said that the people of this country should be warned against the tolerance of a similar state of affairs here. Mr. Swinton said the condition of the poorer classes in London, Birmingham, Liverpool, and other English cities, or even those of New York, could not for a moment be compared to the peace and happiness of the workingmen of Paris.

"I CLOSED all my woollen mills, about a dozen in number," Judge Hilton said to a Sun reporter, last week, "because I can buy the goods cheaper than I can manufacture them. I am still running one of the largest carpet mills in the country. We used to hav ten or twelve thousand operators in our woollen mills. We can make woollen goods in this country as well as they can make them anywhere else, but there is no profit in it. The tariff on wool is too high. As to cotton manufactures, the factories are all shutting down. They are making no money. It is impossible to get back their money with the present prices of cotton. I don't think we hav begun yet to see the stoppage of mills and manufactures which is coming. The iron mills are shutting down. They are stopping building railroads, and the demand for railroad iron has ceased. Railroad iron is $35 a ton. It used to be $90. There is no demand for it. Look at the case of Gov. Sprague. Hoyt, Sprague & Co. were worth millions. Every bank in New England thought it must hav some of their paper. They were forced to close down, at a loss of 75 per cent on the great property invested in the mills. That was ruinous. Go into Sixth avenue today, and you will find cotton goods selling at 2 1-2 and 3 cents a yard. The cotton is worth more than that. Manufacturers can't engage in that kind of business unless they expect to fail. But we are as well off here as they are in France or Germany or England. They hav a poorer population than we. A French artican can't get work more than two weeks in three all the year round."

News of the Week.

GLADSTONE refuses to include a clause enfranchising women in the English Franchise bill.

THE Methodist meeting-house at Saginaw City, Mich., was burnt last Sunday morning. Loss, $10,000.

E. A. WOODWARD, of Tweed Ring notoriety, has been elected deacon of a church in South Norwalk, Conn.

THE war between rival lines of transatlantic steamers has reduced the fare from New York to Ireland to $18.

THE Rev. S. F. Dixon, Methodist, of Newburgh, N. Y., has been expelled by the conference for adultery.

THE sexton of the Methodist church of New Lexington, Ohio, hanged himself in the belfry last Saturday night.

A GANG of 416 Mormon emigrants was brought to this country by the steamer Nevada, which arrived last Sunday.

MR. JOHN SHEEHAN, the builder of the Bennett Monument, was recently elected corporation assessor of New Rochelle, N. Y.

WHITNEY, the agent of the Society for the Prevention of Crime, reports that there are about 50,000 fallen women in New York city.

MRS. GEORGE CARPENTER, of Brooklyn, while on her way to church last Sunday evening, was taken suddenly ill, and died in a few minutes.

ONE of New York's aldermen got drunk, assaulted the ticket-seller of a theater, and butted a policeman in the stomach, one day last week. He was held in $300 bail.

LAST Sunday's dispatches announced that Queen Victoria was sick with lumbago, but Monday's advices stated that she went to church on Sunday, and America gave a sigh of relief.

THE steamer Oregon last week made the passage across the Atlantic from Queenstown, Ireland, to New York in six days and ten and one-half hours, averaging 461 miles per day, the fastest time on record.

HUBERT COMSTOCK, a step-brother of Anthony Comstock, pleaded guilty in General Sessions last week to grand larceny in the second degree. He had appropriated a watch worth $55. He was remanded for sentence. The Comstock family is bound to distinguish itself.

MRS. W. H. PAINTER, the wife of a Clyde, O., minister, has suffered with lung disease for twenty-five years. Being made the subject of special prayer last week, it is said she arose from the bed to which she has been confined for several weeks, and declared herself healed. It is probable that she is a fraud.

THE Rev. Alfred F. Vedder, of Albany, was on the 17th inst. sentenced to three years' imprisonment for the crime of abortion on the person of Miss Anna Walters, with whom he had been intimate. Vedder was for several years a Presbyterian clergyman at West Milton, N. Y. He has a wife and one child.

THE Freethinkers and Social Democrats of Paris are preparing an elaborate celebration of the hundredth anniversary of the death of Denis Diderot, the French Atheistical philosopher, which occurred July 30, 1784. Invitations hav been sent to Charles Bradlaugh, Annie Besant, Col. Robert G. Ingersoll, and other prominent Freethinkers of various countries.

A RELIGIOUS riot occurred at Carbonnear, Newfoundland, last week. Catholics attacked Protestants returning from church. A man was fatally injured. The Protestants then collected in force and clubbed the Catholics until they dispersed. The next day a Catholic shot at an Orangemen. The Protestant Orangemen then turned out with guns and bayonets and marched the streets all night. A war-ship was ordered from Halifax to Carbonnear by the executiv.

The Rostrum.

A New Lecture by Col. Ingersoll.

ORTHODOXY DYING FROM SOFTENING OF THE BRAIN AND OSSIFICATION OF THE HEART.

It is utterly inconceivable that any man believing in the truth of the Christian religion could publicly deny it, because he who believes in that religion would believe that, by a public denial, he would peril the eternal salvation of his soul. It is conceivable, and without any great effort of the mind, that millions who don't believe in the Christian religion should openly say that they did. In a country where religion is supposed to be in power—where it has rewards for pretense, where it pays a premium upon hypocrisy, where it at least is willing to purchase silence—it is easily conceivable that millions pretend to believe what they do not And yet I believe it has been charged against myself, not only that I was insincere, but that I took the side that I am on for the sake of popularity; and the audience to-night goes far toward justifying the accusation.

ORTHODOX RELIGION DYING OUT.

It givs me immense pleasure to say to this immense audience that orthodox religion is dying out of the civilized world. It is a sick man. It has been attacked with two diseases—softening of the brain and ossification of the heart. It is a religion that no longer satisfies the intelligence of this country; a religion that no longer satisfies the brain; a religion against which the heart of every civilized man and woman protests. It is a religion that givs hope only to a few; a religion that puts a shadow upon the cradle; a religion that wraps the coffin in darkness, and fills the future of mankind with flame and fear. It is a religion that I am going to do what little I can while I liv to destroy; and in its place I want humanity, I want good fellowship, I want a brain without a chain, I want a religion that every good heart will cheerfully applaud.

RELIGIOUS BIRTHS.

We must remember that this is a world of progress, a world of change. There is perpetual death, and there is perpetual birth. By the grave of the old forever stand youth and joy; and when an old religion dies a better one is born. When we find out that an assertion is a falsehood, a shining truth takes its place, and we need not fear the destruction of the false. The more false we destroy the more room there will be for the true. There was a time when the astrologer sought to read in the stars the fate of men and nations. The astrologer has faded from the world, but the astronomer has taken his place. There was a time when the poor alchemist, bent and wrinkled and old, over his crucible endeavored to find some secret by which he could change the baser metals into purest gold. The alchemist has gone; the chemist took his place; and, although he finds nothing to change metals into gold, he finds something that covers the earth with wealth. There was a time when the soothsayer and augur flourished, and after them came the parson and the priest; and the parson and the priest must go. The preacher must go, and in his place must come the teacher—that real interpreter of nature. We are done with the supernatural. We are through with the miraculous and the wonderful. There was once a prophet who pretended to read in the book of the future. His place has been taken by the philosopher, who reasons from cause to effect—a man who finds the facts by which he is surrounded and endeavors to reason from these premises and to tell what in all probability will happen in the future. The prophet has gone, the philosopher is here. There was a time when man sought aid entirely from heaven—when he prayed to the deaf sky. There was a time when the world depended upon the supernaturalist. That time in Christendom has passed. We now depend upon the naturalist—not upon the disciple of faith, but upon the discoverer of facts—upon the demonstrator of truth. At last we are beginning to build upon a solid foundation, and just as we progress the supernatural must die.

THE RELIGION OF RECIPROCITY.

Religion of the supernatural kind will fade from this world, and in its place we will hav reason. In the place of the worship of something we know not of, will be the religion of mutual love and assistance—the great religion of reciprocity. Superstition must go. Science will remain. The church, however, dies a little hard. The brain of the world is not yet developed. There are intellectual diseases, the same as diseases of the body. Intellectual mumps and measles still afflict mankind. Whenever the new comes the old protests, and the old fights for its place as long as it has a particle of power. And we are now having the same warfare between superstition and science that there was between the stage-coach and the locomotiv. But the stage-coach had to go. It had its day of glory and power, but it is gone. It went West. In a little while it will be driven into the Pacific with the last Indian aboard. So we find that, there is the same conflict between the different sects and different schools not only of philosophy, but of medicin. Recollect that everything except the demonstrated truth is liable to die. This is the order of nature. Words die. Every language has a cemetery. Every now and then a word dies and a tombstone is erected, and across it is written the word "obsolete." New words are continually being born. There is a cradle in which a word is rocked. A thought is molded to a sound, and the child-word is born. And then comes a time when the word gets old, and wrinkled, and expressionless, and it is carried mournfully to the grave, and that is the end of it. So in the schools of medicin. You can remember, so can I, when the old allopathists reigned supreme. If there was anything the matter with a man they let out his blood. Called to his bedside, they took him to the edge of eternity with medicin, and then practiced all their art to bring him back to life. Cne can hardly imagin how perfect a constitution it took a few years ago to stand the assault of a doctor. And long after it was found to be a mistake hundreds and thousands of the old physicians clung to it, carried around with them in one pocket a bottle of jalap, and in the other a rusty lancet, sorry that they couldn't find some patient idiotic enough to allow the experiment to be made again.

THEY DIE HARD.

So these schools, and these theories, and these religions die hard. What else can they do? Like the paintings of the old masters, they are kept alive because so much money has been invested in them. Think of the amount of money that has been invested in superstition! Think of the schools that hav been founded for the more general diffusion of useless knowledge! Think of the colleges wherein men are taught that it is dangerous to think, and that they must never use their brains except in an act of faith! Think of the millions and billions of dollars that hav been expended in churches, in temples, and in cathedrals! Think of the thousands and thousands of men who depend for their living upon the ignorance of mankind! Think of those who grow rich on credulity, and who fatten on faith! Do you suppose they are going to die without a struggle? They will die if they don't struggle. What are they to do? From the bottom of my heart I sympathize with the poor clergyman that has had all his common sense educated out of him, and is now to be thrown out upon the cold and uncharitable world. His prayers are not answered; he gets no help from on high, and the pews are beginning to criticise the pulpit. What is the man to do? If he suddenly changes, he is gone. If he preaches what he really believes, he will get notice to quit. And yet if he and the congregation would come together and be perfectly honest, they would all admit they didn't believe anything of it.

"HONOR BRIGHT."

Only a little while ago a couple of ladies were riding together from a revival in a carriage late at night, and one said to the other, as they rode along: "I am going to say something that will shock you, and I beg of you never to tell it to anybody else. I am going to tell it to you." "Well, what is it?" She says: "I don't believe in the Bible." The other replied: "Neither do I." I hav often thought how splendid it would be if the ministers could but come together and say: "Now let us be honest. Let us tell each other, honor bright—as Dr. Curry did in Chicago the other day—let us tell just what we believe." They tell a story that in the old time a lot of people, about twenty, were in Texas in a little hotel, and one fellow got up before the fire, put his hands behind him, and says he: "Boys, let us all tell our real names." If the ministers and their congregations would only tell their real thoughts, they would find that they are nearly as bad as I am, and that they believe just about as little.

THEY DON'T BELIEVE IT.

Now, I hav been talking a great deal about the orthodox religion; and, if after having delivered a lecture, I would meet some good, religious person and he would say to me: "You don't tell it as we believe it." "Well, but I tell it as you hav it written in your creed." "Oh, well," he says, "we don't mind that any more." "Well, why don't you change it?" "Oh, well," he says, "we understand it." Perhaps the creed is in the best possible position for them now. There is a tacit understanding that they don't believe it. There is a tacit understanding that they hav some way to get around it, that they read between the lines; and if they should meet now to form a creed they might fail to agree; and the creed is now so that they can say as they please except in public. Whenever they do so in public, the church, in self-defense, must try them; and I believe in trying every minister that doesn't preach the doctrin as he agrees to. I hav not the slightest sympathy with a Presbyterian preacher who endeavors to preach Infidelity from his pulpit and receive Presbyterian money. When he changes his views he must step down and out like a man, and say: "I don't believe your doctrin, and I will not preach it. You must hire some bigger fool than I am."

QUESTIONING THE CREED.

But I find that I get the creed very nearly right. To-day there was put into my hands the new Congregational creed. I hav just read it, and I thought I would call your attention to it to-night, to find whether the church has made any advance; to find whether it has been affected by the light of science; to find whether the sun of knowledge has risen in the heavens in vain; whether they are still the children of intellectual darkness; whether they still consider it necessary for you to believe something that you by no possibility can understand in order to be a winged angel forever. Now, let us see what their creed is. I will read a little of it. They commence by saying that they "believe in one God, the Father Almight, maker of heaven and of earth, and of all things visible and invisible." I am perfectly willing that he should make the invisible if they want him to. They say, now, that there is this one personal God, that he is the maker of the universe and its ruler. I again ask the old question, Of what did he make it? If matter has not existed through eternity, then this God made it. Of what did he make it? What did he use for the purpose? There was nothing in the universe except this God. What had the God been doing for the eternity he had been living? He had made nothing—called nothing into existence; never had had an idea, because it is impossible to hav an idea unless there is something to excite an idea. What had he been doing? Why doesn't the Congregational church tell us? How do they know about this infinit being? And if he is infinit, how can they comprehend him? What good is it to believe in something that you know you don't understand—that you never can understand? In the old creeds they described this God as a being without body and parts or passions. I defy any man in the world to write a better description of nothing. You cannot conceive of a finer word-painting of a vacuum than a something without body and parts or passions. And yet this God, without passions, is a jealous God, whose anger burneth to the lowest hell. This God, without passions, loves the whole human race, and this God, without passions, damns a large majority of the same. So, too, he is the ruler of the world, and I find here that we find "his providence in the government of the nations?" What nations? What evidence can you find, if you are absolutely honest and not frightened, in the history of nations that this universe is presided over by an infinitly wise and good God? How do you account for Russia? How do you account for Siberia? How do you account for the fact that whole races of men toiled beneath the master's lash for ages without recompense and without reward? How do you account for the fact that babies were sold from the arms of mothers—arms that had been reached toward God in supplication? How do you account for it? How do you account for the existence of martyrs? How do you account for the fact that this God allows people to be burnt simply for loving him? How do you account for the fact that justice doesn't always triumph? How do you account for the fact that innocence is not a perfect shield? How do you account for the fact that the world has been filled with pain, and grief, and tears? How do you account for the fact that people hav been swallowed by volcanoes, swept from the earth by storms, dying by famin, if there is above us a ruler who is infinitly good and infinitly powerful?

FROM THE RURAL DISTRICTS.

I don't say there is none. I don't know. As I hav said before, this is the only planet I was ever on. I liv in one of the rural districts of the universe. I know about these things just as much as the clergy. And if they know no more about the other world than they do about this it is not worth mentioning. How do they answer all this? They say that God "permits it." What would you say of me if I stood by and saw a ruffian beat out the brains of a child when I had full and perfect power to prevent it? You would say truthfully that I was as bad as the murderer. That is what you would say. Is it possible for this God to prevent it? Then, if he doesn't, he is a fiend; he is not good. But they say he "permits it." What for? So we may hav freedom of choice. What for? So that God may find, I suppose, who are good and who are bad. Didn't he know that when he made us? Did he not know exactly just what he was making? Why should he make those whom he knew would be criminals? If I should make a machine that would walk your streets and commit murder you would hang me. Why not? And if God made a man who he knew would commit murder, then God is guilty of that murder. If God made a man knowing he would beat his wife, that he would starve his children, that he would strew on either side of his path of life the wrecks of ruined homes, then I say the being who called that wretch into existence is directly responsible. And yet we are to find the providence of God in the history of nations. What little I hav read shows me that when man has been helped, man had to do it; when the chains of slavery hav been broken, they hav been broken by man; when something bad has been done in the government of mankind, it is easy to trace it to man, and to fix the responsibility upon human beings. You will not look to the sky; you need throw neither praise nor blame; you can find the efficient causes nearer home—right here.

THE LOVE OF GOD.

What is the next thing I find in this creed? "We believe that man was made in the image of God, that he might know, love, and obey God, and enjoy him forever." I don't believe that anybody ever did love God, because nobody ever knew anything about him. We love each other. We love something that we know. We love something that our experience tells us is good and great, and good and beautiful. We can not by any possibility love the unknown. We can love truth, because truth adds to human happiness. We can love justice, because it preserves human joy. We can love charity. We can love every form of goodness that we know or of which we can conceive, but we cannot love the infinitly unknown. And how can we be made in the image of something that has neither body and parts nor passions. "That our first parents, by disobedience, fell under the condemnation of God, and that all men are so alienated from God that there is no salvation from the guilt and power of sin except through God's redeeming power." Is there an intelligent man or woman now in the world who believes in the Garden of Eden story? If there is, strike here [tapping his forehead], and you will hear an echo. Something is for rent. Does any human being now believe that God made man of dust, and a woman of a rib, and put them in a garden, and put a tree in the middle of it? Wasn't there room outside of the garden to put his tree, if he didn't want people to eat his apples?

If I didn't want a man to eat my fruit I would not put him in my orchard.

THE "SNAKE STORY."

Does anybody now believe in the snake story? I pity any man or woman who, in this nineteenth century, believes in that childish fable. Why did they disobey? Why, they were tempted. Who by? The devil. Who made the devil? What did he make him for? Why didn't he tell Adam and Eve about this fellow? Why didn't he watch the devil instead of watching Adam and Eve? Instead of turning them out, why didn't he keep him from getting in? Why didn't he hav his flood first and drown the devil, before he made man and woman?

And yet people who call themselvs intelligent—professors in colleges and presidents of venerable institutions—teach children, and young men who ought to be children, that the Garden of Eden story is an absolute historical fact! Well, I guess it will not be long until that will fade from the imagination of men. I defy any man to think of a more childish thing. This God waiting around there, knowing all the time what would happen—made them on purpose so it would happen—and then what does he do? Holds all of us responsible; and we were not there. Here is a representativ before the constituency had been born. Before I am bound by a representativ, I want a chance to vote for or against him; and if I had been there and known all the circumstances, I should hav voted against him. And yet I am held responsible.

THE ATONEMENT.

What did Adam do? I cannot see that it amounted to much anyway. A God that can ereate something out of nothing ought not to hav complained of the loss of an apple. I can hardly hav patience to speak upon such a subject.

Now, that absurdity gave birth to another—that, while we could be rightfully charged with the rascality of somebody else, we could also be credited with the virtues of somebody else; and the atonement is the absurdity which offsets the other absurdity of the fall of man. Let us leave them both out; it reads a great deal better with both of them out; it makes better sense.

Now, in consequence of that, everybody is alienated from God. How? Why? Oh, we are all depraved, you know; we all want to do wrong. Well, why? Is that because we are depraved? No. Why do we make so many mistakes? Because there is only one right way, and there is almost an infinit number of wrong ones; and as long as we are not perfect in our intellects we must make mistakes. There is no darkness but ignorance; and alienation, as they call it, from God is simply a lack of intellect upon our part. Why were we not given better brains? That may account for the alienation. But the church teaches that every soul that finds its way to the shore of this world is against God—naturally hates God; that the little dimpled child in the cradle is simply a chunk of depravity. Everybody against God! It is a libel upon the human race; it is a libel upon all the men who hav worked for wife and child; it is a libel upon all the wives who hav suffered and labored, wept and worked, for children; it is a libel upon all the men who hav died for their country; it is a libel upon the human race. Leave out the history of the church, and there is nothing in this world to prove the depravity of man left.

Everybody that comes is against God. Every soul, they think, is like the wrecked Irishman. He was wrecked in the sea, and drifted to an unknown island, and as he climbed up the shore he saw a man and said to him, "Hav you a government here?" The man, said, "We hav." "Well," said he, "I am agin' it!" The church teaches us that that is the attitude of every soul in the universe of God. Ought a God to take any credit to himself for making depraved people? A God that cannot make a soul that is not totally depraved, I respectfully suggest, should retire from the business. And if a God has made us, knowing that we would be totally depraved, why should we go to the same being for repairs?

THE SECOND BIRTH.

What is the next? "That all men are so alienated from God that there is no salvation from the guilt and power of his sin except through God's redeeming grace."

Reformation is not enough. If the man who steals becomes perfectly honest, that is not enough; if the man who hates his fellow-man changes and loves his fellow-man, that is not enough; he must go through that mysterious thing called the second birth; he must be born again. That is not enough unless he has faith; he must believe something that he does not understand. Reformation is not enough; there must be what they call conversion. I deny it. According to the church, nothing so excites the wrath of God—nothing so corrugates the brow of Jehovah with revenge—as a man relying on his own good works. He must admit that he ought to be damned, and that of the two he prefers it, before God will consent to save him. I saw a man the other day, and he said to me, "I am a Unitarian Universalist; that is what I am." Said I: "What do you mean by that?" "Well," said he, "here is what I mean; the Unitarian thinks he is to good to be damned, and the Universalist thinks God is too good to damn him; and I believe them both."

THE CONGREGATIONAL CREED.

What is the next thing in this great creed?

"We believe that the scriptures of the Old and New Testaments are the record of God's revelation of himself in the work of redemption; that they are written by men under the special guidance of the holy spirit; and that they constitute an authoritativ standard by which religious teaching and human conduct are to be regulated and judged."

This is the creed of the Congregational church; that is, it is the result of the high joint commission appointed to draw up a creed for their churches; and there we hav the statement that the Bible was written "by men under the special guidance of the holy spirit." What part of the Bible? All of it. All of it; and yet what is this Old Testament that was written by an infinitly good God? The being who wrote it did not know the shape of the world he had made. The being who wrote it knew nothing of human nature; he commands men to love him, as if one could love upon command. The same God upheld the institution of human slavery; and the church says the Bible that upholds that institution was written by men under the guidance of the holy spirit. Then I disagree with the holy ghost upon that institution.

This church tells us that men under the guidance of the holy ghost upheld the institution of polygamy—I deny it; that under the guidance of the holy ghost these men upheld wars of extermination and conquest—I deny it; that under the guidance of the holy ghost these men wrote that it was right for a man to destroy the life of his wife if she happened to differ with him on the subject of religion—I deny it. And yet that is the book now upheld in this creed of the Congregational church. If the devil had written upon the subject of slavery, which side would he hav taken? Let every minister answer, honor bright. If you knew the devil had written a little work on human slavery, in your judgment would he uphold slavery or denounce it? Would you regard it as any evidence that he ever wrote it if it upheld slavery? And yet here you hav a work upholding slavery, and you say that it was written by an infinitly good, wise, and beneficent God! If the devil upheld polygamy, would you be surprised? If the devil wanted to kill somebody for differing with him, would you be surprised? If the devil told a man to kill his wife, would you be astonished? And yet, you say, that is exactly what the God of us all did. If there be a God, then that creed is blasphemy. That creed is a libel upon him who sits upon heaven's throne. I want—if there be a God—I want him to write in the book of his eternal remembrance that I denied these lies for him.

I do not believe in a slaveholding God; I do not worship a polygamous holy ghost. I will not get upon my knees before any being who commands a husband to slay his wife because she expresses her honest thought.

GOD NOT AN AUTHOR.

Did it ever occur to you that if God wrote the Old Testament, and told the Jews to crucify or kill anybody that disagreed with them on religion, and that God afterwards took upon himself flesh and came to Jerusalem, and taught a different religion, and the Jews killed him—did it ever occur to you that he reaped exactly what he had sown? Did it ever occur to you that he fell a victim to his own tyranny, and was destroyed by his own law? Of course I do not believe that any God ever was the author of the Bible, or that any God was ever crucified, or that any God was ever killed, or ever will be, but I want to ask you that question.

Take this Old Testament, then, with all its stories of murder and massacre; with all its foolish and cruel fables; with all its infamous doctrins: with its spirit of caste; with its spirit of hatred, and tell me whether it was written by a good God. Why, if you will read the maledictions and curses of that book, you would think God, like Lear, had divided heaven among his daughters, and then, in the insanity of despair, had launched his curses upon the human race.

And yet, I must say—I must admit—that the Old Testament is better than the New. In the Old Testament, when God got a man dead, he let him alone. When he saw him quietly in his grave he was satisfied. The muscles relaxed, and a smile broke over the divine face. But in the New Testament the trouble commences just at death. In the New Testament God is to wreak his revenge forever and ever. It was reserved for one who said, "Love your enemies," to tear asunder the veil between time and eternity and fix the horrified gaze of men upon the gulfs of eternal fire. The New Testament is just as much worse than the Old as hell is worse than sleep, just as much worse as infinit cruelty is worse than annihilation; and yet the New Testament is pointed to as a gospel of love and peace.

THE REIGN OF TRUTH AND LOVE.

But "more of that hereafter," as the ministers say. "We believe that Jesus Christ came to establish among men the kingdom of God, the reign of truth and love, of righteousness and peace." Well, that may hav been the object of Jesus Christ. I do not deny it. But what was the result? The Christian world has caused more war than all the rest of the world besides; all the cunning instruments of death hav been devised by Christians; all the wonderful machinery by which the brains are blown out of a man, by which nations are conquered and subdued—all these machines hav been born in Christian brains. And yet he came to bring peace, they say; but the Testament says otherwise: "I came not to bring peace, but a sword." And the sword was brought. What are the Christian nations doing to-day in Europe? Is there a solitary Christian nation that will trust any other? How many millions of Christians are in the uniform of everlasting forgivness, loving their enemies?

There was an old Spaniard upon the bed of death, and he sent for a priest, and the priest told him that he would hav to forgiv his enemies before he died. He says, "I hav not any." "What! no enemies?" "Not one," said the dying man, "I killed the last one three weeks ago."

How many millions of Christians are now armed and equipped to destroy their fellow-Christians? Who are the men in Europe crying out against war? Who wishes to hav the nations disarmed? Is it the church? No; it is the men who do not believe in what they call this religion of peace. When there is a war, and when they make a few thousand widows and orphans, when they strew the plain with dead patriots, then Christians assemble in their churches and sing "Te Deum Laudamus" to God. Why? Because he has enabled a few of his children to kill some others of his children. This is the religion of peace—the religion that invented the Krupp gun that will hurl a bullet weighing 2,000 pounds through twenty-four inches of solid steel. This is the religion of peace, that covers the sea with men-of-war, clad in mail, all in the name of universal forgivness.

THE WARS IT BROUGHT.

What effect had this religion upon the nations of the earth? What hav the nations of the earth been fighting about? What was the Thirty Years' War in Europe for? What was the war in Holland for? Why was it that England persecuted Scotland? Why is it that England persecutes Ireland even unto this day? At the bottom of every one of these conflicts you will find a religious question. The religion of Jesus Christ, as preached by his church, causes war, bloodshed, hatred, and all uncharitableness; and why? Because they say a certain belief is necessary to salvation. They do not say, if you behave yourself pretty well you will get there; they do not say, if you pay your debts and love your wife and love your children, and are good to your friends, and your neighbors, and your country, you will get there; that will do you no good; you hav got to believe a certain thing. Oh, yes, no matter how bad you are, you can instantly be forgiven then; and no matter how good you are, if you fail to believe that, the moment you get to the day of judgment nothing is left but to damn you forever, and all the angels will shout "hallelujah."

What do they teach to-day? Every murderer goes to heaven; there is only one step from the gallows to God; only one jerk between the halter and heaven. That is taught by this same church. I believe there ought to be a law to prevent the slightest religious consolation being given to any man who has been guilty of murder. Let a Catholic understand that if he imbrues his hands in his brother's blood, he can hav no extreme unction; let it be understood that he can hav no forgivness through the church; and let the Protestant understand that when he has committed that crime the community will not pray him into heaven. Let him go with his victim. The victim, you know, dying in his sins, goes to hell, and the murderer has the happiness of seeing him there. And if heaven grows dull and monotonous, the murderer can again giv life to the nerve of pleasure by watching the agony of his victim. I am opposed to that kind of forgivness. And yet that is the religion of universal peace to everybody.

PREVALENCE OF THE KINGDOM.

Now, what is the next thing that I wish to call your attention to?

"We believe in the ultimate prevalence of the kingdom of Christ over all the earth."

What makes you? Do you judge from the manner in which you are getting along now? How many people are being born a year? About fifty millions. How many are you converting a year; really, truthfully? Five or six thousand. I think I hav overstated the number. Is orthodox Christianity on the increase? No. There are a hundred times as many unbelievers in orthodox Christianity as there were ten years ago. What are you doing in the missionary world? How long is it since you converted a Chinaman? A fine missionary religion, to send missionaries with their Bibles and tracts to China, but if a Chinaman comes here, mob him, simply to show him the difference between the practical and theoretical workings of the Christian religion. How long since you hav had a convert in India? In my judgment, never; there never has been an intelligent Hindoo converted from the time the first missionary put his foot upon that soil; and never, in my judgment, has an intelligent Chinaman been converted since the first missionary touched that shore. Where are they? We hear nothing of them, except in the reports. They get money from poor old ladies, trembling on the edge of the grave, and go and tell them stories, how hungry the average Chinaman is for a copy of the New Testament, and paint the sad condition of a gentleman in the interior of Africa without the work of Dr. McCosh, longing for a copy of the Princeton Review. In my judgment, it is a book that would suit a savage. Thus money is scared from the dying and frightened from the old and feeble. About how long is it before this kingdom is to be established?

THE RESURRECTION.

What is the next thing here? They also believe in the resurrection of the dead, and in their Confession of Faith hereto attached I find they also believe in the resurrection of the body. Does anybody believe that that has ever thought? Here is a man, for instance, that weighs 200 pounds, and gets sick and dies weighing 120; how much will he weigh in the morning of the resurrection? Here is a cannibal, who eats another man; and we know that the atoms that you eat go into your body and become a part of you. After the cannibal has eaten the missionary, and appropriated his atoms to himself, and then he dies, whom will the atoms belong to in the morning of the resurrection in an action of replevin brought by the missionary against the cannibal? It has been demonstrated again and again that there is no creation in nature, and no destruction in nature. It has been demonstrated again and again that the atoms that are in us hav been in millions of other beings; grown in the forest, in the grass, blossomed in the flowers, been in the metals; in other words, there are atoms in each one of us that hav been in millions of others, and when we die these atoms return to the earth, and again spring in vegetation, taken up in the leaves of the trees, turned into wood. And yet we hav a church, in the nineteenth century, getting up this doctrin, presided over by professors, by presidents of colleges, and by theologians, who tell us that they believe in the resurrection of the body.

They know better. There is not one so ignorant as not to know better.

THE JUDGMENT-DAY.

And what is the next thing? "And in a final judgment." It will be a set day. All of us will be there, and the thousands, and millions, and billions, and trillions, and quadrillions that hav died will be there. It will be the day of judgment, and the books will be opened, and our case will be called. Does anybody believe in that now that has got the slightest sense?—one who knows enough "to chew gum without a string?" "The issues of which are everlasting punishment for the wicked and everlasting life for the redeemed." That is the doctrin to-day of the Congregational church, and that is the doctrin that I oppose. That is the doctrin that I defy and deny.

MOHAMMED.

But I must hasten on. Now, this comes to us after all the discussion that has been, and we are told that this religion is finally to conquer this world. This is the same religion that failed to successfully meet the hordes of Mohammed. Mohammed wrested from the disciples of the cross the fairest part of Europe. It was known that he was an impostor. They knew he was, because the people of Mecca said so, and they knew that Christ was not, because the people of Jerusalem said he was. This impostor wrested from the disciples of Christ the fairest part of Europe, and that fact sowed the seed of distrust and Infidelity in the minds of the Christian world. And the next was an effort to rescue from the Infidels the empty sepulcher of Christ. That commenced in the eleventh century, and ended in 1291. Europe was almost depopulated. For every man who owed a debt, the debt was discharged if he put a cross upon his breast and joined the Crusades. No matter what crime he had committed, the doors of the prison were opened for him to join the Crusades. And what was the result? They believed that God would giv them victory over the Infidel, and they carried in front of the first crusade a goat and a goose, believing that both those animals had been blessed by the indwelling of the Holy Ghost. And I may say that those same animals are in the lead to-day in the orthodox world. Until 1291 they endeavored to get that sepulcher, until finally the hosts of Christ were driven back baffled, beaten, and demoralized—a poor, miserable, religious rabble. They were driven back, and that fact sowed the seeds of distrust in Christendom. You know at that time the world believed in trial by battle—that God would take the side of right—and there had been a trial by battle between the cross and Mohammed, and Mohammed had been victorious.

HOW ART WAS SAVED?

Well, what was the next? You know when Christianity come into power it destroyed every statue it could lay its ignorant hands upon. It defaced and obliterated every painting; it destroyed every beautiful building; it destroyed the manuscripts both Greek and Latin: it destroyed all the history, all the poetry, all the philosophy, it could find, and burnt every library that it could reach with its torch. And the result was the night of the Middle Ages fell upon the human race. But by accident, by chance, by oversight, a few of the manuscripts escaped the fury of religious zeal; a few statues had been buried, and the result was that these manuscripts became the seed the fruit of which is our civilization of to-day. A few forms of beauty were dug from the earth that had protected them, and now the civilized world is filled with art, with painting, and with statuary, in spite of the rage of the early church.

THE DISCOVERY OF AMERICA.

What is the next blow that this church received? The discovery of America. That is the next. The Holy Ghost who inspired men to write the Bible did not know of the existence of this continent—never dreamed of it; the result was that his Bible never spoke of it. He did not dream that the earth is round. He believed it was flat, although he made it himself, and at that time heaven was just up there beyond the clouds. There was where the gods lived; there was where the angels were; and it was against that heaven that Jacob's ladder rested that the angels ascended and descended. It was to that heaven that Christ ascended after his resurrection. It was up there where the new Jerusalem was with its streets of gold, and under this earth was perdition; there was where the devils lived; there was where a pit was dug for all unbelievers, and for men who had brains; and I say that for this reason: That just in proportion that you hav brains, just in that proportion your chances for eternal joy are lessened, according to this religion. And just in proportion that you lack brains, your chances in proportion are increased. They believe under there that they discovered America! They found that the earth is round. It was circumnavigated by Magellan. In 1519 that brave man set sail. The church told him: "The earth is flat, my friend; don't go off. You will go off the edge." Magellan said, "I hav seen the shadow of the earth upon the moon, and I hav more confidence in the shadow even than I hav in the church." The ship went round. The earth was circumnavigated. Science passed its hand above it and beneath it, and where was the heaven and where was the hell? Vanished forever! And they dwell now only in the religion of superstition. We found there was no place for Jacob's ladder to lean against; no place there for the gods and angels to liv; no place there to empty the water of the deluge; no place there to which Christ could hav ascended; and the foundations of the New Jerusalem crumbled, and the towers and domes fell and became simple space—space sown with an infinit number of stars; not with New Jerusalems, but with constellations.

FIGHTING COPERNICUS.

Then man began to grow great, and with that, you know, came astronomy. Now just see what they did in that. In 1473 Copernicus was born. In 1543 his great work. In 1616 the system of Copernicus was condemned by the pope, by the infallible Catholic church, and the church is about as near right upon that subject as upon any other. The system of Copernicus was denounced. And how long do you suppose the church fought that? Let me tell you. It was revoked by Pius VII. in the year of grace 1821. For 205 years after the death of Copernicus, the church insisted that that system was false, and that the old idea was true. Astronomy is the first help that we ever received from heaven. Then came Kepler in 1609, and you may almost date the birth of science from the night that Kepler discovered his first law. That was the dawn or the day of intelligence—his first law, that the planets do not move in circles; his second law, that they described equal spaces in equal times; his third law, that there was a direct relation between weight and velocity. That man gave us a key to heaven. That man opened this infinit book, and we now read it, and he did more good than all the theologians that ever lived. I hav not time to speak of the others—of Galileo, of Leonardo da Vinci, and of hundreds of others that I could mention.

SPECIAL PROVIDENCES.

The next thing that gave this church a blow was statistics. Away went special providence. We found by taking statistics that we could tell the average length of human life; that this human life did not depend upon infinit caprice; that it depended upon conditions, circumstances, laws, and facts, and that those conditions, circumstances, and facts were ever activ. And now you will see the man who depends entirely upon special providence gets his life insured. He has more confidence even in one of these companies than he has in the whole trinity. We found by statistics that there were just so many crimes on an average committed; just so many crimes of one kind and so many of another; just so many suicides, so many deaths by drowning, just so many accidents on an average, just so many men marrying women, for instance, older than themselvs; just so many murders of a particular kind; just the same number of accidents; and I say to-night, statistics utterly demolish the idea of special providence. Only the other day a gentleman was telling me of a case of special providence. He knew it. He had been the subject of it. Yes, sir! A few years ago he was about to go on a ship, when he was detained, he didn't go, and the ship was lost and all on board. Yes! I said, "Do you think the fellows that were drowned believed in special providence?" Think of the infinit egotism of such a doctrin. Here is a man that fails to go upon a ship with five hundred passengers, and they go down to the bottom of the sea—fathers, mothers, children, and loving husbands and wives waiting upon the shores of expectation. Here is one poor little wretch that didn't happen to go! And he thinks that God, the infinit being, interfered in his poor little withered behalf, and let the rest all go. That is special providence!

THANKSGIVING.

You know we hav a custom every year of issuing a proclamation of thanksgiving. We say to God, "Although you hav afflicted all the other countries, although you hav sent war, and desolation, and famin on everybody else, we hav been such good children that you hav been kind to us, and we hope you will keep on." It don't make a bit of difference whether we hav good times or not—not a bit; the thanksgiving is always exactly the same. I remember a few years ago a governor of Iowa got out a proclamation of that kind. He went on to tell how thankful the people were, how prosperous the state had been; and there was a young fellow in that state who got out another proclamation saying: Fearing that the Lord might be misled by official correspondence, he went on to say that the governor's proclamation was entirely false; that the state was not prosperous; that the crops had been an almost entire failure; that nearly every farm in the state was mortgaged; that if the Lord did not believe him, all he asked: He would send some angel in whom he had confidence, to look the matter over for himself.

Of course I hav not time to recount the enemies of that church. Every fact is an enemy of superstition. Every fact is a heretic. Every demonstration is an Infidel. Everything that ever happened testified against the supernatural.

I hav only spoken of a few of the blows that shattered the shield and shivered the lance of superstition. Here is another one—the doctrin of Charles Darwin. This century will be called Darwin's century, one of the greatest men who ever touched this globe. He has explained more of the phenomena of life than all of the religious teachers. Write the name of Charles Darwin there (on the one hand) and the name of every theologian that ever lived there (on the other hand), and from that name has come more light to the world than from all those. His doctrin of evolution, his doctrin of the survival of the fittest, his doctrin of the origin of species, has removed in every thinking mind the last vestige of orthodox Christianity. He has not only stated but he has demonstrated that the inspired writer knew nothing of this world, nothing of the origin of man, nothing of geology, nothing of astronomy, nothing of nature; that the Bible is a book written by ignorance—by the instigation of fear? Think of the men who replied to him. Only a few years ago there was no parson too ignorant to successfully answer Charles Darwin; and the more ignorant he was the more cheerfully he undertook the task. He was held up to the ridicule, the scorn, and the contempt of the Christian world, and yet, when he died, England was proud to put his dust with that of her noblest and her grandest. Charles Darwin conquered the intellectual world, and the doctrin of evolution is now an accepted fact. His light has broken in on some of the early clergy and the greatest man who to-day occupies the pulpit is a believer in the evolution theory of Charles Darwin—and that is Henry Ward Beecher—a man of more brains than the entire clergy of that entire church put together. And yet we are told in this little creed that orthodox religion is about to conquer the world. It will be driven to the wilds of Africa. It must go to some savage country; it has lost its hold upon civilization, and I tell you it is unfortunate to hav a religion that cannot be accepted by the intellect of a nation. It is unfortunate to hav a religion against which every good and noble heart protests. Let us hav a good one or none. Oh! my pity has been excited by seeing these ministers endeavor to warp and twist the passages of scripture to fit some demonstration in science.

These pious evasions! These solemn pretenses! When they are caught in one way they giv a different meaning to the words and say the world was not made in six days. They say, "good whiles"—epochs. And in this same confession here of faith and creeds they believe the Lord's day is holy—every seventh day. Suppose you lived near the North Pole where the day is three months long. Then which day will you keep? Suppose you could get to the North Pole you could prevent Sunday from ever overtaking you. You could walk around the other way faster than the earth could revolve. How would you keep Sunday then? Suppose we ever invent anything that can go 1,000 miles an hour. We can just chase Sunday clear around the globe. Is there anything that can be more perfectly absurd than that a space of time can be holy! You might as well talk about a pious vacuum. These pious evasions I heard the other night from an old man. He was not very well educated, you know, and he got into the notion that he must hav reading of the Bible and hav family worship; and there was a bad boy in the family—a pretty smart boy—and they were reading the Bible by course, and in the fifteenth of Corinthians is this passage: "Behold, brethren, I show you a mystery; we shall not all die, but we shall be changed." And this boy rubbed out the c in the "changed." So the next night the old man got on his specs and got down his Bible and said: "Behold, brethren, I show you a mystery; we shall not all die, but we shall be hanged." The old lady said "Father, I don't think it reads that way." He says, "Who is reading this? Yes, mother, it says be hanged, and, more than that, I see the sense of it. Pride is the besetting sin of the human heart, and if there is anything calculated to take the pride out of a man it is hanging."

I keep going back to this book; I keep going back to the miracles, to the prophecies, to the fables, and people ask me if I take away the Bible what are we going to do? How can we got along without the revelation that no one understands? What are we going to do if we hav no Bible to quarrel about? What are we to do without hell? What are we going to do with our enemies? What are we going to do with the people we love but don't like? They tell me that there never would hav been any civilization if it had not been for this Bible. Um! The Jews had a Bible; the Romans had not. Which had the greater and the grander government? Let us be honest. Which of those nations produced the greatest poets, the greatest soldiers, the greatest orators, the greatest statesmen, the greatest sculptors? Rome had no Bible. God cared nothing for the Roman empire. He let the men come up by chance. His time was taken up by the Jewish people. And yet Rome conquered the world, and even conquered God's chosen people. The people that had the Bible were defeated by the people who had not. How was it possible for Lucretius to get along without the Bible? How did the great and glorious of that empire get along without it? And what shall we say of Greece? No Bible. Compare Athens with Jerusalem. From Athens comes the beauty and intellectual grace of the world. Compare the mythology of Greece with the mythology of Judea. One covering the earth with beauty and the other filling heaven with hatred and injustice. The Hindoos had no Bible; they had been forsaken by the creator, and yet they became the greatest metaphysicians of the world. Egypt had no Bible. Compare even Egypt with Judea. What are we to do without the Bible? What became of the Jews who had the Bible? Their temple was destroyed and their city was taken; and, as I said before, they never found real prosperity until their God deserted them. Now I come again to the New Testament. There are a few things in there, I giv you my word, I cannot believe. I cannot believe in the miraculous origin of Jesus Christ. I believe he was the son of Joseph and Mary; that Joseph and Mary had been duly and legally married, that he was the legitimate offspring of that marriage, and nobody ever believed the contrary until he had been dead one hundred and fifty years. Neither Matthew, Mark, nor Luke ever dreamed that he was of divine origin. He did not say to either Matthew, Mark, or Luke, or to any one in their hearing, that he was the son of God, or that he was miraculously conceived. He did not say it. The angel Gabriel, who, they say, brought the news, never wrote a word upon the subject. His mother never wrote a word upon the subject. His father never wrote a word upon the subject. We are lacking in the matter of witnesses. I would not believe it now; I cannot believe it then. I would not believe people I know, much less would I believe people I don't know. I say that at that time Matthew, Mark, and Luke believed that he was the son of Joseph and Mary. And why? They say he descended from the blood of David, and in order to show that he was of the blood of David they gave the genealogy of Joseph. And if Joseph was not his father, why not giv the genealogy of Pontius Pilate or of Herod. Could they, by giving the genealogy of Joseph, show that he was of the blood of David if Joseph was in no way related to David? and yet that is the position into which the Christian world is now driven. It says the son of Joseph, and then interpolates the words "as was supposed." Why then do they giv a supposed genealogy? It will not do. And that is a thing that cannot in any way by any human testimony be established; and if it is important for us to know that he was the son of God, I say, then that it devolves upon God to giv us evidence. Let him write it across the face of the heavens, in every language of mankind. If it is necessary for us to believe it let it grow on every leaf next year. No man should be damned for not believing unless the evidence is overwhelming. And he ought not to be made to depend upon say so. He should hav it directly for himself. A man says God told him so and so, and he tells me, and I havn't any one's word but that fellow's. He may hav been deceived. If God has a message for me he ought to tell it to me, and not to somebody that has been dead 4,000 or 5,000 years, and in another language. God may hav changed his mind on many things; he has on slavery at least, and polygamy; and yet his church now wants to go out here and destroy polygamy in Utah with the sword. Why don't they send missionaries there with copies of the Old Testament? By reading the lives of Abraham, and Isaac, and Lot, and a few other fellows that ought to hav been in the penitentiary, they can soften their hearts.

CHRIST'S MIRACLES.

Now, there is another miracle I do not believe. I want to speak about it as we would about any ordinary transaction in the world. In the first place, I do not believe that any miracle was ever performed, and if there was you can't prove it. Why? Because it is altogether more reasonable that the people lied about it than that it happened. And why? Because according to human experience we know that people will not always tell the truth, and we never saw a miracle, and we hav got to be governed by our experience, and if we go by our experience it is in favor that the thing never happened; that the man is mistaken. Now, I want you to remember it. Here is a man that comes into Jerusalem, and the first thing he does he cures the blind. He lets the light of day visit the darkness of blindness. The eyes are opened and the whole world is again pictured upon the brain. Another man is clothed with leprosy. He touches him and the disease falls from him, and he stands pure and clean, and whole. Another man is deformed, wrinkled, bent. He touches him and throws upon him again the garment of youth. A man is in his grave, and he says, "Come forth!" And he again walks in life, feeling his heart throb and beat, and his blood going joyously through his veins. They say that happened. I don't know. There is one wonderful thing about the dead people that were raised—we don't hear of them any more. What became of them? Why, if there was a man in this town that had been raised from the dead I would go to see him to-night. I would say, "Where were you when you got the notice to come back? What kind of country is it? What kind of opening is there for a young man? How did you like it?" But nobody ever paid the slightest attention to them there. They did'nt even excite interest when they died the second time. Nobody said, "Why, that man isn't afraid. He has been there." Not a word. They pass away quietly. You see I don't believe it. There is something wrong somewhere about that business. And then there is another trouble in my mind. Now you know I may suffer eternal punishment for all this.

Here is a man that does all these things, and thereupon they crucify him. Now, then, let us be honest. Suppose a man came into Chicago and he should meet a funeral procession, and he should say, "Who is dead?" and they should say, "The son of a widow; her only support," and he should say to the procession, "Halt!" And to the undertaker, "Take out that coffin, unscrew that lid. Young man, I say unto thee, Arise!" And the latter should step from the coffin and in one moment after hold his mother in his arms. Suppose he should go to your cemetery and should find some woman holding a little child in each hand, while the tears fell upon a new-made grave, and he should say to her, "Who lies buried here?" and she should reply, "My husband," and he should say, "I say unto thee, O grave, giv up thy dead!" and the husband should rise and in a moment after hav his lips upon his wife's and the little children with their arms around his neek. Suppose that it is so. Do you think that the people of Chicago would kill him? Do you think anyone would wish to crucify him? Do you not rather believe that everyone who had a loved one out in that cemetery would go to him even upon their knees and beg him and implore him to giv back their dead? Do you believe that any man was ever crucified who was the master of death? Let me tell you to-night if there shall ever happen upon this earth the master, the monarch of death, all human knees will touch the earth; he will not be crucified; he will not be touched. All the living who fear death, all the living who hav lost a loved one, will stand and cling to him. And yet we are told that this worker of miracles, this worker of wonders, this man who could clothe the dead in the throbbing flesh of life, was crucified by the Jewish people. It was never dreamed that he did a miracle until one hundred years after he was dead.

THE RESURRECTION.

There is another miracle I do not believe—I cannot believe it—and that is the resurrection. And why? If it was the fact, if the dead got out of the grave, why did he not show himself to his enemies? Why did he not again visit Pontius Pilate? Why did he not call upon Caiaphas, the high priest? Why did he not make another triumphal entry into Jerusalem? Why did he not again enter the temple and dispute with the doctors? Why didn't he say to the multitude, "Here are the wounds in my feet, and in my hands, and in my side. I am the one you endeavored to kill, but death is my slave?" Why didn't he? Simply because the thing never happened. I can not believe it. But recollect, it makes no difference with his teachings. They are exactly as good whether he wrought miracles or not. Twice two are four; that needs no miracle. Twice two are five; a miracle would not help that. Christ's teachings are worth their effect upon the human race. It makes no difference about miracle or about wonder, but you must remember in that day everyone believed in miracles. Nobody had any standing as a teacher, a philosopher, a governor, or a king, about whom there was not something miraculous. The earth was then covered with the sons and daughters of the gods and goddesses. That was believed in Greece, in Rome, in Egypt, in Hindostan; everybody, nearly, believed in such things.

Then there is another miracle that I cannot believe in, and that is the ascension—the bodily ascension of Jesus Christ. Where was he going? Since the telescope has been pointed at the stars, where was he going? The new Jerusalem is not there. The abode of the gods is not there Where was he going? Which way did he go? That depends upon the time of day that he left. If he left in the night he went exactly the opposit way from what he would in the day. Who saw this miracle? They say the disciples. Let us see what they say about it. Matthew did not think it was worth mentioning. He doesn't speak of it at all. On the contrary, he says that the last words of Christ were: "Lo, I am with you always, even unto the end of the world." That is what he says. Mark, he saw it. "So, then, after the Lord had spoken unto them he was received up into heaven and sat on the right hand of God." That is all he has to say about the most wonderful thing that ever blessed human vision—about a miracle great enough to hav stuffed credulity to bursting; and yet we hav one poor, little meager verse. So, then, after he had quit speaking, he was caught up and sat on the right hand of God. How does he know he was on the right hand? Did he see him after he had sat down? Luke says: "And it came to pass while he blessed them he was parted from them and was carried up into heaven." But John does not mention it. He givs as his last words this address to Peter: "Follow thou me." Of course he did not say that as he ascended. In the Acts we hav another account. A conversation is given not spoken of in any of the others, and we find there two men clad in white apparel, who said: "Men of Galilee, why stand ye here gazing up into heaven? This same Jesus that was taken up into heaven shall so come in like manner as ye hav seen him go into heaven." Matthew didn't see that; Mark forgot it; Luke didn't think it was worth mentioning, and John didn't believe it, and yet upon that evidence we are led to believe that the most miraculous of all miracles actually occurred. I cannot believe it.

CASTING OUT FITS.

I may be mistaken, but the church is now trying to parry, and when they come to the little miracles of the New Testament all they say is, "Christ didn't cast out devils; these men had fits." He cured fits. Then I read in another place about the fits talking. Christ held a dialog with the fits, and the fits told him his name, and the fits at that time were in a crazy man. And the fits made a contract that they would go out of the man provided they would be permitted to go into swine. How can fits that attack a man take up a residence in swine? The church must not giv up the devil. He is the right bower. No devil, no hell; no hell, no preach; no fire, no insurance. I read another miracle, that this devil took Christ and put him on the pinnacle of a temple. Was that fits, too? Why is not the theological world honest? Why do they not come up and admit what they know the book means? They hav not the courage.

NECESSITY OF BELIEF.

Now, their next doctrin is the absolute necessity of belief. That depends upon this: Can a man believe as he wants to? Can you? Can anybody? Does belief depend at all upon the evidence? I think it does somewhat in some cases. How is it that when a jury is sworn to try a case, hearing all the evidence, hearing both sides, hearing the charge of the judge, hearing the law, and upon their oaths equally divided, six for the plaintiff and six for the defendant? It is because evidence does not hav the same effect on all people. Why? Our brains are not alike—not the same shape; we hav not the same intelligence or the same experience, the same sense. And yet I am held accountable for my belief. I must believe in the trinity—three times one is one, once one is three—and my soul is to be eternally damned for failing to guess an arithmetical conundrum. And that is the poison part of Christianity—that salvation depends upon belief—that is the poison part, and until that dogma is discarded, religion will be nothing but superstition. No man can control his belief. If I hear certain evidence I will believe a certain thing. If I fail to hear it I may never believe it. If it is adapted to my mind I may accept it; if it is not I reject it. And what am I to go by? My brain. That is the only light I hav from Nature, and if there be a God it is the only torch that this God has given me by which to find my way through the darkness and the night called life. I do not depend upon hearsay for that. I do not hav to take the word of any other man nor get upon my knees before a book. Here in the temple of the mind I go and consult the god—that is to say, my reason—and the oracle speaks to me, and I obey the oracle. What should I obey? Another man's oracle? Shall I take another man's word, and not what he thinks, but what some God said to him?

WOULDN'T KNOW A GOD.

I would not know a god if I should see one. I hav said before, and I say again, the brain thinks in spite of me, and I am not responsible for my thought. No more can I control the beating of my heart, the expansion and contraction of my lungs for a moment; no more can I stop the blood that flows through the rivers of the veins. And yet I am held responsible for by belief. Then why does not the god giv me the evidence? They say he has? In what? In an inspired book. But I do not understand it as they do. Must I be false to my understanding? They say, "When you come to die you will be sorry if you did not." Will I be sorry when I come to die that I did not liv a hypocrit? Will I be sorry I did not say I was a Christian when I was not? Will the fact that I was honest put a thorn in the pillow of death? God cannot forgiv me for that. They say that when he was in Jerusalem he forgave his murderers. Now he won't forgiv an honest man for differing with him on the subject of the trinity. They say that God says to me, "Forgiv your enemies." I say, "All right; I do," but he says, "I will damn mine." God should be consistent. If he wants me to forgiv my enemies, he should forgiv his. I am asked to forgiv enemies who can hurt me. God is only asked to forgiv enemies who cannot hurt him. He certainly ought to be as generous as he asks us to be. And I want no God to forgiv me unless I am willing to forgiv others and unless I do forgiv others. All I ask if that be true is that this God should liv according to his own doctrin. If I am to forgiv my enemies I ask him to forgiv his. That is justice, that is right. Here are these millions to-day who say, "We are to be saved by belief, by faith;" but what are we to believe?

HE HAS BEEN IN ST. LOUIS.

In St. Louis last Sunday I read an interview with a Christian minister, one who is now holding a revival. They call him the boy preacher—a name that he has borne for fifty or sixty years. The question was whether in these revivals, when they were trying to rescue souls from eternal torture, they would allow colored people to occupy seats with white people, and that revivalist, preaching the unsearchable richness of Christ, said he would not allow the colored people to sit with white people; they must go to the back of the church. The same people go and sit right next to them in heaven, swap harps with them; and yet this man, believing, as he says he does, that if he did not believe in the Lord Jesus Christ he would eternally perish, was not willing that the colored man should sit by a white man while he heard the gospel of everlasting peace. He was not willing that the colored man should get into the life-boat of Christ, although there was plenty of room; he would not let them get into the boat with white men, although those white men might be totally depraved, and if they had justice done them, according to his doctrin, would be eternally damned—and yet he has the impudence to put on airs, although he ought to be eternally damned, and go and sit by the colored men. His doctrin of religion, the color-line, has not my respect. I believe in the religion of humanity, and it is far better to love our fellowmen that to love God, because we can help them, and we cannot help him. You had better do what you can than to be always pretending to do what you cannot.

ETERNAL PUNISHMENT.

Now I come to the last part of this Bible—this creed—and that is, eternal punishment, and I hav concluded and I hav said I will never deliver a lecture that I do not giv the full benefit of its name. That part of the Congregational creed would disgrace the lowest savage that crouches and crawls in the jungles of Africa. The man who now, in the nineteenth century, preaches the doctrin of eternal punishment, the doctrin of eternal hell, has lived in vain. Think of that doctrin! The eternity of punishment! Why, I find in that same creed that Christ is finally going to triumph in this world and establish his kingdom; but if their doctrin is true he will never triumph in the other world. He will hav billions in hell forever. In this world we never will be perfectly civilized as long as a gallows casts its shadow upon the earth. As long as there is a penitentiary behind the walls of which a human being is immured, we are not a civilized people. We will never be perfectly civilized until we do away with crime and criminals. And yet according to this Christian religion God is to hav an eternal penitentiary; he is to be an everlasting jailor, an everlasting turnkey, a warden of an infinit dungeon, and he is going to keep prisoners there, not for the purpose of reforming them—because they are never going to get any better, only getting worse—just for the purpose of punishing them. And what for? For something they did in this world; born in ignorance, educated it may be in poverty, and yet responsible through the countless ages of eternity. No man can think of a greater horror; no man can think of a greater absurdity. For the growth of that doctrin ignorance was soil and fear was rain. That doctrin came from the fanged mouths of wild beasts, and yet it is the "glad tidings of great joy."

GREAT AND GOOD MEN IN HELL.

"God so loved the world" he is going to damn most everybody, and, if this Christian religion be true, some of the greatest, and grandest, and best who ever lived upon this earth are suffering its torments to-night. It don't appear to make much difference, however, with this church. They go right on enjoying themselvs as well as ever. If their doctrin is true, Benjamin Franklin, one of the wisest and best of men, who did so much to giv us here a free government, is suffering the tyranny of God to-night, while he endeavored to establish freedom among men. If the churches were honest their preachers would tell their hearers: "Benjamin Franklin is in hell, and we warn any and all the youth not to imitate Benjamin Franklin. Thomas Jefferson, the author of the Declaration of Independence, with its self-evident truths, has been damned these many years." That is what all the ministers ought to hav the courage to say. Talk as you believe. Stand by your creed or change it. I want to impress it upon your mind, because the thing I wish to do in this world is to put out the fires of hell. I want to keep at it just as long as there is one little coal red in the bottomless pit. As long as the ashes are warm I shall denounce this infamous doctrin. I want you to know that the men who founded this great and glorious government are there. The most of the men who fought in the Revolutionary war and wrested from the clutch of Great Britain this continent hav been rewarded by the eternal wrath of God. The old Revolutionary soldiers are in hell by the thousands. Let the preachers hav the courage to say so. The men who fought in 1812 and gave to the United States the freedom of the seas, nearly all of them hav been damned since 1815—all that were killed. The greatest of heroes, they are there. The greatest of poets, the greatest scientist, the men who hav made the world beautiful and grand, they are all, I tell you, among the damned if this creed is true. Humboldt, who shed light, and who added to the intellectual wealth of mankind; Goethe, and Schiller, and Lessing, who almost created the German language—all gone! All suffering the wrath of God to-night, and every time an angel thinks of one of those men he givs his harp an extra twang. Laplace, who read the heavens like an open book—he is there. Robert Burns, the poet of human love—he is there because he wrote the "Prayer of Holy Willie;" because he fastened upon the cross the Presbyterian creed, and made it a lingering crucifixion. And yet that man added to the tenderness of the human heart. Dickens, who put a shield of pity before the flesh of childhood—God is getting even with him. Our own Ralph Waldo Emerson, although he had a thousand opportunities to hear Methodist clergymen, scorned the means of grace, and the Holy Ghost is delighted that he is in hell to-night.

Longfellow refined hundreds and thousands of homes, but he did not believe in the miraculous origin of the savior. No, sir; he doubted the report of Gabriel. He loved his fellowmen; he did what he could to free the slaves; he did what he could to make mankind happy; but God was just waiting for him. He had his constable right there. Thomas Paine, the author of the "Rights of Man," offering his life in both hemispheres for the freedom of the human race, and one of the founders of the republic—it has often seemed to me that if we could get God's attention long enough to point him to the American flag, he would let him out. Comte, the author of the "Positiv Philosophy," who loved his fellow-men to that degree that he made of humanity a god, who wrote his great work in poverty, with his face covered with tears—they are getting their revenge on him now. Voltaire, who abolished torture in France; who did more for human liberty than any other man, living or dead, who was the assassin of superstition, and whose dagger still rusts in the heart of Catholicism—all the priests who hav been translated hav their happiness increased by looking at Voltaire. Glorious country, where the principal occupation is watching the miseries of the lost! Giordani Bruno, Benedict Spinoza, Diderot, the encyclopedist, who endeavored to get all knowledge in a small compass so that he could put the peasant on an equality with the prince, intellectually, the man who wished to sow all over the world the seeds of knowledge; who loved to labor for mankind. While the priests wanted to burn, he did all he could to put out the fire—he has been lost long, long ago. His cry for water has become so common that his voice is now recognized through all the realms of hell, and they say to one another, "That is Diderot." David Hume, the philosopher, he is there with the rest. Beethoven, the Shakspere of music, he has been lost; and Wagner, the master of melody, and who has made the air of this world rich forever, he is there, and they hav better music in hell than in heaven. Shelley, whose soul, like his own Skylark, was a winged joy—he has been damned for many, many years; and Shakspere, the greatest of the human race, who has done more to elevate mankind than all the priests who ever lived and died, he is there; and all the founders of inquisitions, the builders of dungeons, the makers of chains, the inventors of instruments of torture, tearers and burners and branders of human flesh, stealers of babes and sellers of husbands and wives and children, the drawers of the swords of persecution, and they who kept the horizon lurid with the fagot's flame for a thousand years—they are in heaven to-night. Well, I wish heaven joy in such company.

OBJECTIONS TO FAITH.

And that is the doctrin with which we are polluting the souls of children. That is the doctrin that puts a fiend by their dying bed and a prophecy of hell over every cradle. That is "glad tidings of great joy." Only a little while ago, when the great flood came upon the Ohio, sent by him who is ruling in the world and paying particular attention to the affairs of nations, just in the gray of the morning they saw a house floating down, and on its top a human being; and a few men went out to the rescue in a little boat, and they found there a mother, a woman, and they wanted to rescue her, and she said: "No; I am going to stay where I am. I hav three dead babes in this house." Think of a love so limitless, stronger and deeper than despair and death, and yet the Christian religion says that if that woman did not happen to believe in their creed, God would send that mother's soul to eternal fire. If there is another world, and if in heaven they wear hats, when such a woman climbs up the opposit bank of the Jordan, Christ should lift his to her.

MISSIONARIES.

That is the trouble I had with this Christian religion, its infinit heartlessness; and I cannot tell them too often that during our last war Christians who knew that if they were shot they would go right to heaven went and hired wicked men to take their places, perfectly willing the men should go to hell provided they could stay at home. You see they are not honest in it, they do not believe it, or, as the people say, "they don't sense it," they hav not religion enough to conceive what it is they believe and what a terrific falsehood they assert. And I beg of every one who hears me to-night, I beg, I implore, I beseech you never giv another dollar to build a church in which that lie is preached. Never giv another cent to send a missionary with his mouth stuffed with that falsehood to a foreign land. Why, they say, the heathen will go to heaven any way if you let them alone; what is the use of sending them to hell by enlightening them? Let them alone. The idea of going and telling a man a thing that if he does not believe he will be damned, when the chances are ten to one that he won't believe it. Don't tell him, and as quick as he gets to the other world and finds it is necessary to believe he will say "yes." Giv him a chance. My objection to the Christian religion is that it destroys human love, and tells you and me that the love of your dear ones is not necessary in this world to make a heaven in the next. No matter about your wife, your children, your brother, your sister—no matter about all the affections of the human heart—when you get there you will be along with the angels. I don't know whether I would like the angels? I don't know whether the angels would like me. I would rather stand by the folks who hav loved me and whom I know; and I can conceive of no heaven without the loved of this earth. That is the trouble with this Christian religion; leave your father, leave your mother, leave your wife, leave your children, leave everything and follow Jesus Christ. I will not. I will stay with the folks. I will not sacrifice on the altar of a selfish fear all the grandest and noblest promptings of my heart. You do away with human love, and what are we without it? What would we be in another world, and what would we be here without it? Can any one conceive of music without human love? Human love builds every home—human love is the author of all the beauty in this world. Love paints every picture, and chisels every statue; love, I tell you, builds every fireside. What could heaven be without love? And yet that is what we are promised—a heaven with your wife lost, your mother lost, some of your children gone. And you expect to be made happy by falling in with some angel. Such a religion is demoralizing.

And how are you to get there? On the efforts of another. You are to be perpetually a heavenly pauper, and you will hav to admit through all eternity that you never would hav got there if you hadn't got frightened. "I am here," you will say, "I hav these wings, I hav this musical inetrument, because I was sacred." What a glorious world! And then think of it—no reformation in the next world—not the slightest. If you die in Arkansas, that is the end of you. At the end you will be told that, being born in Arkansas, you had a fair chance. Think of telling a boy in the next world, who lived and died in Delaware, that he had a fair show! Can anything be more infamous? All on an equality—the rich and the poor, those with parents loving them, those with every opportunity for education, on an equality with the poor, the abject, and the ignorant—and this little ray called life, this little moment with a shadow and a tear, this little space between your mother's arms and the grave, that balances an entire eternity. And God can do nothing for you when you get there. A little Methodist preacher can do more for the soul here than its creator can when you get there. The soul goes to heaven, where there is nothing but good society; no bad examples; and they are all there, father, son, and holy ghost, and yet they can do nothing for that poor unfortunate except to damn him. Is there any sense in that? Why should this be a period of probation? It says in the Bible, I believe, "Now is the accepted time." When does that mean? That means whenever the passage is pronounced. Now is the accepted time. It will be the same to-morrow, won't it? And just as appropriate then as to-day, and if appropriate at any time, appropriate through all eternity. What I say is this: There is no world—there can be no world—in which every human being will not hav an opportunity of doing right. That is my objection to this Christian religion, and if the love of earth is not the love of heaven, if those who love us here are to be separated there, then I want eternal sleep. Giv me a good cold grave rather than the furnace of Jehovah's wrath. Gabriel, don't blow! Let me alone! If, when the grave bursts, I am not to meet the faces that hav been my sunshine in this life, let me sleep on. Rather than that the doctrin of endless punishment should be true, I would like to see the fabric of our civilization crumble and fall to unmeaning chaos and to formless dust, where oblivion broods and memory forgets. I would rather a Samson of some imprisoned force released by thoughtless chance should so wreck and strand the world that man, in stress and strain of want and fear, should shudderingly crawl back to savage and barbaric night; I would rather that every planet should in its soundless orbit wheel a barren star, on which the light will fall as fruitlessly as falls the gaze of love upon the cold, pathetic face of death, than that the Christian religion should be true.

WHAT HE BELIEVES.

I think it is better to love your children than to love God, a thousand times better, because you can help them, and I am inclined to think that God can get along without you. I believe in the religion of the family. I believe that the roof-tree is sacred from the smallest fiber held in the soft, moist clasp of the earth to the little blossom on the topmost bough that givs its fragrance to the happy air. The family where virtue dwells with love is like a lily with a heart of fire—the fairest flower in all this world. And I tell you God cannot afford to damn a man in the next world who has made a happy family in this. God cannot afford to cast over the battlements of heaven the man who has built a happy home here. God cannot afford to be unpitying to a human heart capable of pity. God cannot clothe with fire the man who has clothed the naked here; and God cannot send to eternal pain a man who has done something toward improving the condition of his fellow-man. If he can I had rather go to hell than to heaven and keep the company of such a God.

They tell me the next terrible thing I do is to take the hope of immortality; I do not, I would not, I could not. Immortality was first dreamed of by human love, and yet the church is going to take human love out of immortality. We love, therefore we wish to liv. A loved one dies and we wish to meet again, and from the affection of the human heart grew the great oak of the hope of immortality. And around that oak has climbed the poisonous vine superstition. Theologians, pretenders, soothsayers, parsons, priests, popes, bishops hav taken all that hope, and they hav had the impudence to stand by the grave and prophesy a future of pain. They hav erected their toll-gates on the highway to the other world and hav collected it from their fear. The church did not giv us the idea of immortality, the Bible did not giv us the idea of immortality; let me tell you now the Old Testament tells you how you lost immortality; it does not say a word about another world from the first mistake in Genesis to the last curse in Malachi. There is not in the Old Testament one burial service.

No man in the Old Testament stands by the dead and says, "I will meet them again"—not one word. From the top of Sinai came no hope of another world. And when we get to the New Testament, what do we find there? "Hav thy heart counted worthy to obtain that world and the resurrection of the dead." As though some would be counted unworthy to obtain the resurrection of the dead. And in another place: "Seek for honor, glory, immortality." If you hav got it, why seek for it. And in another place: "God, who alone hath immortality;" and yet they tell us that we get our idea of immortality from the Bible. I deny it. If Christ was in fact God, why didn't he plainly say there was another life. Why didn't he tell us something about it? Why didn't he turn the tear-stained hope of immortality into the glad knowledge of another life?

Why did he go dumbly to his death and leave the world in darkness and in doubt? Why? Because he was a man and didn't know. I would not destroy the smallest star of human hope, but I deny that we got our idea of immortality from the Bible. It existed long before Moses existed. We find it symbolized through all Egypt, through all India. Wherever man has lived his religion has another world in which to meet the lost. It is not born of the Bible. The idea of immortality, like the great sea, has ebbed and flowed in the human heart, beating with its countless waves of hope and fear against the shores and rocks of fate and time. It was not born of the Bible. It was born of the human heart, and it will continue to ebb and flow beneath the mists and clouds of doubt and darkness as long as love kisses the lips of death. We do not know. We do not prophesy a life of pain. We leave the dead with nature, the mother of us all, under a seven-hued bow of hope. Under the seven-hued arch let the dead sleep.

"Ah, but you take the consolation of religion." What consolation has religion for the widow of the unbeliever, the widow of a good, brave, kind man who lies dead? What can the orthodox ministers say to relieve the bursting heart of that woman? What can the orthodox ministers say to relieve the aching hearts of the little orphans as they kneel by the grave of that father, if that father didn't happen to be an orthodox Christian? What consolation hav they? I find that when a Christian loses a friend the tears spring from his eyes as quickly as from the eyes of others. Their tears are as bitter as ours. Why? The echo of the promises spoken eighteen hundred years ago is so low, and the sound of the clods upon the coffin so loud, the promises are so far away, and the dead are so near. That is the reason. And they find no consolation there. I say honestly we do not know; we cannot say. We do not know, cannot say whether death is a wall or a door; the beginning or end of a day; the spreading of pinions to soar, or the folding forever of wings; the rise or the set of a sun, or an endless life that brings the rapture of love to every one—we do not know; we cannot say.

AN OLD FABLE.

There is an old fable of Orpheus and Eurydice: Eurydice had been captured and taken to the infernal regions, and Orpheus went after her, taking with him his harp and playing as he went; and when he came to the infernal regions he began to play, and Sisyphus sat down upon the stone that he had been heaving up the side of the mountain for so many years, and which continually rolled back upon him; Ixion paused upon his wheel of fire; Tantalus ceased in his vain efforts for water; the daughters of Danaides left off trying to fill their seives with water; Pluto smiled, and for the first time in the history of hell the cheeks of the Furies were wet with tears; monsters relented and they said, "Eurydice may go with you, but you must not look back." So he again threaded the caverns, playing as he went, and as he again reached the light he failed to hear the footsteps of Eurydice, and he looked back and in a moment she was gone. This old fable givs to us the idea of the perpetual effort to rescue truth from the clutches of monsters. Some time Orpheus will not look back. Some day Eurydice will reach the blessed light, and at some time there will fade from the memory of men the superstition of religion.

An Enormous Expenditure and Small Results.

According to Mrs. Knox of Elmira, who delivered an address on Wednesday before the Presbyterian Women's Foreign Mission Society, the whole of Christendom gives "only $6.000,000 a year, or six-tenths of a cent each, for the conversion of the heathen."

It seems to us that six millions a year is far from an insignificant sum. It is, indeed, an enormous contribution toward the conversion of the heathen, and must represent a vast amount of individual self-denial.

Instead of speaking contemptuously of this magnificent offering, Mrs. Knox had reason for astonishment that the great flow of money to spread the gospel in the heathen countries continued to be so great, despite the stubborn refusal of heathendom to be converted.

Rather let her ask, What are the results accomplished by means of so vast an annual expenditure? Are these millions so laid out as to produce the best effect, or is much of the money squandered because it is devoted to the maintenance of the missions of rival religious denominations and the teaching of more or less conflicting religious doctrins? How many genuin converts are actually made yearly among the heathens?

Besides, paganism is now spreading throughout Christendom at a most alarming rate. Infidelity is menacing the church in Europe and America as never before. It seems to us, therefore, that Christians hav their hands full at home.

Take New York, for instance; a vast majority of the people are no more followers of the precepts of the Christ and no more believers in the fundamental doctrins of Christian theology than the inhabitants of Calcutta, or Pekin, or Yokohama.—Sun.

A Freethought Romance.

Waifs and Wanderings.

BY SAMUEL P. PUTNAM.

CHAPTER XXVI.—CONTINUED.

"Is it possible that he'll worry through?" said Cupples. "One chance out of a hundred and that's all. If the water's deep enough, he may weather it, for he's like a cat—giv him a chance, he's always right side up with care. I'll wait, and, meantime, get a square meal. If he don't share it with me, I can eat it all myself. I won't object to double rations."

Several hours passed by. Cupples had to eat his meal in utter loneliness. The gorgeous sunset came with its many colored banners, and, for one bright hour, held carnival in the heavens and earth, and then its jeweled tents were furled and away it passed, and the black troops of night appeared with their star-adorned turbans. They lowered over the forest and marched to the solemn music of the innumerable trees. Cupples held his breath. He was mightily scared, and devoutly prayed that the sergeant might materialize at once. It was almost midnight and Cupples hadn't slept a wink, and every noise made him tremble like a leaf.

Finally, he heard a faint halloo. It sounded like "Cupples."

"I must go," he said, "though I feel as if the devil would catch me."

He crept on toward the voice. It had a muffled sound, and he could scarcely tell whether it was human or not. As he stealthily approached, he felt sure that it was the sergeant's voice. He ventured himself, at length, to cry out. To this there was a quick, decisive reply, "Cupples!" He hurried forward and almost tumbled into the arms of the sergeant, who was limping and creeping along.

"Safe," cried Cupples.

"I don't know," said the sergeant. "I'm pretty well bunged up. I got an awful twisting. I believe my ankle is sprained. My head feels as if it was a squash. Help me to the shanty. I must have a night's rest, a good warm fire, and recover my forces. I've got a big thing here, and, by the eternal, I must get it to our folks. The enemy are massing all their forces on Fort Donaldson. That's their plan now. They'll succeed and strike a hard blow if I don't prevent. The other fellow went to the devil, I guess. It's a big gorge. I had to float down a mile before I found a landing-place, and I had to crawl my way back almost. If my ankle's all right by morning, so so that I can walk, I'll take my chances with good courage."

Cupples built a roaring fire, cooked the best corncakes he was able, made the sergeant as comfortable as possible; and for the rest of the night they both slept like logs, as if there were no enemy about. They had to do this, and forget all danger, for only by thorough rest and refreshment would they be able to cope with the enormous difficulties of the morrow. Their only safety was in being absolutely desperate.

CHAPTER XXVII.

A BIG HAUL.

It was almost noon when the sergeant awoke and rubbed his eyes.

"I guess I'm in the land of the living," said he, "though I hardly know where I am."

Cupples jumped up as if struck by lightning.

"I guess we'd better be going," he said.

"We might as well take our time," said the sergeant. "It isn't our legs that'll save us, but our heads. We must plan. We are as safe here as anywhere."

"If our legs don't take us out of this, I don't think our heads will."

"Wait and see. What we need first of all is a good rest and plenty of strength. I wonder if I can walk."

The sergeant hobbled around a bit.

"I don't think my ankle is sprained. Get me some water and I'll give it a good dosing."

He bathed it profusely, and in a little while he was able to walk quite comfortably.

"Now for the rest of that corn-meal. While you are cooking, I'll examine these dispatches, and see if I can plan anything out of them."

The sergeant wrapt himself in a brown study, while Cupples labored valiantly with the meal, and made some corn-cakes that were not quite as heavy as cannon-balls.

"Lucky we've got a good appetite," said the sergeant, "or we'd starve to death before we could digest these specimens of primeval rocks. But they'll serve to keep us until we've accomplished our plans. Do you know, Cupples, that I'm going to capture a whole regiment?"

"I expect you can do anything," said Cupples, "after going through that cataract. At the same time, I don't understand it."

"Listen, and I will tell you a thing or two. This is a map of the country, do you see? Over here is Bolton's brigade. The troops are massing there. This dispatch says that the 5th Georgia, now at Buford's station, will come down on the railroad tonight. The railroad runs right through the camp; but beyond that it goes directly to our own forces, six miles away, at Sinclair's. I shall board the train as it comes down, send it spinning through Bolton's camp, and straight on to ours. I engage you for fireman. Will you take the job?"

"It's no use to strike," said Cupples, "so I fall in; but I haven't the slightest doubt but we'll all go to smash."

"Perhaps so, but the greatest risk is the greatest safety now. We must be ready to ride the lightning if need be."

"When shall we run the gantlet?"

"About midnight, I guess. It's a couple of miles through the woods to the track, so we'd better start."

It must be confessed that Cupples didn't admire the project very much. It was a brilliant idea indeed, but it seemed an utter impossibility to carry it out. The sergeant went forward, however, as if he hadn't the slightest doubt of success; as if he had bought a first-class ticket for a palace car. After a slow tramp through the wood they came to the railroad.

"We must halt at this curve, just where they'll be going slow," said the sergeant. "This big tree makes a good hiding-place. What we must do, Cupples, is to jump aboard, fling the engineer and fireman off, put on steam, and go it. If we can get a fair start, I defy the whole of Bolton's army to stop us."

"I'll follow," said Cupples; "I can't manage the engine, but I'll keep the fire a-going."

"That's all I want. I know something about these iron horses. I've rode 'em, and I know how to get the speed out."

Quietly they lay hid amid the enormous branches of the wide-spreading oak. The verdant roof, spangled with rich masses of sunlight, made their temporary habitation seem like an airy palace. Occasionally some bright bird dashed in and out of their retreat. The squirrels kept them good company, as if they had a certain sort of unconscious enjoyment in the affair that was about to be undertaken.

The thunder of the train could be heard in the distance, as night overspread the heavens.

"Now for it Cupples. Creep along the edge of the wood there. The moment it reaches the curve we must spring."

Cupples mechanically obeyed. He kept his eyes fixed constantly on the sergeant. The sergeant crouched closely to the ground alongside the rail. Cupples did the same. The train approached and began to round the curve. It seemed as if the engine was about to run over the prostrate men, when, like flame from gunpowder, they leaped up and upon the engine, tackled the engineer and fireman, overpowered, gagged, and rolled them off, put on the steam, and in a moment, almost, were darting through the darkness at terrific speed. The lights of Bolton's camp soon gleamed; but, to the astonishment of the rebel troops, the train went rattling by like a whirlwind.

"Where in the devil is that train going?" said Bolton, as it went thundering like a comet.

"It's going to the federal camp," said Sandy. "Some Union spy has the run of things. I guess they'll stop him though before he gets much farther."

"I don't know. It looks as if they were bound to go to smash, and not a splinter be left."

"Pile on the coal, Cupples, make it red hot. Make the train shake so that they can't climb over, knock em off if they try it."

It seemed as if the whole night was awakened by the tumultuous swiftness of the train. It almost leaped from the rails in its mad career. It was a freight train; the soldiers were piled inside the cars, and it was impossible for them to reach the engine and grapple with the well-nigh insane adventurers. A few brakemen who endeavored to do so were thrown off.

"They can't stop us. We've passed the enemy's lines. Six miles more and we are safe."

It was as if a planet were thundering and blazing through the immensities of space.

"It almost takes my breath," said the sergeant. "I wish I could send word that I'm coming."

"What in the devil is that" said Stubbs, as he saw the fiery train dashing toward his encampment. "Can you make it, doctor?"

"I can't; it seems like an earthquake."

"Order the troops to fall in. Whatever it is, we'll be ready."

The long scream of the locomotive was heard again and again.

"Send the cavalry up the road," cried Stubbs. "If it don't stop soon it'll go over the broken bridge into the river."

The troops of cavalry went streaming up the winding railroad.

"Hurrah, Cupples, we are inside our own lines. Let her slack up. Now jump for it. Here we are on terra firma."

"What, Jones?" cried Stubbs, "and Cupples? Are you in command of this force?"

"They are your prisoners, if you'll be on hand to catch 'em."

"Of course we will. You don't find us napping."

"That's not all," said Jones, "read these."

"Bully for you," cried Stubbs, as he perused the dispatches. "This is important. We must march at once. See that the prisoners are properly secured."

The sergeant's memorable achievement became one of the traditions of the army. As the result of it, one of the most decisive movements of the war took place and the rebel army was defeated in one of its most daring and skilful undertakings.

Common Sense on the Temperance Question.

BUFFALO, April 10, 1884.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE TRUTH SEEKER, Sir: The following letter to a friend may contribute to the controversy now going on in the columns of your paper if you think it worthy a place.

DEAR FRIEND: You question, "What is the matter with prohibition that you cannot vote for it?" I answer: The same matter I find in all political parties—intolerance, bigotry, policy. Everybody who does not shout for their candidate is classed with the rum party. They hold that no man is a temperance man unless he is a prohibitionist, and in tricks of politics they "out-Herod Herod." I hav mingled with them, and find them generally devoid of sympathy for the struggling mass of humanity. From hating the sin they learn to hate the sinner. But this is of the men. What of the measure? I cannot approve of prohibition. I believe in temperance and in total abstinence, and shall always do what little I can to advance that belief. But the day has passed when belief can be established by legislation. A belief to be enduring must be based on evidence. Now evidence in regard to excess in drinking is all on one side. Nobody denies the harm. Also in regard to adulterated liquors. But pure liquors taken in strict moderation is a question on which learned authorities differ. Until it can be established that "the thing in itself" is harmful, I must giv the credit of sincerity to those who claim it is not, and being sincere in their belief they hav as good a right to it as I to mine.

Here prohibition is in conflict with personal liberty. But you say, "It is not the moderate drinker the law aims to suppress; it is the grogshop." "To do a great good do a little wrong, and curb this cruel devil of his will." Now this sounds well, but the principle is wrong. "Be sure you're right, then go ahead," was Davy Crockett's motto. Prohibition should only deal with crime, and drinking liquor can be nothing more than a vice, and if we punish this vice, to be consistent, we should punish all vices, and if that were done, as Dio Lewis says, "the last man would hav to reach out through his cell-koor and lock himself in, for we are all guilty of vices." But you say, "Drunkenness is so much worse." True, drunkenness is a great nuisance, but we hav enough law on that question now. Also against the sale of liquor to children, the insane and idiotic, or other persons known to be dangerous when under its influence. Also laws against adulteration. But our prohibition friends neglect all these in their endeavor to get some new law on the statute books, to become in turn a dead letter. Their constant cry is somewhat like the crow—law, law, law! Moderate drinking is not a crime, it is not a nuisance; it may be a vice in so much as it may lead to drunkenness: but if the law can say, "You shall not drink this," may it not say, "You shall not eat that?" "But prohibition does not say this," you say. "It only says you shall not make and sell this drink." But this is a distinction without a difference. The aim is to prevent the drinking, else whence the harm? "To say a man has a legal right to drink, and then send a constable to stand between him and opportunity, is adding insult to tyranny." And, as Lewis further says, "the prohibitionist would say to a man who wishes to drink, My dear fellow, you hav a perfect legal right to drink, but I should smile to see you buy any. The right to drink includes the right to buy, not the right to buy through the lying prescription of a tricky doctor, but the right to buy of anyone who conducts the sale without crime and without making his business a legal nuisance." And so long as there is a demand there will be a supply, and private drinking clubs are considered by many good people as worse and more dangerous than the public saloon. There is a rebellious spirit in man that kicks against authority.

The Western farmers find that by driving their cattle away from their straw stacks and thereby inducing them to steal it they can get them to eat the straw which they otherwise would not touch. "Stolen fruits are sweet."

"Oh, yes, but consider the awful woe and misery caused by strong drink—crime, degradation, and poverty. Heavens! if prohibition fails, what shall we do to be saved?"

Now while admitting that King Alcohol is indeed a remorseless tyrant, I believe his power rests upon popular ignorance—ignorance of how to adapt ourselvs to our environments so as to secure the largest possible happiness for ourselvs and others. When education discloses the true paths of happiness alcohol will follow all other kings into oblivion. Educate, elevate, reform, and revolutionize society. Drunkenness and all other social vices are the result of our social organization and the daughters rather than the mothers of poverty.

I consider wage slavery and the degradation of labor the cause of nine-tenths of all our vice and crime. Emancipate labor and educate the laborer, and our saloons, like Othello, would find their occupation gone. "It is asserted," says E. C. Walker, "that intemperance is the cause of every crime. If by intemperance is meant only the use of stimulating drinks, nothing could be wider of the truth than this. Every passion of man, his every desire, every unbalanced faculty, has helped to swell the crime list. National pride—count its windrows of slain! Ambition—view its fields of carnage! Revenge—how many daggers has it sharpened, how many vials of poison uncorked! Avarice—in mercy's name lift not the veil! Jealousy—see its victims bleed; hear their anguished moans! Parental ignorance and inharmony, bequeathing to children malformed bodies and erratic brains—go gaze upon the scaffolds they hav built!"

And what is the remedy for all this sad array? Why, a right education—a reformation of society founded on right and justice. To remove an evil we must seek for its cause. Law never removed an evil. History shows that the most vicious crimes hav followed the most rigorous laws. Priest and lawyers hav ever been stumbling-blocks in the path of civilization. They hav monopolized education and wealth and constituted themselvs the great slave-drivers of humanity. The lawyer's whip was present law; the priest's was law to come. But humanity is becoming restiv under the lash. There are mutterings all round the world, and priests and kings and lawyers begin to see the handwriting on the wall. The education which they sought to monopolize is being diffused among the people. Their ill-got wealth must follow suit. The "law" born of the priests and propagated by kings and lawyers, must pass away. A new era, a new dispensation, will follow. Liberty, born of reason and science, will reign supreme. No crown nor scepter, no cross nor crosier, will signal the new event: Reason the only guide, science the only method, liberty the only authority—"man's inhumanity to man" shall be no more.

"Forever in thine eyes, O Liberty,
Shines that high light whereby the world is saved,
And though thou slay us, we will trust in thee."

Yours in the hope that evolution or revolution may "hasten along the glorious noon-day,"

Money and Its Meaning.

To the Editor of The Truth Seeker, Sir: To-day my attention was called to an article of correspondence under the above heading, in your issue of March 8th, which number escaped my notice at the time owing to absence from home. The article is from the pen of Stephen Pearl Andrews, and as it helps to mystify the mind of those who may not hav gone to the root of the money question, I respectfully ask you to admit to your columns this reply.

Man is all-powerful. His body is perfection for a purpose. When the life, the spirit, is, by the power that gave it out and of which it is a part, is called back or returned to the parent, the body is valueless except as a commodity. So, too, with money. No matter what its size, shape, form, age, sex, or material. Endowed or surcharged with power to exist and appear and hold rank and perform as a legal tender to the discharge of a debt, it is all-powerful over all other creatures till the power that thus exalted it is withdrawn to be conferred upon something else, when it is a dead, inert mass; as is the trade dollar, or any other coin or thing that is demonetized—dead as money. The life has departed, but the substance remains for such purpose as it may be put to. But it is no longer money, which in the law is simply a legal tender to the discharge of debt.

At one time in my life, when I understood this matter no better or clearer than does my learned friend, Stephen Pearl Andrews, I could agree with his position in all of its foliage. But I cannot do so now without insulting intelligence and reflecting upon the wisdom, learning, and patriotism of the Supreme Court, the highest tribunal in this country.

The law does not affix values. This is left to buyer and seller to arrive at by barter. The law simply declares what shall be moneta, or money, or legal tender to the final discharge of a debt. Whatever is a legal tender is money. Whatever is not a legal tender is not money.

The law givs, and the law takes away the legal tender life, power, or spirit; withholds it, or givs it to another thing, as the case may be.

Mr. Andrews says that money has power to purchase. This I deny in toto. Not all the money issued by any government or power in the world has power to purchase my wife, my child, my vote, my manhood, or so simple a thing as the pen with which and by which I convey these ideas, thoughts, and facts to paper. The law does not pretend to giv money power to purchase, but does declare what is legal tender for debt; what is a specific for that one complaint. The patient, that is, the creditor, is not compelled to receive it, but the debtor is compelled to tender it if the creditor so demands.

The law declares that all foreign coins, and some United States coins, are not money, though they were money once. The law declares that a piece of paper stamped and issued under a certain law is legal tender money, and so long as that law remains in force, so long as that one dollar of legal tender is a legal tender for one dollar, so long it rides the topmost wave, pre-eminent over all articles bartered and traded for. If the law says that a trade dollar coin is legal tender for one dollar of debt, it becomes money. Now the trade dollar is not money. If the law says that a gold coin is not a legal tender, from that moment the gold coin is not money, but something else—a creation of a machine. The trouble has been that men who are ignorant or unable to comprehend the legal tender idea, or whose intelligence runs to foliage instead of root, as does the essay of my learned friend, do not understand the subject they write or speak of, and therefore get so far from shore that they lose themselvs, and need to be brought back.

What is money? It is that thing which the supreme law of the land declares to be legal tender for debts in the country where that law is supreme. Of what material is money made? The same as a house—of whatever material the architect decides to use.

Has the greenback dollar ever fallen below its face value? Not in its power to pay debts, and therefore has never depreciated. Why the war against the greenback dollar? Because, as an outburst of intelligence, it was to usury and kingcraft an enemy. It was and is a friend of the people, and therefore to be put out of the way for the enrichment of worshipers of the golden calf, who seek to build themselvs up at the expense of the many,

The Bryennios Manuscripts.

The Andover Review for April contains a translation of an ancient Greek manuscript entitled, "Teaching of the Twelve Apostles," lately found by Bishop Bryennios in a "Most, Holy Sepulcher" in Constantinople. It is claimed that the original book was composed between A.D. 120 and 150. The "Man of Sin" has read the translation and is inclined to believe that the date assigned to the writing is not too early. It appears that Clement of Alexandria has quoted a passage from it as scripture. If so, it must hav existed sometime before A.D. 200. But how long before in order to be regarded by Clement as holy scripture? Half a century would seem to be too short a time to acquire that repute, but two hundred years would probably be long enough. Why not, then, unless there is some evidence to the contrary, date it as early as A.D. 1? Jesus was stoned and hanged about 75 B.C., and Paul, who was one of the youngest apostles, survived until near the beginning of the Christian era. He was, probably, the last living apostle. After they were all dead was the time for their immediate successors to write out an authoritativ creed, and this book entitled, "Teaching of the Apostles," was just the kind of work we would expect to see, not professing to be the direct teaching of the apostles, but yet speaking as if by apostolic authority.

There are several more ancient Greek manuscripts discovered by Bryennios at the same time, of which we are about to hav translations. These are the first and second epistles of Clement to the Corinthians, the epistle of Barnabas, and the longer recension of the Ignatian epistles. "Antichrist" has, heretofore, expressed his belief that the first epistle of Clement, and the epistle of Barnabas, if authentic, were written as early as the beginning of the Christian era. Now we hav forthcoming a new text of these, varying more or less from those we hav heretofore. Let us see if there is anything in the new text incompatible with the early dates assigned to those two epistles by Antichrist, A.M.

Reform in Home Life.

Professor Adler preaches a vast deal of common sense. At his lecture at Chickering Hall last Sunday he said: The family is one of the most remarkable inventions of human genius. He called it an invention because home life did not always exist. We hav ideally recognized monogamy, although practically there is polygamy and communism. To-day all sorts of wild propositions are made concerning the subject, and society is anxious.

Our position concerning the family is one of unyielding conservatism. We do not believe the present form of family life will ever be superseded. But if the inner constitution of the home is to remain unchanged, the external arrangements may be changed. Too much drudgery is imposed upon our women. The kitchen is made the base of our houses, and there are people who believe family life should rest on the kitchen; that mothers and wives should spend their time in the kitchen. If a woman spends her time in this way she cannot exercise those ennobling influences we demand of her.

Our homes are clumsy. The parlor is used for two purposes—it is the reception room for friends and is the art room, the fine room. We all like beautiful objects, but we hav no space for them. A union of families would bring about the establishment of a fine art room.

A great deficiency in home life is the want of proper children's schools. At three years of age a child has mastered self-consciousness. He wants to be occupied. If he is not properly occupied his character is injured. The little naughtinesses of children are not their fault, but the fault of their mothers. The mothers do not train themselvs to understand the soul life of the child. They are too busy with other offices. The kindergarten is a remedy for this, but the kindergarten is impossible in isolated houses. What I ask is that we should hav a union of households. We must hav a union so arranged that the family may be private and yet that there may be co-operation.

Liberal Notes from Illinois.

On Thursday evening, March 20th, I completed a four-weeks trip with J. E. Remsburg, over eastern, northern, and western Illinois. We traveled over five hundred miles together; he lecturing and I selling Liberal books, etc., at the meetings. He filled three engagements in addition to the nine which had been previously announced in The Truth Seeker. The additional engagements were McHenry, Moline, and Wyoming. In all he gave twenty-seven lectures on this trip in this state. The lectures were well attended, and in some places we had crowded houses. Notwithstanding that in nearly every place the sky-pilots did all they could to keep the people away, getting up opposition meetings and entertainments—and in one place the Methodists got up a negro show as a counter attraction, but it did not win to any great extent—Mr. Remsburg's lectures hav had a good and lasting effect wherever he has been. We parted company after the close of his lectures at Wyoming, March 20th. He is going to fill his appointments in Missouri and Iowa, on his way home to Atchison, and I turning eastward, toward the center of Illinois. I hav now completed four years' constant service in the cause of Liberalism in the state of Illinois, and along the borders of the adjoining states, selling and circulating Liberal literature, getting subscriptions to Liberal papers, and organizing Liberal Leagues wherever I could. During the four years that I hav been engaged in this work, I hav traveled something over ten thousand miles. First, with a horse and buggy, and for the past two years and four months by rail. I hav visited nearly every county, and every town of any considerable size that I could reach by railroad in this state. And as I review the work I hav done, I find that I hav accomplished far more than I ever anticipated that I could with the small means I had when I commenced. But now my means are expended, and I am compelled to quit and seek some renumerativ employment to replenish my purse. If I am successful in finding something to do, whereby I can earn a little money, I will again take hold of the Liberal work. Last fall I proposed to go into the state of Indiana, and work up a state League and local Leagues in that state, as I hav done in Illinois. But as I got no response to my proposal from the Liberals in Indiana, I dared not make the undertaking.

Now, I should be pleased to hear from the Liberals of this state, and especially from those who are members of the State Liberal League of Illinois, in regard to their opinions or wishes in reference to holding the Annual State Liberal League Convention this year. These conventions are necessarily attended with some expenses for hall rents, speakers, printing, postage, etc. And as I no longer hav the means to pay these expenses from my own pocket, I dare not run the risk of incurring the expense. I hope that those who feel an interest in upholding the Liberal cause in the state of Illinois, and would like to see a good Liberal convention held in our state during summer, will write to me, and let me know what they think about it. All letters or postal cards addressed to me to Bloomington, Ill., will be forwarded to me.

F. F. Follet,
Secretary State Liberal League of Illinois.

How To Take the Census.

Our mode of taking census is a sample of how a government is going to become a vast engin whereby several hundred thousand people may liv off the labor of millions. By dividing all the people of each county into groups of ten, with a head man for each ten, who keeps his reports up and presents them to the elder or head of ten such groups, who in turn reports to the head of ten like himself, the whole census is promptly taken at a trifling cost. Each head of the thousands can report to one common head. Organized thus, the census for the whole Union can be taken in a few minutes, on the same principle as that each family eats its own dinner. Perhaps some time we will begin to know what government by the people really is.

Jesuitical Tricks.

Those fashionable Protestants who hav introduced Mgr. Capel into their homes are likely to regret it. Bishop Potter, of the Episcopal church, has been expecting that when the widow Hamersly died she would leave to his church a large portion of the four millions of dollars bequeathed her by her husband. But it turns out that the French Jesuit has been hunting in that direction, and has bagged the game.

In the matter of proselyting, the Protestants can learn much from their mother church. The old lady has had years of experience to profit by, and possesses a more elastic conscience. Mgr. Capel says their last stroke of business is a "professional secret," and refuses to divulge the means by which it was brought about. He said to a World reporter that as conversions come entirely from God, a priest being merely the instrument, he considered any discussion of them a sin of as great enormity as the sin of David in numbering his people. Were it known that he was on business of that kind, the houses of his Protestant friends would be closed to him, and his occupation would be gone. He tacitly admitted that his church was sure of the Hamersly millions, but he would not reveal what commission the pope allowed him on the transaction.

The Protestants can blame themselvs for this prospectiv loss. They hav taken Capel to their homes and bosoms, and given him opportunities he could never hav obtained had he been left to the courtesies of his own denomination. It is natural that the viper should sting, and only a fool will coddle one. The treacherous instincts of a Jesuit cannot be drowned in wine dinners; and this follower of Loyola is not diverted from his purpose by polite attentions. His mission here is fraught with danger to all our republican institutions, as is shown by his utterances on the school question previous to this capture of a fair millionairess, and his later effort to induce our government to interfere with the Italian conversion of the Propaganda property into interest bearing bonds. On the evening of the 16th, he addressed a meeting of Catholics, who proposed, "to ask the whole Catholic body in the United States to sign a declaration of its opinion and feeling concerning the step of confiscation, euphemiously called conversion, of the Propaganda property; and that it is their further intention to ask the government of the United States to protest, in the name of these signatories, against the contemplated action of the Italian government. Already," he says, "with a true instinct of right, and determined to uphold the rights of its citizens, hav the states demanded and obtained the protection over the American College at Rome."

Now no one questions the right of the Catholics to send individually, and as a body, to the Italian government a protest embodying their views of the rightfulness and legality of what Mgr. Capel, with dishonest purpose, calls the confiscation of the church's property, but when a foreigner heads a mass meeting which presumes to instruct the United States government to interfere with a friendly power in its dealings with its own subjects, the impudence rises to a sublimity which would call for no notice had not our accidental president already shown a disposition to fish for Irish votes by throwing the American flag over the "American" college—a step he had no more right to take than he would hav to hoist the Stars and Stripes over the Vatican, and say to King Humbert, You shall not tax this; it is American property.

Our codfish aristocracy deserve all the humiliation they may receive at the hands of Capel. They hav toadied to him in a manner that would be shameful in a body possessing as much sense as a monkey, and as they hav sown, so must they reap. But every drop of patriot blood must boil at the attempted indignity upon our government, and when Mgr. Capel's insolent proposition reaches Washington he should be snubbed and told to mind his own business. Will our present officials hav the backbone to do it?

Selling Flowers Sunday.

The "Society for the Prevention of Crime," Howard Crosby chief instigator, D. J. Whitney, chief bulldozer, has entered upon the task of converting New York's continental into a puritanical Sabbath. One of its hired spies has written to a police commissioner calling his attention to the public commission of the enormous sin of selling canes in Broadway on Sunday, while "gangs of boys with bouquets on boards, which they thrust under the faces of pedestrians," sell flowers on Sundays, from 10 A.M. to 2 P.M., at Fifth avenue and Twenty-third street.

Capt. Kip, first deputy clerk of the Police Department, wrote in reply that the 'superintendent had been instructed "to look sharply after the cane pedlers," but that it was "a serious question whether the law was intended for the suppression of flower selling, or whether its rigorous enforcement in that particular would be indorsed by public opinion." After saying that the flowers which decorate the churches are mostly delivered by florists on Sunday morning, Capt. Kip continues:

"It has long been the custom for religious people to purchase flowers from these little venders on their way to and from worship, and if it becomes necessary for this department to enforce a law prohibiting the sale on Sunday of an article so harmless, so beneficial, and at the same time so refining in its influences as the bouquet of flowers, it will do so without much heart in duties so unpleasantly imposed."

Mr. Kip's evasion is as bad as the society's bigotry. What the Christians buy on Sunday he would sell; that which they do not need to purchase he would prohibit from being offered. This looks very much as though he thinks the earth turns exclusivly for the Christians.

Once a Beggar, Always a Beggar.

The Supreme Court of this state has rendered a decision in the suit of the People vs. Peterson that is of interest. The law of this state allows exemption from taxation to the amount of $1,500 to all ministers. Mr. Peterson, since 1830, had been a preacher of the Reformed church. Fifteen years ago, by reason of old age, he was obliged to giv up preaching, and he retired, presumably on a competency, as he has done nothing since, and possessed property which the assessor taxed.

Although out of the pulpit it seems he did not turn honest, for he resisted the tax levy, and fought his case up to the Supreme Court, which has rendered a verdict in his favor. The court said, "Being a minister, and engaged in no other calling, he was entitled to the exemption, notwithstanding he was disqualified for activ duty by age and infirmity."

It is difficult to know which to condemn most, the stupidity which enacted the law, the partisanship of the court rendering the decision, or the moral obliquity of the minister who would receive exemption under the circumstances.

Pictures of the Monument.

It givs us the greatest pleasure to be able to say to inquiring correspondents that there is in course of preparation an elaborately designed lithograph of Mr. Bennett's monument. The size is 22x27 inches. It will be executed in colors, with the medallion likeness printed in bronze. Two sides of the structure will be shown. The large size will enable the inscriptions to be plainly read, and ornamental panels will show the lettering on the two obverse sides. The ample dimensions of the lithograph will enable the artist to make the medallion as large as an imperial photograph, thus insuring a faithful likeness of Mr. Bennett, which we know will be treasured by his thousands of friends. The whole will form a beautiful picture, an ornament to any parlor.

It was at one time proposed by the committee to send a picture of the monument to every one subscribing a dollar towards its erection. Such a picture would necessarily hav been a very plain affair, as the committee is not composed of wealthy men and could not afford to giv an elaborate present. But on considering the matter it was thought the subscribers to the fund would rather pay the bare cost of a picture such as is now in preparation than receive gratis a plain black lithograph. On the one designed the artist foregoes all profit, furnishing it for just the cost of preparation, and we hav added only the cost of the protecting roller and the amount of the postage. All those who hav contributed towards erecting the monument will therefore get the lithograph for thirty cents; others will be required to pay fifty cents. Orders will be received at any time, and filled as soon as the work is done. There is also a small balance (about $50) yet remaining unpaid on the monument itself. We shall feel great joy when we can announce the extinction of this debt.

A Chance for Mr. Livezey, of Catonsville, Md.

A friend of ours living in Idaho has received one of the circulars sent out by the Maryland crank accusing some Liberals of Oregon of conspiring to murder some Christians, and in a private letter to us, inquiring about Livezey, says:

"I will giv him one hundred dollars apiece for every Infidel found engaged in any secret plot to persecute any sect or denomination in Oregon. Furthermore, I will giv him one hundred dollars for each one found among the twenty-five ladies and gentlemen [that Livezey says he has brought to grief or confession] who upheld such work. I will also, if the What-is-it wishes, put up two dollars to his one for him to make his assertion good about Infidel assassins in Oregon, for if Infidels are of that class it is well the world should know it."

This is a golden opportunity for Livezey to either prove his charges or retract them, for surely a good "What-is-it?" cannot want to circulate a lie. As our friend's letter is private we cannot now giv his name, but it is sufficient that he is a reliable gentleman. We hav written to him to be ready with his cash, and Mr. Livezey can communicate with him through our mediumship.

One Vote for Edmunds Stopped.

Under date of April 13th, Charles C. Johnson, of Milford, Mass., writes:

"The cry in this section is Edmunds. Your editorial on 'That Bible Amendment' was timely. You could not hav struck better. I read it to a friend to-day. He said, 'That fixes me. I hav been talking for him; shall not vote for him now.'"

We do not see how any consistent Liberal can work for Edmunds or vote for him if he secures the Republican nomination. Mr. Edmunds would use his place to further the schemes of the God-in-the-Constitution party, and he who would do that is a dangerous man to put in power.

Editorial Notes.

TALMAGE pictured what he claimed as the resurrection with so much realism on Easter Sunday that women went into hysteria and men would hav been seized with delirium tremens if they hadn't gone out of church in the middle of the sermon to find a man around the corner. What is the use, asks Truth, of these sanctified exclamation marks about a thing of which Dr. Talmage knows nothing and never will know anything? The whole thing was theatrical, but it had not the honesty of a theatrical representation, for a play is an acknowledged fiction. Dr. Talmage's heaven and hell, on the contrary, are only born of his vivid imagination, with a little Presbyterian theology thrown in, and he pretends that he knows all about them. Having a large and flexible mouth and a copious flow of words he presents his imaginary places of joy with great effect. Perhaps he is paid his salary to frighten women and disgust men.

AT a church dedication in Smyrna, Del., on April 5th, the Rev. Dr. Mutchmore took occasion to rebuke the faithful for their lukewarmness as manifested by the atomic size of their contributions. "I often think," he said, "that a man's faith may be gauged by his contributions to God's service. A man at a horse race will bet $500 on a certain horse. Why does he do it? It is the amount of faith he has in that horse. A dog fancier will bet $50 on the dog which he has faith in. You can gauge his faith by the amount of money he is willing to contribute toward the support of God's church; he drops a penny in the plate and plainly says that's the amount of my faith in the cleansing and saving power of the grace of God. The dog fighter has fifty dollars' worth of faith in his bulldog, and the Christian ten cents' worth in the savior of the world." It doesn't seem to hav occurred to the reverend gentleman that men's faith is sometimes pinned to the object that best deserves it.

The investigation of the charges against the Rev. M. N. Capron, at Utica, N. Y., lasting four days, and terminating on the 16th, resulted in finding the charges of imprudent conduct, immoral conduct, and fraud fully sustained by the testimony. The Rev. Mr. Capron was thereupon deposed from the ministry, but not expelled from the church. So says the account; and, for thus retaining the immoral and fraudulent member within the fold of the church, it may be added, that committee has the thanks of an afflicted and long-suffering world, which certainly has no reason to wish Mr. Capron thrown back upon it unless he can be returned in as good condition as he was received into the communion. This taking men into the church, keeping them until they are demoralized, and then turning them loose in the community again has grown monotonous. Every one must be relieved to know that the church will continue to be responsible for the peculiarities of the Rev. Mr. Capron.

An exciting debate between Charles Bradlaugh and H. Hyndman, president of the English Democratic Federation, took place on the evening of the 17th, at St. James's Hall, London, on the subject of Socialism. The members of the Federation had begun to grow cool toward Bradlaugh, says the cablegram, because he refused to keep pace with their revolutionary theories, and he consented to debate the entire question of Socialism with President Hyndman, his principal critic. The hall (which has the largest seating capacity of any in London) was crowded. Bradlaugh, although he greatly surpassed Hyndman in the skill with which he managed his side of the debate, lost the favor of the vast audience by advocating only milder forms of Socialism and contending for agitation as the means to accomplish governmental reforms. Hyndman characterized Bradlaugh's policy of agitation as child's play and boldly declared that the only way to bring the despots of Europe to their senses was to terrify them into making proper concessions. It is said that Hyndman's arguments carried the house by storm. The full text of this debate is to be printed in pamphlet form by the National Reformer, when American readers will hav the opportunity of reading it.

The tide of immigration setting toward our shores is subject to fluctuations, but there exists no reason to anticipate that during the life of the present generation it will fail to reach the average hight of the past ten years; immigration, therefore, continues to be one of the great economic questions of this country, and it involves a political problem of the highest importance, that of naturalization. That our naturalization laws are defectiv in many respects is notorious, and the demand for their revision will no doubt acquire added force from the publication of an article by Justice William Strong upon that subject in the North American Review for May. In the same number of the Review, Edwin P. Whipple offers a candid judgment of Matthew Arnold, as a thinker and as a man of letters. Richard A. Proctor, under the title of "A Zone of Worlds," writes of the vast multitude of the pigmy kindred of the earth, known as the asteroids. In "The Railway and the State," Gerritt L. Lansing essays to prove that the multiplication and extension of railroad lines, and the establishment of low rates of transportation, are hindered rather than helped by governmental interference. Professor Henry F. Osborn, of Princton College, has a highly interesting article on "Illusions of Memory." Helen Kendrick Johnson contributes an essay on "The Meaning of Song." Finally, there is a joint discussion of "Workingmen's Grievances," by William Godwin Moody and Prof. J. Laurence, of Harvard University, in which both make several mistakes, though on the whole Mr. Moody's statement is an exceedingly valuable setting forth of economic grievances.

At the close of a temperance lecture given by W. F. Jamieson at Creighton, Neb., a Mr. J. T. Lindsay, being called upon, said:

"I came not to speak, but to hear, if possible, on the subject of temperance. I think temperance in all things is the crown of excellence. There are thousands of men and women who kill themselvs by gluttony that the world knows not of, for they go to their graves silently and unmarked. When the drunkard dies, he goes amid the ravings of lunacy, and the wild shrieks of delirium. The worst man on earth is the man who gets drunk and abuses the wife who has clung to him through years of sorrow and adversity, with his heart deadened against the lisping words of love from childhood's lips—words that should thrill his soul with tenderness and joy. With Mr. Jamieson's permission, as this is his audience, I will say a few words for Christianity. When Christ said, 'Love one another,' he meant it. When he said, 'Be merciful and charitable toward all men,' he meant it. The minister of the gospel who talks to the sinner and Infidel the words of love and charity makes the best and most lasting impression. The men who used the thumb-screw, the iron rack, the fagot, and horrors of the dungeon, were not Christians but devils, who had stolen the livery of heaven, and were not only Infidels but fiends in human form. We should be honest. I wish to say this for Robert G. Ingersoll—Infidel as he is—in his practical life he shows many of the Christian virtues. He is a loving husband, kind father, a true and faithful friend, and does many acts of charity that the world knows not of. He never turns a deaf ear to the cries of the unfortunate, and offers a hand to assist many of those the world has left to sink deeper into hopeless despair."

Mr. Lindsay was formerly a law partner of Col. Ingersoll's, and has therefore opportunity to know whereof he speaks concerning the great Infidel. His knowledge of what constitutes a Christian is neither so well founded nor accurate. A perusal of Mr. Schaff's paper in the North American Review might alter his opinion of what constitutes a true Christian. By that he will see that it is the duty of Christians to persecute Freethinkers, and by talking toleration he is neglecting his duty.

T. B. Wakeman and T. C. Leland announce that at the next Annual Congress of the National Liberal League they will not be candidates for re-election to their respectiv offices of president and secretary of the organization. Their reasons are given as follows, in their paper, Man: "In a late number of Man, the Hon. A. B. Bradford, of Enon Valley, Pa., said: 'There are men in the land who are not identified, either with the Liberal League or its opponents, and who, if they would invite a national convention to meet, might from their high character close up our ranks.' In a recent Index we read that its editors and 'thousands of Liberals decline to work with the National Liberal League on account of the demand for a repeal of the Comstock United States Postal laws, passed as a resolve at the later congresses of the League. There is nothing so desirable as unity and co-operation among Liberals for the purpose of defense, propaganda, and constructiv effect upon society, politically and socially. The above intimations remind us of the propriety of timely notice that the editors of Man will not be candidates for any office of the League at the next Congress. They and Man and the New York Liberal Publishing Company think it best that a new deal should be then made, so that, if possible, the elements referred to by Mr. Bradford and the Index should be brought forward and harmonized with the League. This object we announced previous to the last Congress, but because it was not stated decisivly in time, the present officers were unanimously re-elected, and in such a way and at such a time that they could not decline without endangering the safety of the League. Now we giv ample notice. There should be in our columns, and in the Liberal press generally, friendly suggestions as to our successors, so that the Congress may make the wisest possible selections. Every League and Liberal society of any kind in the country should be represented at the next Congress, whether they hav been able to agree with the course of the League or not. There will be the amplest opportunity for the realization of Mr. Bradford's suggestion by having the Liberals who hav not acted with the League join in a call of their own to meet in a free, uncommitted and common Congress, to select new officers and inaugurate a new policy adapted to present conditions and issues. We take this course (1), Because we fear that past issues and differences cannot be removed from the minds of many Liberals except by a decided change of the personnel of the management of the League, and we would not stand in the way of its unity and welfare a moment by reason of past issues. (2) Then again, as we explained in our last paper, the Comstock issues which hav been a cause of difference, hav been largely tried out, and their right decision can be perhaps better secured without giving to them what seems to many exceptional prominence. (3) Man could and would still advocate organization and the principles of the League, but no longer in any official or semi-official way. Now let all those who believe in any kind of organization or co-operation of Liberal people in the United States consider who, as president and secretary, would best further that purpose. And whoever may be selected shall hav our hearty support."

To Our Readers and Bookbuyers: If you experience any difficulty in obtaining The Truth Seeker or any of our own or other Freethought works through any dealer, we shall feel greatly obliged if you will order direct from this office. We are fearful that many dealers do not take the pains they should to supply Liberal works—sometimes, even, wrongly reporting them out of print—thereby depriving the inquiring public of heterodox books, and preventing us from making needed sales.

Lectures and Meetings.

Col. Ingersoll will lecture at the Academy of Music in this city on the evening of Sunday, the 27th. Seats can be secured in advance at the box office.

The fourteenth annual convention of the American Labor Reform League meets in this city at Clarendon Hall, 13th st., Sunday and Monday, May 4th and 5th. Three sessions will be held daily. Wm. Rowe, Stephen Pearl Andrews, R. W. Hume, S. Myra Hall, Dr. C. S. Weeks, E. H. Heywood, Geo. M. Davenport, speakers.

Members and patrons of the Institute of Heredity and all friends of the movement are asked to remember that the last Parlor Meeting of this winter's series will be held at the residence of Dr. E. B. Foote, No. 120 Lexington avenue, corner East 28th st., on the last Thursday evening of April—the 24th—at eight o'clock. All are invited.

The "Union of the Freethinkers of Germany" held at Mannheim, South Germany, on the 27th and 28th its third annual convention. The morning sessions were devoted to business; the afternoon and evening sessions were public, and devoted to discussing such themes as "Orthodoxy and Culture," "Characteristics of Primitiv Christianity," the "Oath Question," and "Women's Rights."

C. Fannie Allyn has lectured for the Liberal League of Philadelphia the last two Sundays. The League has had before it Messrs. Putnam, Bell, Remsburg, and Chainey, and will hav Mr. Reynolds at the expiration of Mrs. Allyn's engagement. The attendance is good, and increasing. The question up for discussion last Sunday was, Is Christianity rational? Those who take the affirmativ of this are to be pitied, as Mrs. Allyn alone would snow them under. The League should encourage lecturers and sit down on wranglers.

Next Sunday morning at the Liberal Club rooms, 220 East 15th st., George Chainey will deliver his lecture on "The Genius of Shakspere and His Relation to Secularism." This discourse of our eloquent Liberal orator will be highly interesting as showing the true spirit of the immortal poet. The poetry of Shakspere is essentially of this world. It is the play of human passion and of motivs derived entirely from man and his surroundings. He breathes the genuin scientific and Liberal spirit, and, as Ingersoll shows, the profoundest inspiration of modern progress. Let there be a generous turn-out to our Sunday lecture. Admission free. It begins at 11 A.M. sharp. The subject and the orator should draw a crowded house.

Copies of The Truth Seeker will be mailed for 7 cents; in quantities of ten and upward, 5 cents each. We hav printed an extra supply of this week's issue, and hope our friends will distribute them broadcast. Colonel Ingersoll's lecture deserves a world-wide reading.

To Our Readers and Bookbuyers: If you experience any difficulty in obtaining The Truth Seeker or any of our own or other Freethought works through any dealer, we shall feel greatly obliged if you will order direct from this office. We are fearful that many dealers do not take the pains they should to supply Liberal works—sometimes, even, wrongly reporting them out of print—thereby depriving the inquiring public of heterodox books, and preventing us from making needed sales.

Unbounded.

There's a theory honestly held to-day,
Which we think our better thoughts gainsay.
It is this: The present alone is ours;
To it alone we should lend our powers;
The past is past and dead, they say,
The future a phantom that leads astray;
We can claim no more than this little day.

We hold, though the past no longer bides,
Its influence lingers still and guides.
To-day is the kennel of time, and would be
As nothing without its yesterday.

Weak and helpless in nature's chains,
For, fast in her fetters, our own strength wanes,
From forebodings of evil the morrow may bring,
As from a precipice we draw shuddering,
Or, cheered by a something the sense cannot sound,
For respite from sorrow we look beyond.
In the present we work, but rely on the past
For capital. The prize of recompense
Not in the now, in the subsequent lies.

As freedom abhors a prison cell,
True mind in bonds disdains to dwell,
Loving space's infinity
No more than time's eternity.
Galls as meaner curbs hav done
The splendors of rising and setting sun.

Rich is the memory of ages gone,
Richer the hopes of those coming on.
Expectation, remembrance,
Link future and past
Of this triple life
Which the now holds fast.

Concord, Ky., Feb. 4, 284. Virginia E. Vance.

Hitting Mr. Stebbins Some Sounding Whacks.

To the Editor of The Truth Seeker, Sir: I hav just read an article in The Truth Seeker of March 15th to which I think you ought to hav replied.

Mr. S. Stebbins takes you to task on the tariff question, and after writing a long article in favor of a protectiv tariff admits at the end that we hav no use for it. An idiot could hav done as well.

He says he can quote authorities and giv statistics to prove that everything he needs is made by his home customers neater, better, and cheaper than the imported article. If the needs of a farmer can be supplied at home neater, better, and cheaper than from abroad, the needs of the mechanic and merchant can be supplied as well as a general rule. Now everybody knows that we do not import what we can produce neater, better, and cheaper at home. Where, then, is the use of a protectiv tariff if we import nothing? His logic proves too much. And what use is there in the expression: "Place all the farmers on one side of the globe and the artisans on the other side." He might as well hav told you to take the sun into one hand and the moon in the other. It would hav been as sensible. Impossibilities cannot be allowed in place of arguments.

No doubt Mr. Stebbins livs in a country where people still vote for General Jackson, and all you may print about his being dead will not convince them that it is so.

All that can be said for or against tariff is simply this: it favors the monopolist, and in so far is a curse to the nation; but on the other hand it reaches a class of persons who, like Jesus Christ, hav never where to lay their heads, and who, but for the tariff, would never pay a cent to defray the expenses of the government whose resources they consume.

I hav seen the workings of a protectiv tariff in my own country. The same arguments were used in favor of it that its advocates use here, yet the tariff was abolished and the country prospered better than before. The same can be said of England. With a protectiv tariff England would stand low in the rank of nations; with free trade it defies the world.

The idea of a tariff is caused by the same selfish notion which causes Christians to fight against the taxation of church property, but while the benefits in this case are real, in regard to the tariff they are only imaginary.

Mr. Stebbins concludes by stating that the tariff has made us the greatest and most prosperous nation that ever existed. Such ignorance might be excused in a Hottentot, but is inexcusable in an American citizen. Robert Gunther.

Letters from Friends.

FORT STANTON, March 24, 1884.

MR. EDITOR: Inclosed find $10, which please place as I direct, paying three subscriptions. The remainder I contribute to the D. M. Bennett monument. I am going to circulate a few of Remsburg's "False Claims" among the people. I hope to be situated by fall so as to giv some attention to getting subscribers for your paper. I believe I could get you fifty in this county in a short time.

P. F. GARRETT.

BRATTLEBORO, VT., April 15, 1884.

MR. EDITOR: I am very much interested in Freethought literature, and am doing all I can to assist in circulating the same. Am also a constant reader of THE TRUTH SEEKER, which I receive regularly from my brother-in-law, who resides in California. Am anxious to obtain Ingersoll's new lecture on "Orthodoxy." Can you furnish it in pamphlet form?

MRS. MAUD SEVERANCE.

[We shall not publish the lecture in pamphlet form, as the Colonel objects.—ED. T. S.]

ST. JOHNS, ILL., April 3, 1884.

MR. EDITOR: Inclosed find three dollars for a renewal of my subscription. With the exception of two years, which I think were '80 and '81, I hav been a subscriber and constant reader of THE TRUTH SEEKER ever since September 1874. My reasons for not taking it those two years were by no means any lack of love or faith in the paper. or its grand and noble editor, whom I learned to love better than I was ever able to love the Christians' God, although I endeavored to be as best I could a Christian, and I hope to be able to read it the remainder of my life, for it is a precious boon to me in my old age, which is bordering on fifty-three.

WM. A. THOMPSON.

PARKERSBURG, W. VA., April 9, 1884.

MR. EDITOR: A receipt for three dollars in payment for THE TRUTH SEEKER has been received, and if you can afford space in your columns I wish to get an opportunity to say to friend Robert Günther, whom I cannot reach otherwise, that he has warmed up a few hearts besides my own, for my wife, with our four eldest children, love THE TRUTH SEEKER as dearly as I do, and they join me in giving our warmest and heartfelt thanks to friend Gunther and yourself. This single ray of the glorious sun of humanity will be reflected in our hearts as long as life lasts, and help to disperse the clouds that shade the brightest side of life. It givs me strength and new hopes, and a little chance to catch up with my arrears before the year is up. With best wishes for THE TRUTH SEEKER, I remain

Yours for humanity, J. G. KUHN.

ASHLAND CENTER, MICH., March 10, 1884.

MR. EDITOR: Allow me a short space in your columns in regard to the orthodox. We hav one here—a Baptist. A short time ago, a few of us were in a country store giving our views of religion. I said to one of the company, "Why don't God kill the devil?" Just then in came the clergyman. The next day in the pulpit he took that for his text, though he did not explain why God don't kill the devil. If I had the power they claim God has, I would banish the old imp, and not hav him around kicking up such disturbances as they claim he does. The orthodox claim that a man may commit a crime, and be hung; he can repent and go to heaven; but the one that is murdered and is innocent must be sent to that everlasting lake that burns with fire and brimstone. I think brimstone must be cheap there. We cannot afford to burn very much here.

GEO. T. EVANS.

BIG BEND, CAL., April 4, 1884.

MR. EDITOR: I hav distributed THE TRUTH SEEKER here; also keep our little library in circulation, calling the attention of the people to the arguments which most interest myself. Through these books I hav received kind invitations to visit several who are feeling their way out of bondage. But, alas! for lack of time I can't go. I cannot even do much canvassing right in the camp, though the prospects of success are only poor at present, owing to the departure of the most of those interested in such matters. I deeply regret my inability to do more for our cause, but hope soon to hav more time at my disposal. I can assure you I would like to help the grand TRUTH SEEKER along, What delight its able staff can take in it! And what delight its readers must take in reading it! I admire "Saladin," but prefer THE TRUTH SEEKER to the Secular Review. I hope to go East within a year, and if I do I shall certainly visit the TRUTH SEEKER family. What a splendid work is "Golden Throne!" Everybody says it the best novel they ever read.

M. MATHESON.

LOGANSPORT, IND., April 10, 1884.

MR. EDITOR: Inclosed you will find $5.25 for my TRUTH SEEKER. I will be one year behind by the 23d of this month, so the $5.00 will run me to April, 1885. For the 25 cents please send me one of your ALMANACS.

I would be lost without THE TRUTH SEEKER. There are numbers of Liberals in our city, but they don't seem to take hold. The most of them dare not speak their honest opinion on account of the church. But we are gaining ground. It is only a question of time when the church must fall. The community is getting too wise to be humbugged much longer. Superstition, prejudice, priesthood, and witchcraft must be laid aside. A great many Liberals call on me on account of my being an outspoken man on the side of the truth, and I share with them THE TRUTH SEEKER, the truth of which they will not deny. We were all very much taken up with Brother Bob Ingersoll's lecture in the issue of April 5th, and it is our desire to hav him come here and giv another lecture. He has lectured here once several years ago, and in the language of Rip Van Winkle, may Bob and THE TRUTH SEEKER liv long and prosper is the wish of your humble servant,

JOHN G. KESSLER.

BUTLER, PA., April 9, 1884.

MR. EDITOR: I like your paper very well. I am always glad when it gets here on Saturday, so that I can be through with it by Monday morning to send it out on its mission to spread the light and truth. We hav nine or ten churches here in this borough, with a population of about 3,000. I hav been here thirty-two years, hav been a Freethinker nearly all my life, and hav always believed in evolution since I commenced to reason.

A. CUTHBERT.

SACRAMENTO, April 5, 1884.

MR. EDITOR: Inclosed find post money order as per bill rendered. I am well pleased with the TRUTH SEEKER ANNUAL; it is a splended work; it should be in every family in the land; the editor deserves much credit for its production. Also "False Claims" should be circulated far and wide throughout this republic. In fact, the whole human family should read and consider its contents; it is a good missionary document; the church bigots cannot deny the facts therein stated. The twelve copies that I received are in good hands, and will circulate in the interest of Freethought and truth. A friend of mine said to me, after reading "False Claims," "My, sir! that little book contains more truth and solid facts, in regard to Christianity than all the Bibles that were ever published." Every man, woman, and child should read it; it's truth, every word of it. I will send for some and giv to my friends for truth's sake. Yours truly, R. BUTTERFIELD.

OTTER CREEK, March 24, 284.

MR. EDITOR: It has been a very hard, cold winter here, and I hav not been able to get away from home this winter to get any subscribers. As soon as the weather gets settled I am going out to see what I can do. Our crops were destroyed last year by the hail, and it left us in very bad circumstances financially. I hav given away the most of my papers. I find it is no use to giv them to the leading class of men in the village. Now I am going to distribute them among the farmers and laborers, and get what subscribers I can. I am a sail-maker by trade, and I think I shall go to the state of Maine this summer, and work some at my trade and help open up a new field of Liberalism, and devote part of my time to its cause. I hav no babies to take care of now; they can care for themselvs. Please send me the TRUTH SEEKER ANNUAL AND FREETHINKERS ALMANAC, and oblige,

Yours truly, JOHN W. STILLMAN.

QUINCY, OHIO, April 10, 1884.

MR. EDITOR: While reading the account of Mr. Chamberlain's visit to the monument, I made up my mind that I must hav my name enrolled among the contributors to the fund. Inclosed please find $1. I love the man for whom thousands of Freethinkers mourn, and I love the cause which he was ever ready to defend and suffer for. I feel proud to know that his name will be handed down to posterity as being worth more to humanity than all the gods, Christs, and ghosts that man was ever able to manufacture or conceive of. I am gratified to know that while principles for which he suffered are gaining ground, just in proportion the spirit of persecution is becoming more and more hateful to mankind. And while the churches seem to be prospering, and are not willing to recognize the rights of the Freethinker, I am glad to know that there are some with more sense, who are willing to assist in placing Freethinkers in the responsible and honorable offices of the country.

J. M. PUTNAM.

HOMER, MICH., April 11, 1884.

MR. EDITOR: Mr. Louis, a Freethinker, died here recently. The preacher attended the funeral, but pretended to be sick, so he said that our brother was buried like a dog. I wonder how many hav been served the same who were Christians in the late war, and whose graves were not even known.

Religious people say that the Bible is being fulfilled—even the Jews are going back to the the four-square city of Jerusalem. Rock Hazen says he would not giv the four gospels of Bennett's Round-the-World books for all the bibles.

The man that was cheated out of twenty shillings by a preacher is mum. The minister has been discharged for falsehood. His name was Rev. Rawson, Free Methodist. Mrs. Bishop, a woman preacher, says the Freethinker is a bad paper. I asked why she read it, and she laughed. The truth is, all read Infidel works to get posted. The most of those who believe the Bible never read it. I hope if there is another war, the dogs will stay out and let the Christians be buried. I shall, for one, so they will know at last where I am laid.

E. H. CAMERON.

PORTLAND, OR., March 29, 1884.

MR. EDITOR: Thinking the readers of THE TRUTH SEEKER would like to hear a word from this far-away city among the hills, I will drop you a few lines. I feel as though I am not a total stranger, as I am a reader of THE TRUTH SEEKER, and had the pleasure of taking Brother Bennett by the hand when in California.

After reading of the convention of Liberalists and Spiritualists to be held in Michigan, it made me feel glad, and I wanted to send a word of approval. I earnestly wish there were more such meetings. Why cannot all Liberalists and Spiritualists meet on common ground? Let the platform be broad and Liberal enough for all, and giv everyone a hearing upon all subjects pertaining to the elevation of mankind, to extend the right hand of fellowship to all that hav got out of the old ruts of bigotry. If the Liberalists and Spiritualists would make half the effort that the churches do we could hav our places of meetings well attended and not be failures for lack of support. We hav a Liberal Club in this city, with Prof. Chaney as lecturer. He is a good speaker, who can take a dose of Spiritualism, and then wash it down with a stronger one of Materialism. But it does not suit all, of course. Some want one kind, and some another. The attendance is not as large as it should be. The churches are filled with Liberalists and Spiritualists. Why, may I ask, should such things be? Some of us are tired waiting for the good time to come, which we hope is in the future, when all persons with advanced ideas can meet together in harmony.

MRS. O. A. BENJAMIN.

WAYNESBURG, PA., April 1, 1884.

MR. EDITOR: I think I could do some good with a few of your catalogs to distribute among some thoughtful persons of our town who I am satisfied would, on having their attention thus called to them, hav a curiosity to purchase and read some of your publications. A great many people would be really astonished to know that there are so many able Liberal works in existence, so assiduously does the ordinary bookseller avoid exhibiting them on his shelves. I am scattering your papers and publications among many readers, and it is having its effect, as I am frequently called upon to add a new subscriber to your list. There are a good many Liberals and Freethinkers here, but some of them seem to hav something the matter with their backs. But your TRUTH SEEKER and other publications are just the kind of medicin to giv them strength and courage, and I hope, ere long, to hav a sufficient number of convalescents to organize an auxiliary League. Then it will be surprising to see those with apparently no back-bone gaining strength and falling into rank.

Yours in the cause of liberty, H. CLAY LUSE.

PAXTON, ILL., April 9, 1884.

MR. EDITOR: I hav just finished reading Prof. W. S. Bell's lecture or address delivered in Paine Hall before the New England Freethinkers' Convention, Jan. 28, 1884, on anti-prohibition, and think it is just splendid. Every one should hav it. I hope the Freethinkers will keep the Bell ringing, for we need such bold and logical reasoners all over the land to teach the people to use their reasoning powers, to educate them out of superstition and vice, and make reasoning men and women of them. Liberals hav had enough of "believe or be damned;" let us hav kindness and liberty.

The dear old TRUTH SEEKER is better than ever since the "Children's Corner" has been added. We want good reading for our little folks. We hav always been in the habit of handing one paper around when we had read it, so others could see the good work going on, and we find some that would like to take it, but their wives object to it being brought into the house. I cannot see why women will cling to their enemy, the church, and be afraid of reading common sense. I think if they would read it awhile they would see who their real friends are.

SOPHIE NEWKIRK.

PROVIDENCE, R. I., April 13, 284.

MR. EDITOR: Until recently I had thought that Providence contained little or none of the "true blue" Freethought element. But a slight investigation shows differently.

During last winter there has been in progress of construction a certain brick building, which seemed to assume a sort of unknown character and the question which seemed to puzzle the minds of the people was, "What is it going to be?"

We looked in vain for an explanation in the daily papers.

By and by it was whispered that it was going to be an Infidel Hall. What! a public building devoted to Infidelity in this land of Roger Williams? And the Christians would walk by and look, and no doubt the dark trimmings would assume a more somber hue as the idea of Infidelity flitted through their minds.

Before long the structure was complete, and then came the dedication. By the way, it seems the hall was built by the Society of Free Religionists. It was not my privilege to be present at the dedication, but, from all accounts, it was a glorious occasion. I heard a Mr. Lynn (Spiritualist lecturer) say it seemed like the millennium. There were represented about all denominations. For instance, a Freethinker would get up and spout, then an orthodox minister would get up and quietly endeavor to annihilate the Freethinker's arguments. He would get hearty applause, not because they believed a word he said, but because he had the moral courage to giv his views. I hav attended their services on two occasions and listened to fine discourses by Mr. Hinckley, who seems to be a sort of "presiding elder." Their doctrin is the religion of humanity. They are trying to establish a class in geology, which will cost but a meager sum per week. I hav just written for Ingersoll's terms for a lecture here.

Yours truly, W. P. BLYTHE.

SOUTH BOSQUE, TEXAS, April 9, 284.

MR. EDITOR: THE FREETHINKERS' ALMANAC and "False Claims" received. They are valuable productions. The ALMANAC fills a long-felt want among Freethinkers. The bits of historic information in the calendar are a valuable acquisition to any lover of truth and progression into whose hands it may fall. The illustrations are splendid. The orthodox think it blasphemous and sacrilegious to picture Jehovah, but they cannot dispute the likeness after reading the accompanying scriptures. One of my neighbors looked at the pictures and said he must hav one sure, and had me sit right down and order it.

The Rev. Samuel Morris, of the Methodist church, preached a sermon here, March the 16th, on the support of Christian schools and the church. "For," said he, "the life of the church depends on Christian education," which I think is true, and is verified in the Catholic church to-day; for I don't believe it could exist fifty years if it were not for these schools. The preacher, after quoting everything he could find on the subject of tithing and paying priests the tenth of all they make, he called for a subscription for the support of missions and Christian schools, to be paid by October 13th. After the paper was passed around, only $7 being subscribed, he made a talk to his flock on the danger of not subscribing more liberally. He said that they had better pay it over, for God would hav it. If they would not pay it in cash, God would take it out of their stock; or he would send a late frost, or a hail, or a cylone, or the cotton worm, or some other calamity on them, for he would hav it, and they might as well make up their minds at once; but the class did not seem much frightened. He told them he would continue to call for God's dues until he got them, and they could take due notice and govern themselvs accordingly. I hav been out of the orthodox ranks less than one year, but I find Freethought and heresy spreading. I hav distributed Liberal papers as much as I was able to pay for, which is very annoying to our clergy and creed-bound neighbors. Infidelity is becoming more popular every day. It will not be many years until a man can do his own thinking and retain his respectability. You can see my heretical experience in the Independent Pulpit, No. 9, p. 9.

D. F. MARRS.

MILWAUKEE, WIS., April 8, 1884.

MR. EDITOR: The friends of reason and civil liberty are vigilantly and valiantly holding the fort in Milwaukee. Whilst we are not a city set on so high a hill as some Liberal consistories, we, without attempting to make ourselvs a universal providence, try to do the little we are able to do in the place where we are. The Liberal League here possesses some able speakers and many appreciativ hearers. In Mr. Gosman as president, and Mrs. Severance as secretary, is comprised a whole team. The beauty of the meetings is that debate is conducted without much wrangling, and any errors of statement are set down to wrong information or miscalculation, instead of being charged to wilful perversity. Last Sunday the writer occupied the stand and was gratified with attentiv listeners and discriminating critics to a dissertation on Practical Atheism. The ground taken was that the moral sense has its origin in the human consciousness, and has to do, not with pleasing an authority superior to himself, but is properly exerted as a sentiment under reason to discover the principles of justice and benevolence in our dealings with each other, and to prompt the individual to take care of himself. That the doctrin of a first cause was a contradiction of terms, and that all notion of a God must be repudiated, as it is the hypothetical basis of irrational despotism. That Liberalists, in all consistency, should discountenance organizations whose fundamental principle and ultimate purpose is hierarchy. Milwaukee's sentimental poetess, Ella Wheeler, says:

"When this world's pleasure for my soul sufficed,
Ere my heart's plummet sounded depths of pain,
I called on reason to control my brain,
And scoffed at the old story of the Christ.

"But when on burning wastes my feet had trod,
And all my life was desolate with loss,
With bleeding hands I clung about the cross,
And cried aloud, 'Thou needst a suffering God.'"

Imitating her style, I reply:

When idle fancies for my mind sufficed,
Before life's realties developed thought,
A mystic faith upon my feelings wrought,
And I believed the story of a Christ.

But when through science's path my feet had trod,
And much of labor brought me more of loss,
My reason, casting off the mocking cross,
Cried, "He who suffers cannot be a God."

JOHN P. GUILD.

GRANBY, MO., April 21, 1884.

MR. EDITOR: Inclosed find remittance for THE TRUTH SEEKER. Although for many years past I hav been addicted to reading Freethought literature, it was not till this last winter that I had the good fortune to meet with THE TRUTH SEEKER. A Mr. Wood, living near Cecil, Kansas, called my attention to it, and loaned me several copies, for which I am under infinit obligations to him.

It will doubtless seem strange that a paper of such extensiv circulation and patronage as THE TRUTH SEEKER should hav eluded the notice of a reading man till this late date, but the fact of my having followed the calling of laborer for the past twenty years, together with its attendant poverty and proscription, will perhaps be a sufficient explanation. Compelled to accept employment wherever I could find it, I hav for the most part consorted with purse-proud ignorance, and been under the edifying patronage of bigotry and superstition.

I am a nativ of Canada, reared in the neighborhood of Brockville, in the midst of gospel surroundings. I sometimes tried to avail myself of the lavish means of grace offered so freely at the revival meetings, but somehow the divine afflatus failed to giv down. Something in my spiritual organization didn't seem to harmonize with the regenerating appointments. Perhaps I was endowed with too lively a sense of the ludicrous in those days. I tried faithfully to cultivate a reverence for devotional airs, attitudes, and facial elongations, but to save my neck I couldn't assume such grimaces myself without provoking the mirthfulness of myself and my friends. I finally abandoned the attempt, and since then hav been groping my way through the world without the light of revelation. I am not to blame for my benighted condition, having made strenuous efforts to obtain a modicum of the evangelical caloric, with the results above mentioned. Phrenology defines the location of an organ called veneration, and perhaps the imperfect development of that faculty is to blame. I leave it to the metaphysicians to decide.

I am convinced at least that a man gifted with the peculiar propensities of a light comedian cuts but a sorry figure at a prayer-meeting among the elect of his neighbors. THE TRUTH SEEKER is not as well-known in Newton county among the rural population as it ought to be. Those lambs of God, the preachers, would denounce it and all such publications, lest they might divert the funds of the "dear brethren" from the contribution box. They (the brethren) are enjoined by their "guardian shepherd" to avoid all controversy with Infidels and skeptics regarding matters of faith, to read the literature prescribed by the church, such as Watts's Hymns, Baxter's "Saint's Rest," and Ayer & Co's. Almanac. Even the standard authors of poetry and fiction are not approved. The beautiful creations of Shakspere, Byron, Scott, Burns, Goldsmith, Dickens, and a host of other great and illustrious benefactors of the world, works that hav done more to humanize, exalt, and refine humanity than all the influences that ever emanated from the pulpit since Christ's time—such writings are effectually tabooed in the "rooral deestrix."

The writings of Paine, Voltaire, and the hosts of other Liberal writers are unknown, except by a very few much maligned Infidels. Even the brilliant and logical essays of Ingersoll would meet with a sorry fate should they fall into the hands of God's elect around here. I am much impressed with an article from the pen of Elliott Preston, published a few weeks ago in THE TRUTH SEEKER, entitled, "The Christian and Pagan Mythologies Contrasted." I hav read a little of Greek mythology and the poems of Homer, and after comparing them with the boasted "Paradise Lost," I am forced to the conclusion that the blind poet of Scio lays it away over Milton, both in harmonious rhythm and sublimity of diction. I believe the Iliad and Odyssey will survive the wrecks of time, and liv when Christ and Christendom be passed away, and Milton buried far beneath the crumbling debris of oblivion.

Well, I will close lest I exhaust your patience. Hoping to receive your splendid paper at an early date, the Liberal sentiments of which I shall ever strive to diffuse as far as my humble means and abilities will permit, I am,

Yours truly, JOSEPH TOWSLEY.

EATON, D. T., April 3, 1884.

MR. EDITOR: I cannot help telling you again that THE TRUTH SEEKER is a constant source of joy to me. Every new number seems to be still more precious than the former ones. Out here in the solitude we get the mail once a week, and that on Sunday, and during the afternoon of that day we feast on Infidel literature, with more delight, I am sure, than any Christian could experience in reading his book of books. Very often I get so interested in reading, discussing, and meditating the many live questions treated in your paper that I lose my Sunday night's sleep over it, but I don't think I am paying too high for the treat. How often I wish to converse with you about these reform questions! But perhaps you would feel the worse for it, and hav reason to thank fate, who made my ship cast anchor about fifteen hundred miles from New York. Women talk too much, anyhow, and if I am making myself a torment in that way you will surely forgiv me when I tell you that for six months I hav not heard the voice of a woman or child, and can hardly remember that at times they may sound disagreeable. The blessed seclusion in which I liv givs me ample chance to ponder over the truth of the saying, "The world do move." I am sorry indeed that women in general are yet slow in taking an activ part in that move, but it must needs be so as long as they are not treated as citizens in the full sense of the word. It is said that in according them equal rights with men a retrogressiv movement would necessarily take place, women being so very devoted to the church. The same might be said of the sons of green Erin and Ethiopia, but who at the present day would think of denying them their rights in order that the nation's progress might not be checked? In education we claim that attraction brings better results than coercion. This is a fundamental truth everywhere. Giv women something to take the place of church and Bible, and they will gradually leave the latter, provided that what should take their places be better and more interesting. The question of equal rights is only the means, not the aim. To bring women to a higher standard, she must be taken from her present hothouse condition, set out in the open soil of freedom, learn to stand the purifying influence of sunshine and storm, and grow healthy, strong, and self-reliant. On that soil only will the seed of Liberalism bring a full harvest. There only can women learn to reason more correctly, to realize that devotion to foolish fashions ruins their health and dwarfs their children in mind and body. There they might also learn that prohibition will cure vile passions about as effectually as the strait-jacket cures insanity. There is no hope for temperance of any kind as long as we are not converted to a health-producing diet. The temperance questions must first be applied to our food. Surely health reform is the basis of all reform.

There, too, is the land question, treated so earnestly by J. Hacker and J. H. Cook, and so little understood or cared for by most people, especially by women; but a pioneer in the northwest who has tried to build up for herself a free home is wide awake to the subject, and very thankful to the above-named friends for their laudable efforts in that very important reform. The problem is a complicated one, and many more years may pass ere a satisfactory solution to it can be found; but find it we must, if we mean to be a free and progressiv people. Co-operation, not communism, and selling everything at cost would be the means of assisting "incapables" to become "capables."

I must not close this letter without saying a word of the TRUTH SEEKER ANNUAL. It certainly deserves all the praise it gets, and more too. The story of "Big Jack Small" is worth more than a theological library. I wish I had the pictures of Big Jack and Gov. Nye. I would paste them over those horrid ones of the Christian God and his dark superior. The many fine illustrations arouse all that is in me of the gypsy nature, and that is not a little. As I look at the first one, representing the Parthenon, it seems to whisper, "Do you remember?" Yes, I remember, and shall never forget the days when I wandered through the broken colonnades, and sat on the high steps of that monument of matchless beauty, that marble illustration of Tonic Sol-fa, built by and for a people who hav not yet been equaled in the great art of harmoniously developing body and mind. The famous ruins crown with grave serenity the surrounding landscape, echoing the words of Aristophanes, "O thou our Athens, violet-wreathed, brilliant, most enviable city!" Pallas Atheneum dwells in those lofty halls, teaching lessons of wisdom to all who are willing to hear. She tells of that power in the land, the cunning, jealous priesthood, who rested not until it had besmeared with lies the representativs of noble man and womanhood, Pericles and Aspasia; rested not until it had imprisoned and poisoned the apostle of eternal goodness, Socrates, the immortal. It is still at work, right here in our midst; that power in the land, still jealous and cunning as of old, and the goddess of wisdom points at it with warning finger. May the number of those who understand her increase day by day is the ardent wish of

Yours truly, M. M. EGLI.

SYRACUSE, N. Y.

MR. EDITOR: In an indirect way, some months since, in alluding to the Oneida Community I used the words, "gigantic brothel;" and in THE TRUTH SEEKER under date of Feb. 9th Mr. Seward Mitchell, in an invectiv which he calls "friendly criticism," says my words are "wicked blasphemy." I would hav considered the criticism before, but illness prevented. I will now do so briefly, your space permitting.

Presumably he meant "a wicked lie," but he does not attempt to prove it. Could he hav shown it to be a mistake I would hav felt under obligations to him and hav been pleased to acknowledge the same.

The reference was to the institution as first organized. It was then by themselvs called a religious institution. It has changed in some respects for the better, it is understood, in the past few years, but still claims sanction and precedent from the so-called holy scriptures, and has no difficulty in finding an abundant warrant.

What is a brothel? In the proper and general acceptation of the term, a place where people of both sexes meet or liv and commingle without any regard to the marriage rites or ties. The Oneida Community claimed to be co-operativ in all things and to hold everything in common. Marriage complex, that is, in the interchange and commingling of the sexes, each man having a share in each or all of the opposit sex, and the relativ standing of the women the same in the ownership of one or all of the men. How many living in that way, Mr Mitchell, do you think it requires in numbers to make it a brothel, and what is the distinction and where is the difference, except that one is doing business in a small way, and the other you call a model home because conducted on a larger scale? And if a half-score, more or less, living in that way may properly be called a brothel, where is the impropriety in the least, or wrong, in calling one gigantic that you say can number three hundred?

"There I saw about three hundred people, men and women, and apparently a happier lot I never saw. Of the one hundred and fifty women all wore a beautiful reform dress. The buildings are real palaces." He wishes there were a million of such happy homes and families; then there would be no strikes, no hard times, etc.

It was reported through the papers some few years since that there had been a strike, a commotion, or an equivalent, and that the pious leader and founder had stepped out and over the border, accompanied by some choice and congenial spirits, and that some of those remaining leading and influential ones had submitted to what is called the legal form of marriage, promising fidelity, constancy, etc., and that others were soon to follow.

As to palaces, it is believed that inmates of smaller establishments of the kind often liv in luxurious apartments, dress in purple, and are frequently ornamented with diamonds.

Let us make a comparison, Mr. Mitchell, of a million homes of that kind esteemed highly by yourself with a million of another kind and call that the family home (not much in comparison, you say), where the affections center, not alone in being called father, husband, son, and brother, but all and more, which relationships are in harmony with and ordained by nature's laws. You may be a stranger to most or some of these relationships, but you had a mother, and are a son. Will you say that in one or in any condition it would hav been better for her to hav been a member of that institution? And if you hav a wife, sister, or daughter, would you say the same for them?

Extend the comparison a little farther, as to the children born under such lights and shadows as they would see and feel in places of that kind and those born in humbler homes, it might be in want and poverty.

"Without father, without mother,
Without sister, without brother,
They are nothing to the world,
And are nothing to each other."

All that is called love, and all of the affections ordained by nature and in common with the lower animals, are obliterated, dead.

Are there any words viler than those two, free love? I hope there are none in any other language that convey the same meaning.

Freethinkers hav no use for such. They believe in nature and in living in harmony with her laws, and nature everywhere and in everything revolts at that way of living. Animals and birds mate, rear their young in affection and fidelity, but the robin will not mate with the blackbird, nor the oriole with the swallow. Undisturbed, they come year after year to the same place, and both will share in the labor and care of feeding the young, and one has been known, when the other became disabled, to care, not only for the young, but for its wounded companion also. Song birds of all kinds do, and that king of birds, the eagle, will come year after year, the same pair, to the same crag, on the same rock.

The lion, called king of beasts, will mourn and pine for the loss of its mate, and manifests an undying affection for its young.

J. VAN DENBURGH.

THE Hartford (Conn.) Times tells the story of a theological student, soon to be graduated, who has a Bible class in one of the churches of that city. The subject of Sunday's lesson was the "Second Coming of Christ." Several of the good people expressed their views quite freely, after which it occurred to some that it would be well to hear from the theologian. He replied: "Six years ago I could hav told you all about it, but to-day I can't tell you anything."

ONE of the best ways to help along the cause of Freethought is to circulate THE TRUTH SEEKER. Trial subscriptions of three months for 50 cents.

How Happy I Am!

Dialog for Two Voices.

FIRST VOICE.

How happy am I all the day!
Happy at work, and happy at play!
Oh, there isn't a bird, nor flower, nor bee,
That's any happier than little me!
For birds, and flowers, and humming-bees,
Though light and careless as the breeze,
Can't go to school like you and I,
And learn to tell the reason why;
They can't hav teachers kind and good,
To bear with every fitful mood,
Striving always, soon and late,
To lead them in at wisdom's gate.

SECOND VOICE.

Well, birds can soar along the sky,
Though they can't tell the reason why:
And they can sing from morn till eve,
With not a lesson to make them grieve;
And flowers bloom without a thought
Of what, or how, they will be taught!
And bees eat honey all day long,
And dance and play the flowers among.

FIRST VOICE.

Would you be a flower without a sigh,
To bloom to-day—to-morrow die?

SECOND VOICE.

Why, I'd bloom again next year!
And that, you know, would soon be here—
I'd come out then, all fresh and new,
With a softer leaf and brighter hue.

FIRST VOICE.

And when your colors all should fade,
Be swept away by kitchen maid!
And would you be a singing bird,
Your song forgot when it was heard?
Hiding yourself amid green leaves,
From pop-guns and from wicked thieves?
Would you be changed to a yellow bee,
With a dish of honey on your knee,
To get your living out of the flowers,
That nature planted in her bowers?

SECOND VOICE.

Well, they don't hav anything to do
But to be "jolly" the whole day through!
To eat and sing, and then to play
Throughout the long, bright, summer day.
Yes, I should like such fun as that—
I wouldn't be scared by a sly old cat!
And I'd build my nest high on a tree,
Where boys and pop-guns couldn't find me.

FIRST VOICE.

Birds are not idle—you mistake;
They go to work soon as they wake;
The flowers work while we're asleep—
Down at their roots they're digging deep;
They wash their faces in sparkling dew,
Which they get each morning, fresh and new.
The hyacinths and the daffodils
Hav come into life beneath the hills;
And the violets sweet hav oped their eyes,
And caught the blue from sunny skies;
Daisies and buttercups, too, will come—
Don't you think that they must work some,
To climb up here through the grass so green,
To jump right up, so nice and clean?
And all the bees that are anything,
The livlong day are on the wing,
And just as busy as ever you see!
All except the great drone bee,
Who idly sits the whole day through—
I wouldn't be a drone—would you?
I'm sure that I would rather be me
Than blooming flower, or bird, or bee,
And go to school from day to day.
Listening to all my teachers say—
And, while learning how to read and spell,
My tongue shall never a falsehood tell.
Kind and gentle, and good and true—
That's what I want to be—don't you?

Dot.

Her right name was Dorothy, but everybody called her Dot. She was small in stature, and thin, so that Dot seemed very appropriate, and as if it properly belonged to such a wee little girl. Dot was an only child, and her father was dead. Her mother bore the great burden of poverty as well as she could, and worked hard, early and late, to support Dot and herself; but, being a fragil woman, she overtaxed her strength, and one morning Dot woke up to find herself motherless and alone. Her mother had quietly passed away in the night-time, without a word of warning or of good-bye to Dot, her one great treasure.

Poor little Dot! How dark the world seemed to her when she came back from the village burying-ground, where neighbors had kindly laid her away from her sight her precious dead! How gladly would she hav closed her own eyes and slept the last sleep, too! But no; Fate decreed that she must liv.

"Ha'in't ye got no folks nowhere?" inquired one of the rather uneducated selectmen of the town, the night after the funeral.

"I hav an Aunt Miller somewhere up in New Hampshire; I don't know where," sobbed Dot. "She didn't like my mamma very well," and the big tears rolled down the little orphan's cheeks at mention of her dear dead and gone mamma.

Search among her mother's effects revealed the address of Dot's Aunt Miller, and a letter was dispatched to her, detailing briefly Dot's situation, and inquiring what her relativ would do concerning her. In due time came the laconic reply, "Ticket the child and send her on."

So the town authorities bought a railroad ticket for Dot with the money realized from the sale of the mother's scanty furniture and clothing, placed her in care of the conductor of train, with instructions to pass her along safely, and, with a basket of lunch, she was thus started on a journey of six hundred miles, to her Aunt Miller. Dot was eight years old, but appeared two or three years younger.

Her heart beat fearfully as she stepped on board the car, for she had never before seen a railway train, but the conductor and passengers were very kind and interested in the novelty of her condition, traveling alone to a strange place, with her ticket pinned on the bosom of her dress. Several of the passengers gave her money, until her little pocket was heavy with silver and gold coins. One kind lady gave her a small purse to put her money in, and as Dot dropped the pieces in the purse in a dazzled, bewildered way, she thought she was very rich.

In due time she reached her destination, very tired and very sleepy.

The driver of the stage-coach approached her, and looking down upon her slight form, he whistled a prolonged, low whistle.

"Say, little baby, are you the one they're expecting up to the Miller mansion?"

"I am going to my aunt Catherine Miller's, if I can find the way," said Dot, looking around, doubtfully.

"And what's your name, you leetle, teenty tonty creature, you?"

"Dot."

"The name fits you to a T. Did ye come all stark alone?"

"Yes, sir, only the folks in the cars."

"My stars and garters, I say! Well, hop right in here. I guess you're the one I was to look for. You must be clean tuckered out," and taking the child in his two big hands he lifted her into the coach as if she had been a kitten. "Got any luggage?"

"There isn't much left, but you may hav it—what there is," and Dot proffered a piece of mince pie and a biscuit from her basket.

"O pshaw! I didn't mean eatables. Havn't ye any trunk, or bandbox, or carpet bag?"

"No, sir."

"What, havn't ye any clothes at all?"

"Yes, these I hav on."

"Is that all? Gracious goodness! Well, we'll start along, then. Get up, there! G'lang!" and snapping his whip the horses started off on a brisk trot. In a short time he reined up before an ample, old-fashioned house, and, taking the thin little object upon his shoulder, he walked boldly into the Miller kitchen, and stood Dot on her feet before the astonished eyes of Mrs. Miller herself.

"Is this the young one?" questioned that lady in a tone that grated like a coarse file upon the ears of sensitiv little Dot. "Why, there's nothing to her. I can't get much work out o' her, I'll be bound. How old are you?"

"Eight," answered Dot, rather dubiously.

The poor child was tired, excited, and bewildered. The tears began to flow, and the sobs to come.

"Oh, don't go to crying the first thing. I've got to keep ye, I s'pose. Your mother was my half-sister, but she wasn't much for working, nor contriving, nuther. But no matter, now. Take off your hat, and go to the sink and wash your face and hands, and then you can hav something to eat."

Poor little Dot! She began to realize that she had not tumbled into paradise, exactly. But the hard-visaged, rough-spoken woman was her own kin, and had taken her under her protection, and she thought it was better than being sent to the poorhouse, anyway.

After supper she was glad to go to bed, for she was tired—so tired. She sank into the middle of a soft feather-bed, and was soon sound asleep. When she awoke a broad gleam of sunlight slanted across her pillow, and seemed to say, "I kiss you good morning, little girl."

She dressed quickly, and went down stairs with a palpitating heart, resolved, however, to do everything possible to please, and to be good and dutiful to her Aunt Catherine, who was a hard-working widow, and liked to see everyone around her busy about something.

"I let you stay in bed this morning," said she to Dot, "because I s'posed you were tired and sleepy, but hereafter you must rise when I do—at five o'clock; do ye hear?"

"Yes, ma'am," sighed Dot.

With the help of a hired man Mrs. Miller managed the farm, and in summer time kept a few boarders. She was a worker, and Dot soon discovered that she meant for her to be a worker too.

"I shall call you Dorothy," she said. "I'll hav no such baby names as Dot around here," and pretty soon it was, "Dorothy, run here!" and, "Dorothy, run there!" all day long. The little girl had small chance to play, and was only sent to school a part of the year. It was a hard, hard life for one so young, but she was comfortably clad, and had substantial food and a shelter.

She made herself very useful to her aunt, who would not permit her to hav any companions, because she said it would induce idleness and habits of gossip. But she could not keep the chickens, pigs, calves, and oxen from being company for Dot, or Dorothy, as she called her, for the child had a faculty of imitating the sounds of birds and animals, and it was amusing to hear her call the chickens, like the mother hen, and they would come trooping up to her and fly in her lap and on her shoulders, like so many pets, as indeed they were. She would call the pigs, and the old mother pig, with her thirteen pink babies, would come as fast as she could from the orchard, and the baby pigs would cuddle all around her. The bossies would run races with her, and the old cows would answer her moo from the farthest end of the pasture. She would bleat like the sheep, and whinny like the horse, and those animals would stare at her, wonderingly. Then she would call the birds with their own notes, and they would go circling around her head, and almost alight on her hands as she held them out to them. Everybody thought Dorothy a wonderful child, except her Aunt Catherine. To her, there was never but one wonderful child, and that was her own little boy who died when two days old. She told Dorothy she must stop imitating pigs and cows. There was no good, she said, in a girl sitting on a stone wall and wasting time imitating birds and animals—she must stop it.

"They're all the company I hav, Aunt Catherine," pleaded Dorothy. "Please let me hav them."

"Company! Am I not company enough, I should like to know?"

Poor Mrs. Miller, like many another, failed to understand the heart and mind of youth. To her mind, food, clothing, shelter, comprehended the whole of life, and that Dorothy should prefer the society of birds and animals to her companionship was an enigma that she could not solve. She thought that she knew life and all the world, but of Dorothy's sweet, sensitiv, far-reaching nature, she had not the remotest idea. Dorothy was her slave, and yet Mrs. Miller was a strong abolitionist, and did not believe in slavery; yet, if ever there was a slave, it was Dorothy. True, she was not beaten with a lash, but that was because she was obedient. So time wore on, and Dorothy did the bidding of her aunt uncomplainingly, day after day, year after year.

When she was seventeen she was taken sick with a fever. Sicker and sicker she grew, until one day the old doctor shook his head sadly, as he left the door of the Miller farm-house. "Make her as comfortable as possible," he said to Mrs. Miller, "I think she will not remain here long."

In a moment, Mrs. Miller began to see that she had not done just right by the poor orphan girl. As she had moaned on the sick bed, in her delirium, Dot had said many things that set her aunt thinking. She had missed her so much, too, that she realized how invaluable the girl was to her. And now, she was going to die. She saw how cruel and unkind she had been to the motherless one, and she was filled with remorse. Oh, if she would only get well, how differently would she do! How anxiously she watched, day and night, by her bedside! How she caressed the little brown hands, hardened and roughened by toil for her.

Dot, contrary to all expectations, did not die. Slowly the forces of life gathered, and she began to get better. Aunt Catherine hovered joyfully about her, and one day she kissed her, when Dot burst into tears.

"What's the matter?" anxiously inquired Mrs. Miller.

"You kissed me, and—and—I wasn't used to it," said Dot.

She called her Dot, too, her old name, and was so kind to her that Dot couldn't understand it.

When she recovered her health, her aunt invited the young people of the neighborhood to come and see her; she bought her a piano, and a new silk dress, and many other things—in fact, Dot had only to express a wish to hav it gratified. She was so astonished she didn't know what to do, and thought her aunt was losing her mind.

"No," said Mrs. Miller, "I am just coming to my right senses. I hav denied you the pleasures that your youth ought to hav had, that belonged to your childhood, and now I want to make all the amends I can. I want you to hav society, happiness, all that belongs to joyous life. I am growing old. I hav had my day, but I had forgotten it. Hereafter, I liv only in your life. I did not know what a good girl you were, until there was danger of my losing you. I hav been harsh and unkind to you many times, but after this I mean to be as much like a mother to you as I can be."

"Dear Aunt Catherine," said Dot, "since you will let me, I will be a daughter to you. As severe as my sickness was, I do not regret it, for it has let me find my way to your heart."

"Where you shall always stay," and Aunt Catherine pillowed Dot's head on her breast, and kissed her again.

Correspondence.

Woodstown, N. J., April 16, 1884.

Dear Miss Wixon: I liv in a family that takes The Truth Seeker. Richard Matlack and I are very much interested in the Children's Corner. I hav read and spoken a good many pieces in school, taken from the Children's Corner, and I like it very much. I hav solved the cross-word, by J. A. Heineburg, in The Truth Seeker, April 5th. The noted man is Ben Butler; April 12th, the race of people is Mongolian. I hav written a long enough letter for you this time. I will write again sometime. Yours truly,

Maggie Headley.

Editor of Children's Corner: I find that by using the consecutiv numbers from 365 to 389 inclusiv, a magic square can be formed meeting the requirements of Mr. Van Pelt's puzzle. In No. 4, the middle number, 877, occupies the central cell of the square. In No. 5, the smallest number, 365, occupies that position, and in No. 6, the largest number, 389, takes the place of honor.

Any given number of the series may be placed in any given cell, and the other numbers so arranged as to fill the conditions of this puzzle. Paul R. Towne.

BIBLE MYTHS

AND THEIR

Parallels in Other Religions.

Being a Comparison of the Old and New Testament Myths and Miracles with those of heathen nations of Antiquity, Considering also their Origin and Meaning. With numerous illustrations.

The object of the work is to point out the myths with which the Old and New Testaments abound; to show that they were held in common with other nations; and then trace them to their evident origin and explain their meaning.

"It has long been acknowledged by the most eminent biblical students that the Hebrew scriptures contain a large mythical element; but, so far as we know, the present is the first complete and scholarly atttempt to trace these myths to their source, and ascertain their original signification."—Boston Courier.

"Never before has there been given a volume to the reading world that shows the research for the origin of these myths as does this one just published by J. W. Bouton, of New York."—Boston Times.

"It is unquestionably true that the results of a rationalistic study of the Christian scriptures are nowhere else so accessible as they are now made in the work before us.—N. Y. Sun.

Poetry.

The Creed of Burns.

ONE OF HIS SUPPRESSED POEMS.

To gull the mob and keep them under,
The ancients told their tales of wonder.
A pious fraud, a holy blunder,
A rainbow sign,
An earthquake or a blast o' thunder
Were held divine.

By those who've faith to swallow doses,
A wondrous story nothing loses;
The dextrous feats ascribed to Moses,
Are proofs as plain,
O' sleight o' hand, as Horman Bogue's
Legerdemain.

Beware the stories o' tradition,
Let sense giv way to superstion—
The royal magic competition,
O sacred fountain!
Which can a midge by faith's volition
Swell to a mountain.

A God o' mercy, just and good,
Held forth as in an angry mood,
Drooning the world a' in a flood
To punish Hymen.
And turning water into blood
Just like a demon.

He murdered thousands in a trice,
Made Egypt swarm with frogs and lice.
Had he sent sheep, and cows, and rice,
His hungry hoards,
Might ilka ane hav got a slice,
And praised their Lord.

Wi' hocus pocus rod in hand,
Like Mother Goose's magic wand,
They could the elements command,
As legends run;
Divide the sea and burn the land,
Or stop the sun.

Their prodigies bombast surpasses,
Like dykes the ocean stood in masses;
They had flying prophets, speaking asses,
Besides a saute wife.
heir amorous Ghaists o'ercame the lasses
Wha lived that life.

Their Samson's strength lay in his hair,
Their jealous waters sterling were,
Showers of fire came through the air
Like brimstone danders—
Saints lived in fire by virtue rare,
Like salamanders.

The Apostle Paul, by fancy's whim,
Soared up to heaven a' in a dream,
And Satan brought him back t'would seem,
So says himsel',
But how could Nick to heaven climb,
Wha's chained in hell?

This damned old wily serpent, Nick,
Was promised lang a mighty kick—
He turned the chase, and played the trick
Wi' God's first-born;
He got him scourged, nailed to a stick,
And crooned wi' a thorn.

First search the subject through the piece,
'Tis fraught wi' blunders such as these,
That reverend priests their flocks may fleece
Wi' weely conscience;
Teach humble beings by degrees
To swallow nonsense.

The sovereign leaders of each faction,
Join hand in hand in close compaction,
To set God's kingdom up to auction,
A lumpin bargain;
Drive silly mortals to distraction,
Wi' their damned jargon.

Yet moral truth shall gain the day,
Illumed by nature's glorious ray,
Anathemas shall fly away
Wi' priests and diels;
Sound reason shall the scepter sway,
Hard at her heels.

A Reply to Mr. Chapman.

To THE EDITOR OF THE TRUTH SEEKER, Sir:

On reading the letter of Dr. Chapman in your issue of March 15th, I feel like afflicting you with a few words more, if you can spare the space.

I am very sorry to see anyone, and especially one having the influence that physicians often hav, placing so much as a straw of discouragement in the path of human rights, progress, and happiness. It is a self-evident fact that every man who desires it has just as good a right to land enough to raise his food from as he has to life itself, and every man who wishes well to his country now or hereafter ought to exert himself to secure this right to all, instead of trying to lull the people and keep them asleep on the subject until all the land has gone into the clutches of railroads and rich monopolists, thereby giving cause for another bloody war to regain the workers' birthright, for the people of this nation will not always be slaves. A time will come when the working classes will demand their right to land, and will hav it, if every monopolist must die in the struggle.

Dr. Chapman says there are in Kansas half a million people who took up land under the Homestead law, paying only $14 for 160 acres, and that only one-fourth of them hav prospered, while the other three-fourths hav proved incompetent. Well, if only one-fourth are successful, then there are 125,000 in that one new state better off than they would be scattered about in other businesses, working for starvation wages; and the withdrawal of these men has given another 125,000 men a chance to get work, so that 250,000 hav already been benefited by the free-land law of Kansas, to say nothing of the benefits these farmers' children will derive from having homes and opportunities to become self-supporting, intelligent, and happy, instead of being exposed to the vices of city life.

And this success of only one-fourth of the Kansas settlers more than justifies me in all the hard things I hav said against land thieves and the venal Congress that aids them and is part and parcel of them.

How is it in other occupations? I hav repeatedly read that of those who start in life as merchants, ninety-five in every hundred fail, while only one in four of the Kansas farmers ha s failed. "Glory hallelujah!" if that expression means encouragement. I feel a new impulse, and will liv on two meals a day three months longer if I can get paper and stamps, and the papers will publish what I write. If a careful observer will look into the matter, he will find that at least nineteen in twenty landless men, who work for other men at day wages, fail ever to obtain of their own. Some hav abundant proofs in and out of Dr. Chapman's letter in favor of free land.

But, says the doctor, the other three-fourths of the Kansas experimenters are incapables, and hav failed of success, not because they are vicious, nor drunkards, nor bad neighbors, nor bad citizens, but are simply incapable of conducting agricultural operations with profit, because nature did not bless them with physical and mental organizations equal to those of the prosperous farmers.

Well, if a lack of physical and mental power is the cause of their failure, that is no argument against free land, nor is it a sufficient reason why the government should go on robbing everybody, the capable as well as the incapable, of land, and making them slaves, tramps, thieves, burglars, prostitutes, or paupers. So I find not one word in the doctor's letter against free land, although at first reading it may appear very discouraging to a superficial thinker.

The doctor says what is needed of such reformers as friend Hacker, Mr. Cook, and some others is to tell how to keep these people in possession of a home. If these people are physically or mentally incapable of managing a farm and obtaining a living from it they should not hav gone there; they should hav remained where they were born and brought up, and their friends should hav helped them.

If your "land laws" were not imperfect they would not be allowed to sell for $1,000 what they got for $14. Under the laws that I am trying to get enacted no man will be allowed to sell the land for more than he givs for it. If he receives a farm lot by paying $14 for surveying, fixing the boundaries, and making the deed, and then improves the land by his own industry or capital, he may sell the improvements he has made, and the one who buys the improvements becomes entitled to the land by paying only the $14 that the first settler gave.

Neither Hacker nor Cook can tell how to keep these men in possession of their homes, till we know more of the circumstances and of their real character and families. If they are really incapable, on account of physical or mental debility, why are they so? What caused their infirmity? Probably land robbery. Very likely their parents were robbed of their right to land, and had to work for others at starvation wages; had not time to read, study, nor think; grew up in ignorance of the laws of life and health; did not learn to restrain their passions, and after their weary day's work was over, squandered the little remnant of their vitality in begetting these incompetent children. And if this be so, the doctor's letter furnishes another proof or argument in favor of freedom; for when all can hav comfortable homes and time to learn anything, there will not be so many incompetents born. When all can hav homes, and read, and understand and practice the teachings of the noble Heywood's, very few "incapables" will be born, and then the people of Massachusetts will look back on those who are now persecuting the Heywood's with the same loathing and disgust that we now do on those who hung Quakers and witches; but without homes of their own, the teachings of the Word, or of the highest heaven—if there is such a place—cannot do much to improve the race; but enough for one chapter. Amen! Selah! Yours, J. HACKER.

Obituary.

Died March 19, 1884, Mrs Dulcinea Watts, aged 66 years.—Osceola Sentinel.

Then and there died a true Liberal—intuitivly Liberal, without conversion; naturally too Liberal to be bound by a limited creed. Her orthodox friends, during a long illness, and doubtless with the best of motivs, persuaded toward a change of mind, but the patient and tired spirit fled unchanged. Mr. Hastings delivered an impressiv address at the funeral.

The great and the good march on to the limitless future, but it is the good alone are great.

"Leaves hav their time to fall,
And flowers to wither at the north wind's breath,
And stars to set; but all—
All seasons hast thou for thine own, O death!"

F. J. EMARY.

P. S.—Mr. Watts has by him the first number issued of THE TRUTH SEEKER, and, either from the office or from the book store, has taken it ever since.

TRUTH:

A Poem in Three Parts.

BY E. N. KINGSLEY.

Dedicated to Truth Seekers, Spiritualists, Skeptics, Reformers, Practical Atheists, and Impracticable Christians.

Containing a picture of the JEWISH JEHOVAH.

As Described by the Bible.

"There went up a smoke out of his nostrils, and fire out of his mouth devoured: coals were kindled with it" (Psalms xviii, 8).

40 pp. Handsomely executed. Price, 25 cents.

BEES! BEES! BEES!

FROM $2,000 TO $5,000 A YEAR KEEPING HONEY BEES.

The particulars are simply to prevent the great loss that most bee masters hav to contend with annually. Then giv the bees a chance to increase and collect surplus honey to their fullest capacity; all of which can be easily accomplished by using the kind of hive described in "Kidder's Secrets of Bee-keeping."

Send for the Book and see how easily it can be done with a few swarms of bees.

THIS BOOK IS A RELIABLE GUIDE

to all persons that keep bees, especially to the novice or new beginner, as it teaches how all of the troubles and disappointments that the bee master is liable to, can be successfully overcome, such as Foul Brood, Dysentery, Bee Robbery, Ravages of Moth Millers, Loss of Queen, loss of bees in Swarming time, by their flight to the forests, also the great loss in winter and early spring management, which is usually more than all other ways combined. This book will also inform the bee master HOW BEES WILL INCREASE AND THROW OFF SWARMS to an enormous extent, all conditions being favorable. The old stocks will frequently swarm three or four times each, and oft times the first swarms thrown off will swarm once or twice each with a good hive and right kind of management. In warmer climates the bees will increase and swarm to a much greater extent.

GREAT YIELD OF SURPLUS HONEY.

This Book will inform the bee master how to get the greatest amount of surplus honey, and at the same time hav it in small packages weighing three-quarters of a pound to two or three pounds, as may be desired, which will command the highest price in market. In a good season the bee keeper may calculate on two or three hundred pounds of surplus honey from each old stock, and from fifty to one hundred pounds from the earlier young swarms, especially if they do not over-swarm.

NO MORE BEE-STINGS IN MANAGING BEES.

The Book will post the bee-keepers how to manage them when putting them on, or taking off surplus honey boxes, and not get stung in the whole operation.

BEE-KEEPING FOR OUR SONS AND DAUGHTERS.

It being the most pleasant, as well as the most profitable business that young people can engage in, and at the same time remain at home with their parents. The author has known of several young men who commenced the culture of the bee in their teens, and are now making more money than their fathers who run the farm, and doing it easily and with small investments. We must also remember that the women folks often make the best of bee-keepers, and not so liable to neglect them as the men folks.

KIDDER'S BEE BOOK

should be in the hands of all persons who like honey, and take an interest in the little honey bee. It contains more matter than many books that sell for two dollars, and is embellished with numerous cuts and drawings. There is no trouble, loss, or damage that a bee master has to contend with but what the book will giv the proper remedy by simply referring to the index, and that will point to the page where it is fully explained.

In order to bring this book more prominently before the mass of bee keepers, the Author proposes to giv, as a premium to each purchaser of a book, from this date until July next, the privilege of making his Celebrated Patent Bee Hive, as spoken of in book, for their own use (but not to sell) Free of Charge, otherwise there will be the usual Patent Fee of Five Dollars to each individual that wishes to make and use the hive.

PRICE, BOARD BOUND, CLOTH BACK, 75 CENTS.

N. B. The directions for hive making with cuts, drawings, etc., will be inclosed within each book sold, until July next (not longer). Now is the time for all bee-keepers to avail themselves of this liberal offer, which is simply to buy a book at the Regular Price, before July next

D. M. BENNETT'S LAST WORK.

A TRUTH SEEKER

Around the World.

FOUR LARGE VOLUMES.

With a steel plate engraving of the author in Vol. I. and each volume illustrated with forty-seven cuts.

BY D. M. BENNETT,

Late editor of THE TRUTH SEEKER, author of "A Truth Seeker in Europe," "Gods and Religions of Ancient and Modern Times," "The World's Sages, Thinkers, and Reformers," "Champions of the Church," etc., etc.

Handsomely bound in red cloth, $6.50; in leather, red edges, $9.50; in morocco, gilt edges, $10.50.

Readers of THE TRUTH SEEKER know the circumstances under which this work was written. The last words penned by the great author were for the fourth volume which was nearly completed at his death, and which will now contain an account of his world-lamented death and burial. Mr. Bennett was a very patient and faithful chronicler of the habits and customs of the different peoples of the many places he visited. The every-day life of all nations is laid before the reader by one who has visited them and beheld them with his own eyes. Particular attention is paid to the progress of Freethought in the various countries he visited, and the morality of so-called pagan nations is contrasted with the morality of Christian countries, much to the detriment of the latter The work is a

Freethinker's History of the World.

This work and "A TRUTH SEEKER IN EUROPE" should be in every Liberal's library Besides its intrinsic worth it is a memento of one of the greatest Freethinkers the world has known—of one who ranks with Voltaire and Paine in the force and clearness of his writings.

ANOTHER NEW BOOK!

New! Eloquent! Elegant! Splendid!

JUST PUBLISHED.

PROSE POEMS

And Selections,

BY

ROBERT G. INGERSOLL.

This new book is a gem. It is a model in every respect. In fact, one of the richest, brightest, best ever issued.

It contains, besides the celebrated "Decoration Day Oration," never before published, and all the famous "tributes" heretofore printed in various shapes, but never brought together till now, many other gems selected from the speeches, arguments, lectures, letters, table-talks, and day-to-day conversations of the author.

The work is designed for, and will be accepted by, admiring friends as a rare personal souvenir. To help it serve this purpose, a fine steel portrait, with autograph fac simile, has been prepared especially for it.

In the more elegant styles of binding, this volume is eminently suited for presentation purposes, for any season or occasion.

In workmanship the volume is a masterpiece. The type is large and beautiful; the paper heavy and richly tinted; the presswork faultless; and the binding, as perfect as the best materials and skill can produce. The book is quarto in size, and contains 248 pages. No item of expense has been spared to make the work worthy of author and public.

PRICES:

Silk-cloth, beveled edges, gilt back and side,	$2 50
Half-calf, mottled edges, elegant library style,	4 50

TESTIMONIALS:

Read the following testimonials, and be convinced that our claims are correct in every particular and that your ailments can be eradicated without the aid of MEDICIN. THESE APPLIANCES ARE THE ACME OF PERFECTION:

Remarkable Cure of Paralysis in One Week.

CINCINNATI, Dec. 19, 1882.

DR. L. TENNEY—Dear Sir: As I feel greatly indebted to you for the benefit I hav received from your treatment, and the use of your Magnetic appliances, I can say without hesitation to those afflicted as I hav been that the effect was simply marvelous. Two weeks ago I was stricken with paralysis in my right arm and could not use it at all, but after wearing a suit of your MAGNETIC CLOTHING for one week, can use it quite as well as ever. I hav also been troubled with Dyspepsia and Kidney Complaint for a number of years, from which I hav suffered intensely, and, although doctoring all the time, never found but temporary relief. Since putting on your appliances I hav experienced great benefit, and if I improve as rapidly as I hav in the past two weeks, will soon be well. I would, therefore, recommend to those suffering as I hav your Magnetic appliances as the only means of effecting a sure cure. Yours respectfully,

WM. H. CLEMMER,
No. 80 Eastern avenue.

Remember that the same appliances which will effect a cure in a case of Paralysis will at the same time eradicate CATARRH or DYSPEPSIA in the same patient. We do not, like the Old School Physician, change medicins every day until, after dosing the patient almost to death, he may possibly strike something (if he is very skilful) that brings relief for the time being.

Neuralgia of the Heart of Six Years Standing Cured in Three Weeks.

SHULLSBURG, WIS., Dec. 11, 1882.

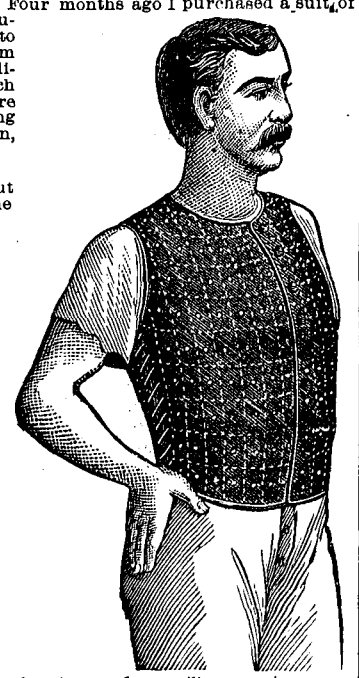
DR. L. TENNEY—Dear Sir: After wearing one of your MAGNETIC VESTS for about three weeks, I was entirely cured of Neuralgia of the Heart and Side, which had been a source of misery to me for the last six years. I had tried numerous remedies before without benefit, but as soon as I put on the MAGNETIC VEST I got relief instantly. With unbounded gratitude, I remain

Yours respectfully,
H. A. BROWN.

Ladies, read the following testimony from a lady who had been under drug treatment for eight years with nervous prostration and female weakness:

OSBORN, O., Dec. 15, 1882.

DR. L. TENNEY: Your letter just received; also the Clothing on Tuesday last. Fitted perfectly. FELT BETTER FROM THE FIRST HOUR I HAD THEM ON. Am not joking, and if I improve as rapidly as I hav since Tuesday, will soon be well. Will report again soon. Respectfully yours, E. J. K.



This lady reports herself entirely cured in less than six weeks after putting on the garments, and, although in bed, unable to get out, when applied, she nevertheless was able to ride twenty miles in two days after the application. The lady's name can be had upon application at this office, by any-one desiring to communicate with her.

Ladies, read the following testimony from a lady who had been suffering for two years with an Ovarian Tumor, and who had been told that nothing but the knife would save her life, and the chances were as 9 to 1 against recovery. In four months' time she is perfectly well, and has not taken a dose of medicin since putting on the appliances. Consult us when your physician tells you he can do nothinog for you; it will pay you.

SHULLSBURG, WIS., November 19, 1882.

DR. L. TENNEY, Dear Sir: About two years ago my health began to fail me; I became nervous, lost all desire for food, and, in fact, began to fail rapidly, so that I became alarmed and consulted several physicians of St. Louis, at which place I was then stopping, all of whom declared that I had an Ovarian Tumor, and that the only thing that would save my life would be the knife. About six months ago I grew rapidly worse, and had about made up my mind to take the only course that seemed left to me, and submit to an operation, when my attention was called to the Eureka Magnetic Appliances. As a drowning man will catch at a straw, so did I catch at this faint hope of a cure. Four months ago I purchased a suit of your appliances. From the very first I felt invigorated, the tumor, which had extended entirely across my abdomen, began to decrease, my pains became less from day to day, until now I am as well as I ever was in my life. Since putting on the appliances I hav not taken a single dose of medicin. My bowels, which before were constipated, are now regular. I would therefore cheerfully recommend them to anyone suffering as I hav, believing that they will do all and more than you claim for them. I remain,

Gratefully yours, MRS. MARY J. STEWART.

Remember that these appliances are not worn next the skin, but over the under-garment, and, unlike all other appliances in the market, they impart no shocks and leaves no sores.

If you are uncertain as to what would best suit your case send us word stating symptoms, and we will advise you what would be best suited to treat you. While our appliances are offered at less than one-third of what others are selling worthless appliances for, yet we will guarantee that the magnetic quality is a hundred fold superior to any other appliance ever offered the public, and will outlast the garments themselvs. Every magnet is put through a particular process, and hav raised five times their own weight six months after being magnetized, while not a single appliance in the market will attract the smallest particle of iron, the majority of such worthless appliances having so-called magnets made of material no better than hoop-iron, and not capable of retaining magnetism for a moment. All of our garments are made from the very best material for the purpose, and will outlast any and all other garments now before the public. Every magnet is arranged in the garments upon scientific principles, and not haphazard as in all the others. We offer you therefore

Gems of Thought.

ALL other conditions being equal, those whose belief is founded upon evidence should be the most moral. They understand that good and bad conduct inevitably produce their effects, and they govern their actions accordingly. They obtain not their salvation, their justification, nor their happiness upon the merits of others; but having only their own good works to depend upon, it stands them in hand to practice the best morals. to entertain the purest sentiments, and to be governed by the best motivs.—D. M. Bennett.

MY words fly up; my thoughts remain below;
Words without thoughts never to heaven go.
—Shakspere's Hamlet.

DIFFERENCES in religious opinions are of incalculable benefit to mankind. They excite thought, and, though the discussions which arise often fan the embers of discord, they serve also to keep alive the pure flame of true religion.—James Kennard.

H. W. BEECHER has no more title to ecclesiastical standing than O. B. Frothingham. In an article published in the North American Review he definitly renounces the supreme authority of the Bible. The scriptures are to him authority only co-ordinately with reason and science. They "contain" truth; so does the Koran. The fall of man, redemption by Christ, retribution, all giv place to evolution. Evolution is the solution of the problem of human destiny, of the ages past and to come. Mr. Beecher is no longer in the half-way house of Liberalism, but is an out-and-out radical in his comprehensiv belief. —The Watchman.

WHEN we infer any particular cause from an effect, we must proportion the one to the other, and can never be allowed to ascribe to the cause any qualities but what are exactly sufficient to produce the effect. A body of ten ounces raised in any scale may serve as a proof that the counterbalancing weight exceeds ten ounces; but it can never afford a reason that it exceeds a hundred. If the cause assigned for any effect be not sufficient to produce it, we must either reject that cause or add to it such qualities as will giv it a just proportion to the effect. But if we ascribe it further qualities or affirm it capable of producing other effects, we can only indulge the license of conjecture and arbitrarily suppose the existence of qualities and energies without reason or authority.—Hume on Providence and a Future State.

"WHEN you are my age, my dear," said Sir Walter Scott to his daughter Anna, who had called something vulgar not in his opinion deserving the stigma, "you will thank God that nothing that is worth having is common." His life preached the lesson more eloquently than the touching words.—London Spectator.

THE peasant's idea of God—true to him—would be false to me, because I should feel it to be unworthy and inadequate. If the nineteenth century after Christ adopts the conceptions of the nineteenth century before him—if cultivated and educated Christians adopt the conceptions of the ignorant, narrow, and vindictiv Israelite—they are guilty of thinking worse of God, of taking a lower, meaner, more limited view of nature, than the faculties he has bestowed are capable of inspiring—and as the highest views we are capable of forming must necessarily be the nearest to the truth, they are wilfully acquiescing in a lie. They are guilty of what Bacon calls the "apotheosis of error"—stereotyping and canonizing one particular style of the blunders through which thought passes on its way to truth.—Greg's Creed of Christendom.

WHAT though a thousand years and more
We hav trod the threshing floor,
And our richer, fiercer neighbor
Snatched the guerdon of our labor—
Garnered up the sheaves of grain,
Leaving but chaff as our sole gain?
Lo! what light the east is bright'ning!
Herald of a better day,
Yonder cloud that towers o'er us,
Lurid with the threat'ning lightning,
Specter-like, shall fade away
In the splendor of its ray
A happier era's just before us!
When brazen fraud and flaunting pride
In oblivion deep shall hide,
When Force shall yield the earth to Truth,
And Right shall reign in fadeless youth.
The tokens of its advent thicken!
How life and hope, responsiv, quicken!
There's a flower about to bloom
In the desert, on the tomb;
There's a light about to glow
That will dissipate the gloom;
There's a fount about to flow
With waters such as ne'er were tasted.
By the workers wan and wasted.
Fellow-toilers, hail the day!
Wait as patient as ye may,
Watch and wait, but clear the way!

PROSPECTUS OF

The Truth Seeker

FOUNDED BY D. M. BENNETT.

THE LEADING FREETHOUGHT JOURNAL OF THE WORLD.

LARGEST, CHEAPEST, BEST.

PUBLISHED EVERY SATURDAY, AT $3.00 PER YEAR; $1.50 FOR SIX MONTHS

SAMPLE COPIES FREE.

33 CLINTON PLACE, NEW YORK CITY.

Among the reforms THE TRUTH SEEKER aims to effect are:

Total separation of church and state, including the equitable taxation of church property; secularization of the public schools, abolition of Sunday laws, abolition of chaplaincies, prohibition of public appropriations for religious purposes, and all other measures necessary to the same general end.

Its sixteen large pages are filled every week with scientific, philosophic, and Freethought articles and communications by the ablest Freethinkers in the country. It givs all the Liberal news, and keeps its readers posted on current secular and theological events. It is the armory from which hundreds draw their weapons in contests with priesthood. All the Liberal papers are good, but THE TRUTH SEEKER is

THE BEST AND LARGEST.

It is conducted in a broad and truly liberal spirit, and givs everyone a hearing upon all subjects pertaining to the welfare of the human race.

OPINIONS REGARDING IT.

A paper like THE TRUTH SEEKER is something more and better than an advocate of truth. Through it its subscribers touch elbows with each other. Each reader knows that he is one of a goodly company who find comfort and inspiration in its pages. If they should meet each other they would feel like brothers and sisters. They hav lived under one intellectual roof, felt the glow of the same fireside, and broken together the bread of life. Such a paper is to thousands a substitute for the church.—GEORGE CHAINEY, in This World.

THE TRUTH SEEKER, founded by D. M. Bennett, is to-day perhaps the strongest foe with which superstition has to contend, and a long future of great usefulness is, we trust and believe, before it.—Winted, Conn., Press.

There ought to be five hundred subscribers to THE TRUTH SEEKER in this county, just to rebuke the infamous church bigots who are using force and fraud to suppress Liberalism.—Worthington, Minn., Advance.

This sterling and widely-circulated Freethought journal has won its way deep into the hearts of its readers. THE TRUTH SEEKER is a great paper, and deserves the most generous support of the Liberal public. The recent numbers received are splendid in every respect.—San Francisco Universe.

THE TRUTH SEEKER has gathered its resources, and will be a stronger, better, and brighter paper than ever.—Liberal League Man.

THE TRUTH SEEKER has become a necessity to the Liberal cause.—Kansas Blade.

One subscription with four new subscribers, in one remittance, -	10 00

Any number over five at the same rate, invariably with one remittance.

It is thus seen that any of our friends who will take the trouble to get a new subscriber at the regular rate ($3), will get his own for $2; by getting two new subscribers he will get his own paper for $1; by getting three new subscribers he will not only get his own free, but will hav fifty cents left to pay cost of money order; by getting four new subscribers he will hav his own free and gain $2.

This makes THE TRUTH SEEKER, with its sixteen large pages, cheaper than any other Liberal paper. If anyone chooses, or if by so doing he can easier secure partners in taking the paper, he can share with them the advantages of the club rates.

Odds and Ends.

"WHAT is a lake?" asked the teacher. A bright little Irish boy raised his hand. "Well, Mickey, what is it?" "Sure it is a hole in the tea-kettle, mum."

A PREACHER having married a couple in the church the other day, unfortunately gave out as the very next hymn, "Mistaken souls that dream of heaven."

THE man who kicks his daughter's lover down three flights of stairs, sends her to bed with a scolding, then slacks the parlor fire, and turns off the gas, should be sent to prison for contempt of court.

"THERE is one thing about babies," said a recent traveler, "they never change. We hav girls of the period, men of the world; but the baby is the same self-possessed, fearless, laughing, voracious little heathen in all ages, and in all countries."

IN Philadelphia they hav an organized woman's club who dress in nobby male attire, presumably because they like to "wear the breeches." They will hav to wear their pants cut somewhat different from men, in order to allow them to sit down on the floor to get into their stockings.

A MARRIED dude who returned home unexpectedly, and found another dude hugging his wife, took a terrible revenge. He seized the visitor's slender silk umbrella from its resting-place in the rack, broke it across his knee, and roared out, "There, now! I hope it will rain real hard."

"MAMMA." whispered a little boy, who had watched the preacher vigorously pound the pulpit cushion for some time. "'Sh!" "But, mamma, I—" "'Sh! 'sh! You musn't talk in church." "I only wanted to say that if I was that cushion, I'd—" "'Sh!" "I'd be all black and blue by this time," he squeaked.

ONE Sunday, as a certain Scottish minister was returning homeward, he was accosted by an old woman, who said, "O sir, well do I like the day that you preach." The minister was aware that he was not very popular, and he answered: "My good woman, I am glad to hear it. There are too few like you. And why do you like when I preach?" "O sir," she replied, "when you preach I always get a good seat."

A YOUNGSTER to fond mother: "Papa has heart trouble, hasn't he?" F. M.: "Yes, my dear." Youngster: "That's why the doctor lays his head against his chest to listen, isn't it?" F. M.: "Yes, my child, but don't ask so many questions." Youngster. "Is papa a doctor, too?" F. M.: "No; why do you ask?" Youngster: "Because he had his head against nurse's chest last night, listening just like the doctor." Fond mother leaves the room for a brief conversation with the nurse.

AN Omaha preacher is the last pulpit pounder to try and put a stop to Sunday night courting. That preacher would meet with greater success by fighting a cyclone with a snow-shovel. This Sunday night courting business is as sure to come as death and the tax collector. It is an old established industry, which has been going on since the beginning of time, and it is sure to continue to the end. It is about the only industry that don't ask for a protectiv tariff, as the more foreign competition it has the better it thrives.

THE hour is a little late;
Two lovers swing upon the gate,
Bent down by sentimental freight,
In rapture great,
With soul elate.

But how the pair is cursed by fate!
The young man feels a father's hate;
He falls upon him in a state
Of anger great,
With sole elate.

"MY dear," said a Western farmer to his wife as she got out of bed, "will you look and see what kind of a day it is?" "Well," she replied, gazing out of the window. "Mr. Smith's barn across the way is being blown into the next lot, but—" "Not his new brick barn?" "No, the old wooden one, and it looks as if the roof of his house will hav to go, but I don't believe there will be very much of a storm." "Probably not," replied the husband, "but still we can hardly expect settled weather at this season of the year. I guess I had better drive to town to-day instead of waiting until Saturday. It might storm, then."

A MAIDEN to a dentist came;
Said she, "I think you are the same
That put a coping on my gums
Last summer." "Very like," said he,
"I cope with such promiscuously,"
And then he idly twirled his thumbs.

"You didn't mortis well your work,"
The maiden answered; "when I jerk
My lower maxilliary bones.
It sort of jars the coping stones,
And down my throat, last night, at tea,
I lost your dental masonry."

"'Tis safer there than in the street,"
The dentist made reply: "Just seat
Yourself in yonder vacant chair."
She sat; he siezed a dredging hook,
Or tool that might hav been mistook
For such, and bade her to prepare.

The mouth of maiden opened wide,
"There's room!" said he, and stepped inside;
The jaws came to with savage grin,
She gummed and swallowed him, and then—
"You took me in, O worst of men!"
She said, "and now you're taken in."

THE TRUTH SEEKER

A JOURNAL OF FREETHOUGHT AND REFORM.

Entered at the Post-Office at New York, N. Y., as Second-class Matter.

Vol. 11. No. 18. | PUBLISHED WEEKLY. | New York, Saturday, May 3, 1884. | 33 CLINTON PLACE. | $3.00 per year.

Notes and Clippings.

HERBERT SPENCER has started for Australia, a long sea voyage being recommended for his health.

A NEW YORK sculptor has just completed a statue called "Slumber." It is supposed that it represents a congregation about the time the minister is saying "seventeenthly."

HARRISON, the "boy preacher," claims that he converted thirteen hundred sinners in St. Louis in ten days. St. Louis should be proud. It is not every city of its size that can boast that number of "sinners."

THE Salvation Army engaged in fighting the devil in New Jersey has received a hard blow from the enemy. Their captain is in jail for stealing. It would seem, remarks Peck's Sun, as though the devil was getting the start of the army in New Jersey.

DR. OLIVER WENDELL HOLMES, in a letter to a friend in England, promises that he will soon publish a new book. He says: "I am trying to do some kind of justice to Ralph Waldo Emerson in a brief memoir, taking short time to read and longer to write."

ENGLISH journalists are not fully posted on the geography of America. One intelligent editor informs his readers that the "preservation of the Adirondack forests is at last agitating the people of the West, who wish to protect their valuable prairie lands from drought."

A PHILADELPHIA merchant has offered to pay for two bands to play in Fairmount Park on Sundays, but there is no hope that the offer will be accepted, as the religious people know that with good music out of doors there is small chance of getting the average Philadelphian inside a church edifice.

A FASHIONABLE church in St. Paul has for its pastor ex-Congressman Gilbert de LaMatyr, who, having introduced an orchestra as a musical auxiliary to the services, has been abandoned by all the old-fashioned members of the congregation. He is, however, very popular with the young people, who crowd the house every Sunday.

AN officer in the American Tract Society reported that "at the present stage of Christianity and civilization it is impossible to get anything new in tracts or to make any money writing them." It would be next to impossible at this stage of Christianity and civilization to get any sensible person to read them if they were written and paid.

A LONDON editor writes that he is a comprehensionist, and "as a comprehensionist realizes the soul of the universe as the intelligence of the etherealized, then the intelligence must cognate that which is an over-continuance of extension, and the over-continuance is not the progressivness of circumferation." This is probably a new kind of heresy.

BUDDHISM is spreading with great rapidity among the more intelligent classes in Russia. Converts are counted by thousands every year. The reason given for its spread is that it is more easily understood than the Christian religion, and better adapted to the wants of the people. At present the Greek church is the only authorized church or Russia.

WE learn from a wild western paper that an Iowa society has inaugurated something new and novel in the social business. They hold "avoirdupois socials." The young ladies are weighed, before eating supper, and the boys pay one-half cent a pound for it on her weight. It is said that real nice, healthy fat girls don't stand any show at all. The slender girl monopolizes all the boys.

A FRENCH medical man has been talking of the wine question in a new and original way. "Is it," he asks, "absolutely necessary to drink wine? We can understand why Noah used it when we think of the profound disgust he must hav felt for water after the deluge. It was natural that a carafe of water should sicken him. But in making up his first vinyards did he consider the coming worries of the phylloxera, of adulterations, of licenses, of taxes, and of temperance orators? Is he not now looking sadly down upon the curious destiny of the wine he naturally rejoiced over, but which is moving to its center the capital of the civilized world?"

MR. REDMOND, the young Irish member of Parliament who was recently in this country, says, apropos of the dynamiters here: "Except a few fanatics, they only want to get money out of the business. Ford is the most formidable, but even he was only able to collect $4,000 in four months for his 'war fund.' As the fund owed its origin to the execution of O'Donnell, so I believe it will die out with the remembrance of it."

THE interference of a clergyman does not always produce the effect intended. The Rev. Mr. Stiles, who was in court in Brooklyn when the names of the jurors were called in a temperance case, remarked something about corrupted juries. The justice heard him and cautioned him to be more temperate in his language. The jury regarded the clergyman with marked contempt, and rendered a verdict contraryto his testimony, without leaving their seats.

IN the old days no woman was allowed to put her foot within the walls of the monastery at San Auguatin, Mexico. A noble lady of Spain, wife of the reigning viceroy, was bent on visiting it. Nothing could stop her and in she came. But she found only empty cloisters, for each virtuous monk locked himself securely in his cell, and afterward every stone in the floor which her sacrilegious feet had touched was carefully replaced by a new one fresh from the mountain top. Times are changed. The house is now a hotel.

A CLERGYMAN married a lady with whom he received a substantial dowry of $10,000 and a fair prospect for more. Soon afterward, while occupying the pulpit, he gave out a hymn, read four stanzas, and was reading the fifth,

"Forever let my grateful heart
His boundless grace adore," when he hesitated and exclaimed, "Ahem! the choir will omit the fifth verse," and sat down. The congregation, attracted by his apparent confusion, read the remaining lines:

"Which givs ten thousand blessings now
And bids me hope for more."

A NEW YORK publisher of Bibles recently received an extensiv order from the proprietor of one of Chicago's largest hotels for "fine, showy Bibles, with handsome covers." Surprised at the order, he asked the hotel man, "What do you intend to do with them?" "Place them in the guests' rooms. You see, I hav made arrangements to keep a lot of delegates to the presidential convention, and I want to giv them everything new and novel and what they are unaccustomed to." "But would you not like to hav the hotel's name stamped on the cover? It will cost but little, and will prevent their being stolen," said the publisher. "Oh, no," replied the other. "It is unnecessary. They are not sufficiently hard up to steal Bibles."

THE District commissioners decided on the 17th that the law regulating licenses places mediums in the category of the theatrical and other exhibitions. The smallest fee is $20 per week, $100 per annum, or $5 per meeting, if any fee is charged, no matter how small. "Under the present construction of the law," says a correspondent of the National Republican, "all moral and scientific lectures, and demonstrations of all kinds, even lectures on education, come under the ban. The effect of this decision will be to compel mediums to giv Washington a wide berth. Ohio alone disgraced herself and lost the last election by the Russell law, which is an embargo upon free thought, free speech, and scientific investigation; but her bigots and courts hav not dared to brave public opinion by its enforcement in a single case. It remained for the commissioners of this district, right under the shadow of the capitol, dedicated (?) to freedom, to lead off in this unjust discrimination upon the most flimsy pretext. It cannot be possible that the framers of this law ever contemplated such use of the law; or that they imagined that the act of Congress would be used to obstruct lectures on moral or scientific subjects of any kind."

DR. W. J. BEECHER, of Auburn Theological Seminary, tells his students than when he began reading religious newspapers there were plenty of leaders of religious thought who were strenuously affirming that, unless the earth and skies were fitted up in their present shape in the space of 144 hours by the clock, the Bible was a lie, and all religion was a fraud. "To-day," he says, "nearly every one is convinced that the process of bringing our system into being lasted through long periods of time, and that this view is entirely consistent with the Bible and with all sacred truths." So it comes that the Infidels of to-day stand on this particular question, about where the "leaders of religious thought" stood when the Rev. Dr. Beecher began reading religious newspapers.

THE loose ideas and practices of the New England people in regard to marriage and divorce, says the New York Sun, are well known. At Dover, N. H., the other day, a man and a woman appeared before a clergyman and asked him to marry them for six months. The would-be groom explained that he had already been married and divorced, and didn't wish to take any risk this time. The lady, secure of her charms, was willing to enter into the limited contract. She felt certain that her lover, spite of his caution, would ask for a renewal of the contract at the end of the six months. The clergyman refused to approve the plan, and so did a justice of the peace, who, however, kindly informed them that "it would be an easy matter to get married on this plan at Portland, provided they would wait five days." If this assertion of this New Hampshire justice can be depended on, limited time marriage contracts are likely to be very common in the preserves of Neal Dow, but six months is too long a period for even a limited marriage to last without a divorce in the truly moral puritan commonwealths.

THE boldness of the criminal classes in this city has reached such a point that hardened felons in the shape of small boys and little girls actually sell flowers in Fifth avenue and Broadway on Sunday. A member of the Society for the Prevention of Crime, shocked by the terrible spectacle, has formally brought the subject to the attention of the police, but the commissioners, evidently because of their fear of the flower-selling criminals, hav not yet ventured to arrest them. It is intolerable, continues the New York Times, that the loathsome and demoralizing spectacle of flowers should be openly brought to the attention of respectable men, virtuous women, and innocent children on Sunday morning. Flowers notoriously hav no respect for Sunday, and shamelessly open their petals and blossom on that day precisely as they do on a week-day. To offer these depraved flowers to people on Sunday morning is to turn their thoughts from sermons and other appropriate topics and to invite them to admire gaudy colors and meretricious perfumes. Not only is the public thus demoralized by the sight of Sunday flowers, but men and women are tempted to commit the deadly sin of buying violets or roses. It is impossible to say how many poor wretches who hav died on the gallows began their downward career by buying a bunch of violets while on their way to church. It may not seem to most people to be a really revolting crime to buy flowers on Sunday, but if it is followed by robbery, arson, and murder its iniquity becomes evident. The pretense that it is a work of charity to buy a flower on Sunday from a ragged child is unworthy of notice. Crime cannot be excused on the ground that it is committed from a charitable motiv. The monsters of iniquity, however small they may be in point of stature, who sell flowers on Sunday deserve nothing but the severest punishment. If necessary, the military should be called out to suppress them, and no matter what it costs, Mr. Louis P. Tibbals, of the Society for the Prevention of Crime, should be enabled to walk to church on Sunday without being shocked by the sight of godless and demoralizing flowers.

THE captain of the Salvation Army of Cleveland, Ohio, is charged with abducting two 16-year-old girls of that city.

HENRY IRVING, the English actor, has given his farewell performance in America. The receipts of his tour in this country amounted to $405,600.

A DISPATCH from Rome says that five Christian missionaries and thirty lay coadjutors hav been murdered at Tonquin, Anam, in southeastern Asia.

Two anarchists of Berlin hav confessed that dynamite had been placed under the new colossal statue of Germania at Niederwald. Moisture alone prevented the explosion.

THE opposition party in Dr. Newman's Madison avenue church, hav put an injunction on the parson restraining him from performing the functions of a pastor in that edifice.

THE Rev. J. R. Allen was called very recently to the pulpit of a church near Honesdale, Pa. Riding out with his wife and child last week, the horse ran away, and Mrs. Allen was killed.

LAST Sunday was Bock Beer Day on Staten Island, and all the drivers of the brewery wagons wore high silk hats and cockades. The wagons were trimmed with flags and evergreens.

A BANQUET was given to Henry George on Wednesday evening of this week. Among those present were R. Heber Newton, Samuel P Putnam, Edward W. Chamberlain, and Courtlandt Palmer.

THE excise commissioners of New York hav refused licenses to various places of amusement of questionable reputation, including that of the celebrated Harry Hill, known as the wickedest man in New York.

LONDON was shaken by a earthquake last week. The dynamiters say they were expecting it, but do not explain how it was brought about. A fire in London on Saturday destroyed a million dollars' worth of property.

CITY FATHER SHIELS, arrested for being drunk and disorderly and committing assault, attributed his conduct to the effect of quinine which he had taken under the direction of a physician for disease of the eye. He was discharged.

A SIX-DAY walking match began in this city last Sunday night, with fourteen contestants, including Rowell, the Englishman, and a Chippewa Indian. It is propable that the Englishman will win and carry off a large number of American dollars.

GAINSWORTH PETTIS, of Lockport, Pa., was taken to the Erie almshouse last Saturday, a raving maniac on the subject of Spiritualism. On the same day the Rev. C. H. Harrison, of Belmont, N. Y., went to the Buffalo insane asylum shackled and handcuffed, and accompanied by six able-bodied men, that number being required to keep him in restraint. The doctrin of immediate sanctification crazed him. Religious papers making a note of Mr. Pettis's aberration will please copy this item entire.

THE members of Typographical Union No. 6, composed of printers, had a parade and a monster mass meeting at Cooper Union last week to bring into public notice their scheme to boycott the New York Tribune, which had broken its contract with the union. The Boycotter, published by the union, claims that the movement is having its effect both on the circulation and advertising patronage of the Tribune. The laboring man seems to be waking up and showing his strength in a manner heretofore almost unheard of.

A Freethought Romance.

Waifs and Wanderings.

BY SAMUEL P. PUTNAM.

CHAPTER XXVIII.

FAIRY-LAND.

The wonderful years fly by, throbbing with life, grim with death. A continent is alive with arms; camp-fires blaze upon a thousand hills; a million soldiers march through tangled wilderness and fair fields. The days and the nights bear gloom and glory in their tumultuous path. Terror keeps company with hope. Victory leaps the chasm of defeat, and flings the lustrous morning on the midnight of despair. Skeleton faces look through iron bars, and patiently wait for the rainbow of peace on the rushing clouds of war.

The golden evening rests broad and bright on the mighty forests that skirt the shores of the Gulf of Pascagoula. Far away they stretch toward the north in the vague and intense radiance, while toward the south the beautiful waters flash as if the departing day had left upon their bosom innumerable jewels. The faint effulgence of the night is caught afar, bringing its gifts also to the welcoming sky and joyous earth.

Touched by the last shafts of the retreating light, a dusty and toil-worn company linger on the edge of the majestic forest. Old friends they are, yet changed, scarred with battle, and decorated with hard-earned honors. The stars of a brigadier-general shine on the shoulders of our Shaksperean devotee, Billy Stubbs, and he bears them with true soldierly frankness and dignity. Sergeant Jones is now colonel, and Cupples is captain, and the good Dr. Dobson is in the flesh still. It would be indeed no easy thing for him to shuffle off his mortal coil.

"We must camp here to-night," said Stubbs. "I don't know where we are, but we must make the best of it."

"I never was lost so quick in my life," said Cupples. "These woods all look the same, and the roads."

"I guess we are not lost," said the colonel. "A day's march will bring us to our brigade again."

"I believe that last turn is what did it," said the doctor. "It was difficult to choose, however, for one way looked as bad as the other."

"Who knows what we may discover by this little episode," cried Stubbs. "There's a divinity that shapes our ends."

"Shapes our ends rough, as somebody says," cried the doctor, "hew them how we may."

"It seems that we can't trust divinity, so we must trust in ourselvs. Fortunately we have plenty of grub and can do it."

"We can smile at fate with a full stomach," proclaimed the doctor.

While Cupples prepared the dainty meal of hard-tack and coffee, and a slice or two of pork, the others made ready the night's encampment with extemporized dwellings of brush-wood, made fragrant with the beautiful magnolia blossoms that flashed like stars in the radiant blackness of the forest.

"Drink to a happy to-morrow," cried Cupples, as they gathered about the plenteously-furnished table underneath the wide-spreading trees. "This is the best coffee I ever made, and I know it will bring a spell of delight."

It was a gorgeous palace indeed in which they ate, with glad abandon to the witching influence of their wild surroundings. Tossed about like waves of the sea, these brave spirits ever reflected the brightness of the passing moment. In an unknown country, with danger upon every side, they had not the slightest fear.

In the effulgent evening, strewn with stars, rich with perfumes, filled with the harmonies of the sea that sounded along the white beach, Cupples and Col. Jones strolled among the woods, while Stubbs smoked the fragrant weed, and Dr. Dobson placidly meditated on the mutations of life in the midst of two hundred and fifty pounds of solid human flesh.

"Here we are to-day, and where we shall be to-morrow nobody knows," said the colonel. "We've been mightily knocked about for the last two years."

"Hardly had time to think," said Cupples. "I've always wanted to pursue our wanderings after Bessie, but there's been no chance, and here we are almost tumbled into the Gulf of Mexico."

"No news of Bessie yet?"

"Not a particle. Yet I believe she is safe. No news is good news, they say."

"We'll take it so. The world is big and folks are easily lost, especially when the world is upside down, as it is now."

"If Amy had not found Bessie she would hav returned. No doubt they have some out-of-the-way hiding-place from all this hurly-burly."

"Keep a good heart yet. There'll be a lull some time, and we'll take another turn at the game."

"It don't look much like a lull now. Things are in a mighty mess, and grow worse. I don't see head nor tail to it."

"There is, though. Grant'll work it out. He's got a plan, and some day there'll be a shake down."

"May I be there to see," said Cupples. "I've got through expecting anything. Dear me, I think I'd like to stay here a week or two, it's so handsome. It's like a garden of flowers, almost as if somebody lived here."

It was indeed a wonderful and beautiful spot to which they had roamed. The ground was covered with flowers of a thousand varying hues. Overhead there was a majestic arch, almost as perfect as if flung forth by the hand of human genius. The magnolia blossoms danced like waves in the star-lighted chambers that opened on every side from the illuminated aisles of the forest.

"I wonder if somebody don't live here—fairies at least," said Cupples. "It's a good place for home."

They both started, as a clear, bright note seemed all at once to strike the air and then burst into full melody. It was a marvelous song that for a time possessed the charmed atmosphere. Whence did it come? Was it some wondrous mocking-bird that had caught the accents of the human voice and was thus pouring it forth?

Wonderfully sweet it sounded on, rippling like a brook, dashing like sun-lighted waves of the sea, soaring like a bird, dropping like the soft petal of a flower. Now it seemed to tremble far away, and then it rapidly burst again with a shower of notes that seemed to fall all about the astonished listeners.

"I'm dazed," cried Cupples, when the enrapturing sounds suddenly ceased. "I'm sure that's Bessie's voice, or it is her spirit haunting this forest. I will sing an old lullaby and see if I can call her to my sight."

So Cupples answered to the regal voice with some snatches of baby melodies, given, however, with such effect that nobody could mistake from whence they came. If anyone had heard that sound in Patagonia they would hav sworn that it was Cupples's voice if they had ever by chance listened to that gentleman's remarkable vocalization. If Bessie was anywhere about to hear even one of his notes she would unhesitatingly appear, knowing that Cupples must be on hand. And Bessie did come dancing forth like a wonderful fairy indeed. She seemed to flash all at once from the darkness and tumbled into the arms of Cupples.

"Do you live in the sea?" said Cupples. "Are you a mermaid?"

"I'm flesh and blood still," said Bessie. "Feel of me—solid enough, am I not?"

"I should say so," said Cupples. "You've grown a foot taller since I've seen you, I believe."

"Why shouldn't I? I've had time enough. It's lucky you sung that song. Otherwise I should have vanished into my cave. We don't admit strangers here."

"We? Who's we?"

"My mother, of course. She took me when I left you."

"You didn't stay long with Bolton?"

"Indeed not. I knew mother would come. I watched for her, and one night like birds we flew away. There's no law here, and so we made it our home."

"How wise you are! I've a notion to take to the woods myself. I believe they are better than folks—they mind their own business."

"How funny it is!" cried Bessie. "Did you fight your way down?"

"We've fought every which way up and down and across lots, and now we are lost."

"What a war it must be! I'm glad we know nothing about it. You are the first soldier that ever passed this way. Have you a passport? If so you can come into my parlor."

"Yes," said Cupples, as he gave her a sounding kiss; "I guess that'll take me in without knocking."

Bessie dashed ahead and they followed. How beautiful she looked!—alert, graceful, fresh as nature herself, a very child of the woods, in perfect harmony with the magnificent scenery by which she was surrounded, as if she had bloomed from its very heart.

She led the way to what might be a natural bower, yet evidently arranged also by cunning hands. So deftly was it twined with the overhanging branches that one might almost pass it unnoticed."

"Walk in," said Bessie, as she flung a profusion of roses aside and revealed the entrance. "I will light a candle and then you can see."

Her candle was a pine-knot, which flung rich masses of light about the room into which they entered. Bessie held it above her head and her dark eyes danced gloriously in its beams. Her hair, unloosed and free as the wind, floated back and offset the delicate and strong lines of her handsome face, that seemed flooded with smiles, as she noted the amazement of the two men.

"Make yourself at home," she said, "the whole floor is at your service. I will call mamma."

In answer to her summons Amy instantly appeared and impetuously greeted the new comers.

"I thought nobody could ever find us out here," she cried.

"They could not," answered Cupples. "They must tumble to it, as we did. This is your home, then?"

"Yes; could I do better?"

"Not as things are now. It's a fairy-land indeed. Nothing can disturb you, no matter how much the fight goes on."

"That is what I desire. escape from the world, it seems so full of injustice."

"We'll right it some how," said the sergeant (colonel I would say with due reverence to his straps), "and then you'll come back again."

"Perhaps not. I am in love with this spot. I have spent many happy hours here."

"I would like to camp here myself," said Cupples. "But we are always on the move and can only take a night's rest."

"Make the most of it while you can," said Amy, "and then you shall have our best farewell."

"But tell us all about it," said Cupples. "What a story it must be!"

"You can guess," said Amy, "I followed Bolton night and day. He could not escape me. I enlisted as a confederate soldier; that gave me a chance, and I ran off with Bessie. I would not go North. I was indignant that a great nation should act so cruelly, although it might be for peace. I determined to depend on myself; to seek the woods, make my own home, and be my own defense. Even though I was a woman I felt that I could win my way; that nature was my friend and would reward me if I did my work. Here I am happy in these beautiful woods and the maker of my own fortune."

"Bravo," said Cupples. "Who shall talk of the superior sex after this. What man has done woman can do, and that's the end on't."

"This is my parlor," said Amy, "do you not like it?"

She led the way to the inner appartment. It was indeed wonderfully adorned. Shells gleamed with glittering colors around the walls. There were flowers of every description hung with gorgeous profusion. The floor was carpeted with the finest of pine needles and was as luxuriant as a Turkish rug. There were tables and chairs made out of the graceful boughs of trees. There was a cosy fire-place that seemed set in marble, so delicately had the huge sea-shells been set about it. Soon a flame was dancing at its heart, kindled by the deft hand of Bessie, and the warm sweet radiance flowed and melted amid the brilliant hues that the rarest of jewels could not surpass. There was a harp in one corner made by Amy's own hands, for she was touched with the genius of music and could create its choicest instrumentality and evoke its tenderest and most magnificent strains. Everywhere in that little room could be seen the wonder and glory of woman's genius. Out of the bosom of nature her art had made a paradise.

"I must whistle," cried Cupple, "I want the general to see this, and the doctor."

Cupples did whistle, and it was almost as if a musket had gone off.

General Stubbs and the doctor now made their appearance and joined with fresh hilarity in the dramatic surprise.

"There are more things in heaven and earth than are dreamed of in our philosophy," cried Stubbs. "I shall begin to believe in miracles."

"I always believed in miracles," said the doctor. "We can do marvels if we only understand nature. Nothing is more wonderful than what is. The life of to-day is the greatest life possible."

"That's good philosophy," answered Stubbs. That's Shakspere all over. Does he not say:

> Yet nature is made better by no mean
> But nature makes that mean; so over that art
> Which you say adds to nature is an art
> That nature makes.

"Shakspere is right, and so touches the source of all poetry and religion. God, if there is one, is almighty only by being perfectly natural, and we are gods if we are on the right side of nature. Reality is our best friend."

"I guess you are right," said Cupples, "but I don't understand it all."

"Let them reason," cried Colonel Jones. "We'll take it as it is, and be the wiser for it, I reckon."

"That's so," cried the doctor. "The bother with folks to-day is that they want to know the cause of everything. They can't be simply happy. They want to know the reason why, and that spoils it. The moment one becomes conscious of his good health, you may be sure he will be sick. Knowledge is the first sympton of disease. When will people learn that ignorance is bliss? All this craze after information is nonsense. It kills life. People know too much nowadays, and hence their stupidity. We should strive to know less, and so be more alive."

"I confess my ignorance," said Amy, "but I am not satisfied with it; I desire knowledge but not books. I have none here, but I study the trees, and the flowers, and sea, and sky, and each day some new glimpse appears."

"Ah! how happy the world will be when all study like that," said the doctor; "when books are thrown aside, and the very mud beneath our feet takes their place. The culture of to-day is mere machine polish. It's nothing but a grinding. It's not a producing. There isn't one man out of a million who if put alone on an island wouldn't starve to death, he knows nature so poorly. There isn't one of our scholars who can read the bark of a tree, or the surface of a rock. Hence their Greek and Latin is folly."

"Deep waters, doctor, "said Stubbs. "Let gray-haired philosophy retire, and let music come dancing to the front. I want that harp to vibrate. He that hath no music in his soul is fit for treasons, stratagems, and spoils."

Amy took the harp, strung by her own hand, and filled the little room with delicate and ravishing notes. She had a remarkable skill, and the tender vibrations voiced the innermost genius of her being. She seemed to hold the air captive, and to make its subtile palpitations the minister of her expressive soul. Marvelous she shone in her beauty and strength, the ideal woman of the future. In her was the oak-like grandeur mingled with the grace of the flowing vine. There was not a particle of coarseness or hardness in her mobile and flashing face. Yet she had fought with destiny with the might of a man. She had carved from the rock of fate her own splendid fortune. She had defied a thousand difficulties, and had made her way to an assured and independent place. Yet no gentleness was lost, no touch of womanly glory. The queen who had been nursed in ease, who had been protected from the ills of life by some manly arm, and had seen nothing but the pomp of waiting ministers, could not have poured forth strains more soft, and sweet, and thrilling to the finest sense; while, sweeping over all with majesty and intensity, was a power born only of struggle, and with which the pampered slave of man's caprice can never hope to be dowered.

Afterwards Bessie joined her voice with her mother's and they sang many a wild, sweet melody, like a stream bursting out of the very soil and sounding with the noise of the trees and the deep chanting of the sea. The hours flew by, and ere they were aware the solemn midnight was upon the delighted company as if by some spell of enchantment.

"We must have a little sleep," said Stubbs, "so good-night. We shall bid a merry farewell in the morning, for we have a perilous and long journey, and cannot delay. When victory comes, with new hopes and new opportunities, I shall bid you welcome to our civilization, which, alas, is not quite so beautiful as this savage freedom, which I enjoy with all my heart."

So they sank to sleep, Amy and Bessie in the lovely secrecy of their embowered home, and the soldiers beneath the broad sky, with no pillow but a stone, and their bed the leaf-strewn bosom of the earth, and their roof the spreading branches of the mighty trees, gemmed amid their myriad changes with the deep azure of the boundless sky, and now and then with a star, shining like a fresh polished jewel just dropped upon the dancing canopy.

The morning came—beautiful Aurora with streaming garments, splendid with dews, glittering over the waters, dropping diamonds by the million on the eager waves. She comes, blessed goddess, eternally born from nature's breast, flying with jeweled feet over sea and land, bringer of joy, dispeller of darkness, awakener out of sleep, courage-breathing, glorious divinity. Her armies are the armies of peace and delight. See them rushing, surging, leaping with fiery banners from mountain to mountain, dashing over the forests and conquering its darkest recesses, gleaming in the cataracts, sweeping down the rivers, crowding over the fields and meadows, flaunting their flags in every home, rivaling the crimson splendor of the firelight on the hearth. Our gallant little company of men awoke and responded to the first onset of the brilliant day.

"A hasty good-bye and then we must dash on," said the general. Amy and Bessie were awake too. Swift farewells were said. Sweet hopes grew and blossomed for the future. The grief of parting was crowned with the light of happy to-morrows.

Away they went, while the two fair women were watching them with brimming eyes and eager hearts until in the dim distance their blue and gold apparel and gleaming arms were lost in the pathless wilderness.

"We must press right on to the north. We must turn neither to right nor left. That's our only safety."

Forward through the tangled brush, straight over the rushing rivers and black and dangerous swamps, forward they thundered steadily and swift. Soon they reached a road which had evidently just been traversed by a great army.

"We've struck a lead," cried Stubbs. "Let's go it. In an hour or two we shall be within the lines."

They put spurs to their horses and the noble animals themselvs seemed to feel that they must do their best, and with wonderful speed they galloped onward.

They turn down the road into a broad grove, and without warning are in the midst of a rebel encampment. They were immediately surrounded. It was no use to resist. They were compelled to surrender without striking a blow.

"This will land us in Andersonville; no more fighting for us," said Stubbs.

Gladstone and the English Government.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE TRUTH SEEKER, Sir: Your correspondent, Robert Nelson, seems terribly worked up over some words of Seward Mitchell regarding Carey and O'Donnell.

I shall not take time to notice more than one or two of his positions. Speaking of Mr. Gladstone he says, "Hundreds of orphan children will miss and a whole nation mourn the grand old man when his life goes out." I suppose that Mr. Nelson means the orphans of English soldiers slain in the wars of the Transvaal, Zululand, Afghanistan, Cyprus, Egypt, and the Soudan—wars cowardly, causeless, and cruel, waged by England against weak tribes and states during Gladstone's administration. These are the glories of Gladstone, English premier. No, there is one more laurel in his crown. He never has had the manliness to stand by Charles Bradlaugh in his battle for the rights of constituencies, but has held aloof and permitted that man of the people to be betrayed and trampled in the house of his friends.

Next Mr. Nelson confounds the English people with the English government. Nothing could be more unjust to the former. The people hav forced the government into some semblance of decency on more than one occasion, but whenever the vigilance of the people has been relaxed, then a dissolute and tyrannical court, a greedy and corrupt state church, and a venal nobility hav robbed the nation and usurped the rights of the citizens, while they blinded the eyes of their victims with the glare and glory of foreign conquest—conquest over weak and poverty-stricken nations.

Talk of England in India! "Ten times better off than under her nativ princes!" Let Mr. Nelson read the exposures of England's rule in India as made in English Freethought papers and magazines, and then see if he can make such reckless assertions as the above. The Liberal progressiv men and women of England will almost if not quite unanimously bear testimony directly opposit to that given by Mr. Nelson. If Mr. Nelson would know what England has done for India in the years that are gone, let him study the history of the administration of Warren Hastings. If he would know what that rule is to-day let him read something other than the blood and glory "Jingo" newspaper press of his nativ land.

Mr. Nelson tells us that England has done much for Canada. The truth is, Canada has done much for England and for herself. The people of Canada hav leveled her forests, tilled her soil, built her cities, and all that the English government has done is to absorb a certain portion of their earnings to spend in wars of cowardly conquest; upon the princelings of the house of Brunswick, pampered pets of the civil and military lists, and hereditary pensioners. And in all this the English government has done what all governments do, no more, no less.

Next to the spirit of religion, the spirit of patriotism has cursed the people of this earth more than aught else. Under its malign influence the workingmen of the world hav cut each other's throats at the behest of kings and parliaments and congresses. Mr. Nelson is but one example of the evil work it does. With him it is England against the world; no matter what the crimes of her rulers.

Just so it is with the average Frenchman, the average German, the average American. It blinds its devotees to the crimes committed by their countrymen. Let us forget our national animosities and and battle for the right. E. C. WALKER.

A Protectionist's Views.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE TRUTH SEEKER, Sir: There are many subjects discussed in your paper which interest me exceedingly, but none more so than your recent "free trade vs. protection" editorial. I was shocked that the noble TRUTH SEEKER should take such a stand, and delighted to read Farmer Stebbins's reply. He nobly holds up his end, the agricultural interests, but there are a few things (as a Knight of Labor and workingman) that I think can be shown in favor of a protectiv policy, that bear directly on the interests of those who labor for a living. It must be admitted by those who will admit anything when it is proved logically, that free trade never built up our manufacturing industries, neither will it sustain them when protection is withdrawn from them. Corner a free trader on his favorit topic, and giv him rope enough, and you can generally convict him out of his own mouth. Robert Ingersoll's facts on the cheapening of iron per ton in consequence of the protection accorded it are applicable to a great many other things; but he is wrong when he says that "the free traders hav all the arguments and protectionists all the facts." They hav no one argument but a better one may be found for protection. Workingmen are told that they should oppose the policy of protection because they do not get as large a share of the benefits of protection as their employers. Admitting that to be so, should the working classes giv even the small benefits up they now receive until free traders can show us whereby we may receive equal benefits from their policy? For the sake of crushing our employers shall we crush ourselvs also? Samson to kill his enemies had to kill himself. Hav workingmen got to do the same suicidal act? No, we hav a better way, as outlined in our Congressman Foran's bill in regard to foreign labor.

There is too much stress given both in protection and free trade papers, on tables of wages, giving the amount paid in foreign countries and America to workingmen. If it was conclusivly shown to me that an Englishman gets $15 where I get $12, still I should want to know where my $12 was coming from before I admitted the beauties of free trade. Free traders admit that many trades will be ruined, and wages decreased in all trades, but offset these slight afflictions by pointing to the greatly decreased price of living. But that they cannot prove to a certainty. There are two things to be taken into consideration: first, improved machinery that some branches of American industry hav, and great competition, hav reduced the price of many articles useful to the workingman to figures below what they sell for in foreign countries; under free trade that is one advantage we should lose; second, how do we know that the prices now prevailing in England will stay so? Increased demand for an article increases its price—for instance, take that pocket-knife that sells in England for thirty-five cents; with a market increased by fifty millions, would England still be good enough to sell it at the same price, or would the largely increased demand for them stimulate English workingmen to ask increased prices for making them, consequently making English manufacturers raise the price on them to pay the increased price of manufacturing them. All things sell cheaply in England to-day because they hav an over-production on a small market, but with the markets of the United States thrown open to them the prices of their articles could not, under the laws of trade, to say nothing of the selfishness of the English manufacturer when he found he had destroyed the American manufacturer remain the same. It would be a sorry day for the American workingman if he found, after fighting for free trade and getting it, that the prices of English goods bounded right up. Again, supposing that this country became almost wholly an agricultural country, who would do the carrying—who but England, that country which subsidizes its ships and shipping interests by taking an enormous amount of money from its own taxpayers, but is too conscientious a free trader to call subsidizing protection?—but subsidizing is nothing else but indirect protection.

While believing that the policy of protection is insisted upon for a natural selfish reason by the manufacturer, with no thought as to whether it benefits or hurts the men whom he employed, yet we believe there is an incidental gain to the working class, inasmuch as it at least givs them some kinds of work which they would not hav if certain kinds of industry were destroyed, yet the protectiv gain is not as much as it would be if the thing he sells was protected, namely, his labor. Add a wise provision to our tariff laws, protecting labor against unwholesome competition, and we will hav a perfect system. Repeal our present tariff laws, and we will hav the greatest panic America has ever seen. History will but repeat itself. Workingmen, read up; see what protection and free trade hav done for our interests in the past to judge what they will do in the future. Don't accept the mere theories of free trade against the practical benefits of protection. Who is the greatest agitator for free trade? England. Why? For our benefit? No; if you were a merchant in a certain town, and you had a rival in business who urged upon you the beauties of a change of policy, would you not look with just suspicion upon his motivs? Then why not look at England's motiv in the same way? If, as the free traders assert, there will be no change in America, except for the better, then indeed is England the most unselfish nation in the world; but I fear she is not, and that she is but using misguided American free traders as cat's-paws to poke her chestnuts out of the fire. Seeing awhile ago a communication from a Knight of Labor in your paper, I will sign myself, to let him know that he is not the only Liberal Knight of Labor, KNIGHT OF LABOR No. 2.

Was Mesmer Correct? Does Mind Influence Mind?

"Why, yes—certainly!" I hear a thousand voices exclaim. And I myself believe those thousand and more voices are right. I think their "yes" certainly is the correct, truthful response. And yet, from a recent well-written article in the neat little Spiritual paper published at Atlanta, Ga., called Light for Thinkers, it would seem that that great old wheelhorse in thought and work, Dr. LaRoy Sunderland, of Quincy, Mass., does not believe a word of it; for he says he believes all the physical influence of mediums, and those who hav the power in religious revivals, is self-induced—that it is simply the revolving of the idea of what has been promulgated in the minds of the individuals so convulsed. And further, that looking upon a portrait of Mesmer that hung upon a wall before him, as he wrote, he proclaimed that he did not believe a word of his doctrins. And then he proceeds to relate that under the influence of the first sermon he preached, away back in the year 1824, I think it was (he having been a Methodist revival preacher twenty years of his long life), nearly, or quite, the whole congregation became prostrate. How queer this sage's reasoning appears to me as I look upon a large fine photograph of him now lying before me, which shows him to be the par-excellence magnatizer by reason of a very uncommon depth of subtle magnetism that lurks in his life, power, or mind. Then, I say, with this view his talk seems to me analogous to that of a bashful miss, who, being a natural, practical, and even far-famed musician, sits back when asked to perform, with the plea, "I can't." Or like Daniel Webster, a model of mental greatness with the phrenologists, who himself entertained a bitter prejudice against the very, and only one, system which can accurately rate him and other men according to their mentality. But what of it, anyway? Well, what we want is to get men to reason right, and to arrive at correct conclusions. And that brings me clear back to the query of my caption, viz., "Does Mind Influence Mind?" I answer, yes. In the first place, I agree with Mr. Putnam that the essence or seed of mind, and I say spirit, too, lies subtly in matter—in nature; and that evolution develops the mind and spirit from matter, and yet it is matter refined and perfected to its climax. Taking Prof. Denton's truism of the soul of things, we hav the first stepping-stone to the influence of mind upon mind. He says old wall paper, the walls of prisons, or the physical surroundings of beautiful and harmonious denizens will, in years after, impress one (or sensitivs) with the nature of what has been.

Then again comes the doctrin that "events cast their shadows before." Some individuals will dream at night of an almost forgotten personage, when lo! in the next day he or she receives a letter from that identical person. Why? The fact is, that letter, charged with the magnetism of the writer whose mind has been centered upon the one he has addressed, influenced his mind before the letter came. Many a one can tell by their own feelings if there is a letter in post for them. I say can tell; I mean that they feel a positiv impression before certain visible knowledge, that there is, or is not, a letter, etc.

Again the old adage, "The devil is always on hand when you are thinking about him." The fact is he is on the way to your house, he is thinking about you, because bent right on the way to you, and thus influences your thoughts with his mind, and you commence talking about him. And lo and behold! he rings at the door, he is ushered in, and all laugh, and with raised hands exclaim in acclaim, "The devil is always near when one is talking about him." Again, let one of powerful mind go to a table, or into a room where all is life and chat, and if in a grave mood, although this man of powerful mind is silent, but thoughtful, soon the tone of conversation becomes lowered, and finally all are nearly or quite silent. Or why does one orator hav more influence upon an assembly of people than another? Is it ideas he givs them which, revolved in their own minds, self induce? No, sir! not so, for the man of the least power may be the better speaker of the two, and present more ideas, yet it is the man of profound thought that moves the multitude, or the most positiv and penetrating minds that influence communities and friends, and not always the most learned. A letter written in deep feeling will impress its reader, possibly to tears. One written carelessly has but little influence with the reader, etc. Do we not all miss Mr. Bennett's influence in THE TRUTH SEEKER? That homely "Old Abe" like commoner influence is dwindling away and the paper is becoming more classical.

But to return. Dr. Sunderland goes on to tell of a lady who became tranced by the "Holy Ghost" under certain preaching at a revival meeting, and that years afterwards he met with the lady and she threw herself into a like trance; that she had become self-induced so she could do the self-same thing without the aid of another. Does the doctor realize that possibly his own mind or presence might hav been the cause upon that occasion, or that possibly after the start she had got at the protracted meeting, the spirits might hav taken control? These conditions of scenery indicate clairvoyance, and many of your readers will recollect the recitals of Andrew Jackson Davis, the Poughkeepsie clairvoyant, how after a time he became independent of his magnetizers, and saw the spirit-world, and from his scenes in the beautiful summer-land learned the lessons now taught in our Spiritual lyceums, that we may commence to do on earth as is done in the heavens.

Ortonville, Mich. DR. T. S. ANDREWS.

The Right Way to Advance Temperance.

A law has gone into effect in this state which declares "provision shall be made by the proper local school authorities for instructing all pupils in all schools supported by public money, or under state control, in physiology and hygiene with special reference to the effects of alcoholic drinks, stimulants, and narcotics upon the human system." It also provides that "no certificate shall be granted to any person to teach in the public schools of the state of New York after the first day of January, eighteen hundred and eighty-five, who has not passed a satisfactory examination in physiology and hygiene, with special reference to the effect of alcoholic drinks, stimulants, and narcotics upon the human system."

This is a strong blow at intemperance. Most drunkards become so thoughtlessly; they drift downward, day by day, without detecting their danger. Now, it becomes the legal duty of all our public schools to point out the moral, mental, and physical decay which must inevitably follow the indulgence in alcholic drinks, stimulants, or narcotics. If the next generation destroys itself it will do so with full knowledge. The state has erected a light-house on the rocks, and no one need stand there in ignorance of the danger.

Tobacco being a narcotic it will be the duty of teachers to call attention to its effects upon the human system. It is possible that we are making a strong advance upon another useless, filthy, sensuous, and injurious habit.

State Superintendent of Public Instruction Hon. Wm. B. Ruggles, has issued the following circular in relation to the law referred to, to the boards of education throughout the state.

An Act in relation to the study of physiology and hygiene in the public schools.

The people of the state of New York, represented in Senate and Assembly, do enact as follows:

Section 1. Provision shall be made by the proper local school authorities for instructing all pupils in all schools supported by public money, or under state control, in physiology and hygiene, with special reference to the effects of alcoholic drinks, stimulants, and narcotics upon the human system.

Section 2. No certificate shall be granted to any person to teach in the public schools of the state of New York after the first day of January, 1885, who has not passed a satisfactory examination in physiology and hygiene, with special reference to the effects of alcoholic drinks, stimulants, and narcotics upon the human system.

No particular day being named in the act on which it shall take effect, under the Revised Statutes, part 1, chapter vii, title 4, section 12, it becomes a law on the twentieth day after its passage, namely, March 30, 1884.

The language of the act is very broad, and its provisions apply to all district schools, union free schools, public schools, organized under special statutes in cities and villages, normal schools, Indian reservation schools, and separate neighboring schools.

It applies to all pulpits in the above-named schools, to state pupils in all institutions for the instruction of the deaf and dumb, and blind, and to pupils in such asylum schools as share in the apportionment of the public school money.

This act does not conflict with the act of 1877 to prevent frequent changes of text-books in schools, but is to be construed and executed in harmony with the provisions of that statute.

Where the power to adopt text-books is vested by the statute in boards of education, or such bodies as perform the functions of such boards in the several cities and villages of the state, it will be their duty, within a reasonable time after the law of 1884 takes effect, to adopt text-books in which physiology and hygiene are treated, "with special reference to the effects of alcoholic drinks, stimulants, and narcotics upon the human system," if such text-books hav not already been adopted.

In other school districts, it will be the duty of the districts, at the first annual school meeting after the passage of the act, to adopt such text-books, and in the mean time, and until they shall hav been legally adopted by the district meetings, it will be the duty of the trustees, within a reasonable time after the passage of the act, to select such text-books and cause them to be used in the schools within their respectiv districts.

In graded schools, the local school authorities will make such adequate provision for the instruction of all pupils in their schools as will giv the law, in its full scope, a reasonable enforcement. The instruction required by the statute is not to be confined to the higher grades, as thereby many pupils would fail to receive the special instruction the legislature intended they should hav. The method of imparting the instruction will be within the sound discretion of the local school authorities, using text-books, or oral instruction, or combining both methods, as, in their judgment, may seem best adapted to the different departments.

Care should be exercised in the choice of text-books, to select those in which the subject is intelligently, temperately, and wisely treated.—Exchange.

"It is Greatly to a Man's Interest in This World to Join the Church."

Such was the expression which came from the lips of a Methodist divine of a city in Kansas not long ago. Such is the real sentiment of not only Christian ministers, but of Christian churches. What is the meaning, the significance of such a sentiment? Evidently this, that the man or woman who, disbelieving in the Christian religion, dares express his honest thoughts must expect defamation of character, decline of business, social ostracism, discharge from his situation as a laborer, and sometimes a disruption of his home.

There is not a town in this great country, and a country which, as such, recognizes no religion as its guide, where there are any outspoken Infidels, but that, at some time or other, those Infidels hav suffered in every form that the church could devise.

It is the boast of the Christian church—Protestant and Catholic alike—that whereas other religions hav utilized the sword, and used other forms of persecution, the Christian religion bases itself on moral suasion only—that it always has appealed to man's higher nature, and left the results of unbelief to God alone. To make such a statement in the face of the fact that from the earliest days of authentic history of the Christian church force of some kind (not moral) has been the principal means of the establishment and maintenance of Christianity, proves either ignorance or falsity in its author. To say that Christianity always has been, and is to-day, willing and able to go armed with its historic and moral evidences as the means of vanquishing its foes is an absolute untruth. The church never has been either willing or able to defend itself against its opponents by mere argument or logical demonstration. Every reader of history knows that the arguments of Porphyry were answered, not by reason or by an appeal to historic facts, but by fire—by burning his works. The increase of civil, ecclesiastical, and political power in the church gave another method of answering its opponents. They not only burnt the books, but their authors as well. For over fifteen hundred years persecution, tyranny, and ignorance were the great corner-stones of the Christian religion. Millions hav been cruelly put to death by the many denominations of Christianity for disbelief of its doctrins. "But the case is altered now," it is said. "No Christian church thinks of persecuting men for their unbelief, or rather for disproving its claims." Facts testify to the contrary in every town or city where Christians and Infidels liv. No Infidel dares declare his belief without suffering financially and socially. The cessation of the use of the fagot, the rack, the stake, and the gibbet is no proof that the disposition of the church has one whit changed. There are doubtless many Christians who are too good, too humane to injure an unbeliever. But it is also true that many Christians, both of the clergy and laity, would rejoice to extinguish Infidelity by brute force alone. Every man that ever held an official position in the church (and I hav, and know whereof I speak) knows that his temporal success has been interfered with by Christian people. Let a man locate in a nominally Christian town, and set himself up in business; let him be honest in all his dealings with men, and, being an Infidel who has courage enough to tell others his thoughts, he will shortly find that in spite of his honesty and general good conduct, his business declines, and he must join some church or else move to another community. In nearly every town where I lecture I receive this from the most reputable citizens. The following is the mode of procedure in a general way: The sanctified priest makes it his especial business and duty to inform the Christian sheep that such a man (meaning the Infidel) is very reckless and dishonorable in his character, that he is an enemy of common morality, that he is the embodiment of all that is low and sensual; in fact, that he is an Infidel. The last is of all things the most abominable to a good, orthodox Christian. They are then counseled to not help him in business by either buying or selling to him. If he be a laborer, every effort is made to hav him discharged. If his wife be a stanch Christian she is informed that to liv with such a man is the most grievous sin in the sight of God; that she is liable to lose her own soul, and those of her children as well. The result is that many a home where peace and love reigned has become a den of hatred and despair.

To burn, imprison, or behead men for their opinion is the result of the greatest intolerance. But is it not as cruel to defame character, to injure social position, or to create enemies instead of friends? Do not intelligent and good men and women suffer as intensely, if not more so, when their character is assailed, when their nearest friends are turned to enemies for no just cause or reason, as when mere physical suffering is administered? If there is any difference in the moral turpitude in the two cases, the greater is in the former. Vile insinuation, damnable hypocrisy and deceit, and a peculiar qualification for brutally defending religion are the main requisits of the Christian advocates of to-day. No popular Infidel to-day is recognized by Christians as either good or great. The attitude of Talmage and Joseph Cook, and others of the same breed, shows what Christianity of the nineteenth century is. It is nothing better than a being in whom the venom of the snake, the cruelty of the tiger, and the heartlessness of a demon, all congregate and crystallize. Ingratitude, despotism, a lack of human sympathy, and violent ridicule are all the implements of warfare in possession of the Christian church.

The Christian church with some rare exceptions is composed of the same classes as it always has been: the ignorant—those who do not know enough to either doubt, disbelieve, or deny Christianity—and those who join it for the sake of social respectability, financial success, and civil power. Where one joins the church for the benefit of his soul, ten thousand join it for the aboqe considerations.

Christianity is to-day what it always has been, the enemy of reason and freedom. Its venom is as poisonous as it ever was. Its purposes change not. The Methodist and Catholic alike are despots. The Christian's mind is not free, and he is determined that others' minds shall be enslaved like his own. We need the power of that sentiment which over a hundred years ago, when the conflict in this country was political, expressed itself by demanding either liberty or death.

Catholic Persecution of Protestants in Spain.

From the Independent.

The new Spanish Ministry, under Canovas, is very reactionary. It may be that the prime minister thought he would be able, in spite of the entrance of the Ultramontane leader, Pidal, into the ministry of instruction, to preserve to Protestants the small measure of religious tolerance which he had left them under his former government. But he had made his reckoning without his host—that is, without the fanatical clergy, which is now trying everywhere how far it can go with its encroachments and injuries, secure that in Spain the rigor of the law would never be turned against a "venerable pater." On the 23d of January, a child of seven years old died in the little village of Navarra, Olaragutia. Its Protestant parents called in the pastor of the neighboring Pamplona, to bury it in the civil cemetery; but the judge, at the request of the priest, ordered the body to be buried in the Roman Catholic cemetery. Accompanied by the knelling of the funeral bell, the judge, the town council, and many of the inhabitants came to the house of mourning on the 25th, and required the body to be given up to the priest. Mr. Goicoechea, the father, maintained his right and refused to yield, and the authorities went away. The governor of the province sent a written order to the mayor, to respect the right of the parents, and to order that the funeral should take place in the civil cemetery. But the mayor refused to obey the order till he had taken counsel with the bishop of Pamplona. On the 27th he came back again with the judge, who said that he ordered on the ground of higher authority (we suppose that of the bishop) the carrying off by force of the body, and its burial in the Catholic cemetery.

A sergeant and four gens d'armes carried out the act of violence and the burial took place in the Catholic cemetery amidst the cries of the crowd: "Long liv religion! Down with the Protestants." Thus, neither the king, the ministers, nor the government, but the priests alone, rule and are obeyed by the judges. Occasionally the people dare to defend themselvs. In the little village of San Martin a woman in child-bed called in a Freethinking physician, who baptized the child, which was at the point of death, shortly before its decease. No doctor in Spain would dare to omit baptism in such a case But the priest refused Christian burial to the child on the ground of its baptism not being valid. For four days—an unheard-of length of time for Spain—the body remained unburied until the people rose en masse, besieged the house of the priest, and took such a threatening aspect that he was obliged to do his duty. Near Besullo, in Asturias, a priest was returning to the village with the viaticum, the holy wafer. Two Evangelical boys, who could not turn aside on the narrow mountain path, ran on in front to avoid meeting him. The priest rode faster behind, and when they courteously stood aside to let him pass, he took the capsule out of his pocket, and said to the boys: "I hav God in here," bidding them take off their caps. But one of them answered, courageously: "The apostle Paul says, 'The Almighty dwelleth not in temples made with hands; neither is he served by men's hands, seeing he himself giveth to all life and breath and all things.'" The priest at once called on a witness, and both boys were called before the magistrate, where they were punished with four days' imprisonment and a fine of ten francs each, besides, what is far more, the costs. All these are facts, proved by official documents, and not a single case has occurred in which the persecuted hav really met with justice.

Lectures and Meetings.

MR. CHAINEY had a good audience at his fourth lecture in this city. His subject was "The Genius of Shakspere, and its Relation to Secularism." He will return on the 25th, and speak upon "Sunday: Past, Present, and Future."

COL. INGERSOLL lectured at the Academy of Music in this city last Sunday to an immense audience, which listened with profoundest attention, and laughed and applauded alternately. The lecture was substantially the one published in THE TRUTH SEEKER last week.

C. B. REYNOLDS is stirring the people of Pittsburgh, Pa., up very thoroughly. His lectures are attended by good-sized audiences. The papers of the town giv him fair reports, and altogether his course is a marked success. At his lecture on Thursday evening the 24th, he made the following strong points against the church. They are points which every workingman should consider:

"Why do those who do the hard work of the world so often hav least of its enjoyment? Why do the working classes hav such scant subsistence, while idle drones revel in luxury? Go ask priest or parson. They will tell you: 'It is the wisdom of divine providence; God knows best, and you should be content with that position in life to which it has pleased God to call you,' and they quote the words of Jesus, 'Blessed are ye poor, for yours is the kingdom of God.' 'Blessed are ye that hunger now, for ye shall be be filled' (Luke 6, 20, 21). And they strive to turn your thoughts from investigating why you should suffer want while they revel in luxury, by referring you to the instructions of Jesus: 'Take no thought of what ye shall eat or wherewithal ye shall be clothed.' I appeal to you toilers with brain or muscle. Is this true? Is it blessed to be poor? Ask those who hav shivered in the winter's cold, without sufficient fuel, food, or clothing, sick, cold, famished: Is it a blessing to be poor and hungry? Ask those whose lives hav been one constant round of toil, with never but scant clothing and plainest food: Is it blessed to be poor? You hav seen skilled workmen toil on until, broken in health and spirit, they hav sought oblivion in the intoxicating cup, and only found rest in the drunkard's grave. You who hav seen want and poverty drive young men to robbery and young women to sell themselvs for bread, is it true, that it is blessed to be poor and hungry? Christ and Bible declare it is. Priests and parsons tell us these light afflictions shall work out an exceeding weight of glory. The immortal souls of the poor saints shall find rest, peace, and plenty in heaven."

THE Manhattan Liberal Club held its annual meeting for the election of officers on the evening of the 25th ult. James Parton, the historian, was re-elected president, as were T. B. Wakeman, Esq., and Stephen Pearl Andrews as vice-presidents, Dr. E. B. Foote being chosen as third vice-president in the place of Mr. Edward W. Chamberlain, who assumes the office of assistant librarian. Mrs. A. C. Macdonald instead of second becomes recording secretary, with George E. Macdonald as assistant. This latter election is supposed to hav been brought about by way of recognition of services performed as reporter of the club for the past year. Professor A. L. Rawson will continue to serve as corresponding secretary, Mr. Morris as treasurer will still continue to take the nickels at the door, and Mr. King remains librarian. The trustees are Courtlandt Palmer, Leopold Magnus, and Theron C. Leland. The program for the month of May is as follows: On the 2d Mrs. Imogene C. Fales, president of the Sociologic Society, will speak on "Co-operation and Progress;" on the 9th Mr. Clinton Furbish lectures on "Pantarchism in Politics;" on the 16th Sabin Hough discourses upon "Civil Government;" "Education and Liberty" will be treated of by Dr. Paul Carus on the 23d, and on Decoration Day the officers of the club will take the lead in celebrating "The New Festival of the Dead," at which time guests and music are announced. This is a year of anniversary celebrations for the club. Friday falls several times upon red letter days. The first Friday of the year was the seventieth recurrence of the day when Congress ratified the treaty of peace with Great Britain, February 22d was Friday and Washington's Birthday; the 29th of the same month was Friday and Leap Year Day. Decoration Day comes on next to the last day of the week, as does also the Fourth of July. In fact, as will be seen by consulting our ANNUAL, important events are connected with nearly every Friday in the present year. THE TRUTH SEEKER wishes the club every success, and will continue from time to time to giv reports of its interesting meetings.

THE Spiritualists of Brooklyn held a meeting last Sunday evening, of which we extract the following account from the Sun: "Ex-Surrogate A. H. Daily announced last night in the church of the New Dispensation, in Brooklyn, that Mrs. J. T. Lillie would make an address refuting the charges made against Spiritualism by Dr. Talmage, in the Tabernacle yesterday morning. 'I went this morning,' said he, 'to listen to Mr. Talmage's tirade against Spiritualism. He said we were a set of "lank, lean, long-haired, lantern-jawed, and cadaverous individuals." Just think of Mr. Talmage describing anybody else in that way! He said we were all nervous, and that none of us was healthy. Now I am going to introduce to you at least one healthy specimen—Mrs. J. T. Lillie.' Mrs. Lillie was greeted with loud applause by 400 men and women, who had paid ten cents apiece to get in. She is tall, and was dressed in black silk, with white flowers at her bosom. She quoted Talmage's texts, slapping the Bible and imitating his manner in a way that threw the audience into convulsions of laughter. Mr. Talmage, she said, had all he could do to make theology and geology get along together without going outside for difficulties. Passages all through the Bible confirmed the consultation of familiar spirits and their materialization. Moses was a medium. He had consultations with spirits who told him what to do to induce Pharaoh to let God's people depart. And he had had to try a good many tricks, too, before he succeeded. He had found that the jugglers could do almost everything he could. That was just what Mr. Talmage had said of the Spiritualists. After Mrs. Lillie had concluded, Medium Matthews, of Philadelphia, said, turning to a lady in the audience: 'I see a spirit floating above you. Havn't you a husband living, named Edward?' 'Yes, sir,' replied the lady. 'You left him because his brutal conduct endangered your life, did you not?' 'Yes, sir' (crying). 'Now, do you know me, or anything about me?' 'No, sir.' 'On your oath?' 'Yes, sir.' 'Well, your mother's spirit is beside you. She commends your course, and tells you to keep away from your husband. She says he is in the hands of the law, and will be punished. Is that true?' 'Yes, sir.' When Mr. Matthews had finished the lady had become hysterical, and was sobbing violently."

Six Sonnets of Contrast.

I. WHAT THE FATHERS FOUND.

A hand that shaped the plastic stuff of things
With more than all we know of craftsman's skill;
A mind that ruled the fingers' fashionings
With more than we can dream of prescient Will;
Contrivance superhuman, yet which brings
Its elder brotherhood with human shift
Writ on the face of its perfected plan;
Economy beyond a housewife's thrift
In world-material, from the simplest flower,
The tiniest herb and insect up to man—
All these our fathers found—transcendent Power,
Unerring Art, and unhorizoned Love
In nature—with some puzzles, which an hour
Of sound apologetics would remove.

II. WHAT THE SONS FIND.

A struggling herd, of whom some fight their way
To the perfected type by slow degrees,
Through countless forms of death and of decay,
And (possibly) a Being, watching these;
Whose attributes we know not, save to say
That none in full infinitude he hath.
Not Power—or else Omnipotence laid by;
Not skill—his blunders strew creation's paths;
Not Thrift—the world stands shuddering at its waste;
"Not Love!" the unselected millions cry.
Nought infinit; unless it there be traced,
Where the grim Humor of his work appears
Seasoning the scheme for mortals, with a taste
As sharp as anguish and as salt as tears.

III. ACCORDING TO ARMINIUS.

Choose ye between the logic that arraigns
Jehovah at the bar of human woe,
And that which pleads, Our God not foreordains
The eternal pangs he cannot but foreknow.
Choose ye! Our choice is made: the soul constrains
The mind; the reasoning pious in its flaws,
Lax but endurable, contents us well;
Nor need we, zealous for symmetric laws
To bind the earth about the Eternal's throne,
Round off his scheme with a predestined hell.
Meanwhile, though everlasting pain foreknown,
And while foreknown permitted in man's lot,
Resembles evil foreordained, we own,
Our watchword still shall be: "God wills it not."

IV. ACCORDING TO CALVIN.

Foreknown is foreordained: he knoweth all;
There is no life his purpose runs not through.
He planned to damn the many by the Fall,
And by the Sacrifice to save the few.
It helps not fictions, that the facts appal.
Free Will? How could he other than decree
The act who made the doer what he is?
Free Will! His saving Grace alone is free:
To whom he wills 'tis given or denied.
Believe it—though thy spirit mutinies.
Believe it—though thy riven heart hav cried,
"Lord! see my tender child! Be these thy ways,
That it should lisp 'Our Father' at my side,
And ripen for damnation as it prays?"

V. THEISM.

The Being immanent in things, the Thought
Incarnate in the world, the Absolute,
The Unconditioned—dost thou giv us nought
But husks like these, Philosophy, for fruit?
What room or reason for "I love," "I ought,"
In mouths of men who stand in barren awe
Before—nay in—this vast and shadowy All,
Worshipers and self-worshipt? Guiding law,
Protection, love, communion, where are these?
How for this limitless Impersonal,
Resign that wealth of tender images,
The Father with the father's eye and hand,
The Shepherd with the sheep about his knees,
The Great Rock-shadow in the weary land?

VI. PANTHEISM.

Worship the man-made god that pleaseth you,
Good Theists! So the mediæval heart,
Adored undoubtingly the robed-in-blue
Cloud-straddling gray-beard of monastic art;
And so Xenophanes his oxen, too,
Constructed their ideal. But for me
Spinoza's creed shall serve; my feet must stray
Unguided, to the end, ere I shall see
A Shepherd-God to guide them. Yet my soul
Goes not unfortified upon its way;
For—once vain yearnings brought beneath control—
The Infinite, in whom, by whom we liv,
Shall breathe from solemn sea and starry pole,
A deeper peace than ever prayer can giv.

Wolves in Congress.

From John Swinton's Paper.

It is perfectly true that Congress is full of lawyers, corporation agents, party hacks, railroad directors, political sharpers, bankers, landlords, wire-pullers, capitalists, land jumpers, contractors, mine and mill owners, coupon-cutters and millionaires.

How absurd it is for the voters to fill both Houses with such men as representativs of the farmers and working people of the country, or to suppose that they are desirous of enacting laws that must be injurious to their own interests!

If the producers are unfit to legislate, they are unfit to vote; for the election of legislators is but the first step in legislation.

As much sense is needed to vote for a man as to vote for a measure.

The Rostrum.

Herbert Spencer's "Coming Slavery."

STEPHEN PEARL ANDREWS'S LECTURE BEFORE THE MANHATTAN LIBERAL CLUB.

An article by Herbert Spencer, recently published in England, has been republished in the April number of the Popular Science Monthly in this country, entitled, "The Coming Slavery." It is an able, of course—almost violent—a remarkable assault on the tendency in the community at large toward State Communism—toward that organization of affairs, I may say, of which our friend, Mr. Langerfeld, stands here always representativ. Herbert Spencer therefore appears now for the first time openly in the field as a contestant against what he himself admits to be a very strong drift, and, as he thinks, a very great danger in that direction. I am called upon to review that article. I shall divide my discourse this evening into three parts, somewhat after the manner of the clergymen. The first will be, A condensed statement of Mr. Spencer's position; the second will be, On the fallacies and weak points of Mr. Spencer's position and arguments; and the third will be, On the future type of human society as indicat d by universological sociology. You will, of course, see the inevitable necessity that I spend a considerable introductory portion of my time in reading the extracts from Mr. Spencer's article, which will giv you a clear insight into its nature and purpose.

[Here the speaker read a number of extracts from the article under criticism, giving the salient points substantially as printed in THE TRUTH SEEKER of April 19th. He then proceeded:]

My second part proposes to consider the fallacies and weak points of Mr Spencer's position and argument. In the first plaee, it is not true, as Mr. Spencer assumes, that pity for the suffering classes is the prime motiv of the community in working for the intervention of government to rectify the social condition. That is one of the motivs; Mr. Spencer has adduced it as the sole motiv. An immensely more potent motiv is the discovery in these modern times intellectually (it has been sensed in all ages) of the immense economies of the large scale; of the fact that things can be done in the governmental way, the official way, on the large scale; accommodating many thousands of people at once, and by a simple operation; the kind of facilities which government can and does thus provide for the people.

Another motiv not alluded to by Mr. Spencer is the growing sense of justice. I will read, to illustrate, a far deeper and more genial mode of reasoning in relation to that subject from a most remarkable and admirable work recently published, by Lester F. Ward, entitled, "Dynamic Sociology." He is the coming man, along with Comte, Spencer, and the great thinkers who will be much studied in the immediate future, and to whom you cannot otherwise than rightly giv a leading and pronounced attention. Mr. Ward, says:

> "But there is another point of view from which this question may be regarded. It is due to this class [the poor and ignorant] that the state stretch forth its arm in their behalf and elevate them to full citizenship. It is really not their fault that they are what and where they are. They are simply the victims of the existing social system. They hav been crowded further and further down by the force of unorganized circumstances. The state has stood by and calmly witnessed the process by which this has been effected. It has seen the social forces work out this result, and has not interfered. It has winked at the inequality of intelligence due to the inequality in the means of acquiring knowledge, and now it is paying for its neglect by being compelled to support paupers and prosecute criminals. Aside from its duty to itself, it owes a duty to this merely unfortunate class, and it cannot plead the lack of willingness on their part as an excuse for longer neglecting this duty. They cannot be expected to be competent to reason out what constitutes their true interests. Society does know and should take immediate steps to secure them, especially since in so doing it will secure its own."

Finally, another motiv that Mr. Spencer overlooks is the urgent necessity of escaping—at the risk of the coming slavery which he indicates—the coming slavery, and the actual slavery, on the other hand, which co-exist with the present order of society—the fear of being engulfed by monopoly, of being hampered and robbed by great corporations, and subjugated by the plutocracy in ten thousand ways; the influence of the great banks, and their control over the currency, etc., with which we in this club are so familiar. All this must in some way be met and counteracted by society; and the people look in the direction of State Socialism as the method.

Mr. Spencer has not one word of criticism for the extant order of society. He has never once used the word justice. He has never appealed to any high motiv on the part of anybody. I think his article must be a disappointment—and a great disappointment—to some of his best friends.

The position, therefore, that is presented before us is that of an actual slavery which we are in and which is every day augmenting and forcing us to do something—and do it quickly, if possible; and the danger of a slavery, on the other hand, coming from the further intervention of the state; that is to say, society is "between the devil and the deep sea."

The form of social doctrin which Mr. Spencer here represents is denominated—has been for many years so-called—the "laisser faire" theory. These words, for the benefit of those not acquainted with the French, and perhaps not used to this style of consideration, I will say, mean simply, "Let alone." It is the "go-as-you-please" doctrin. It is individualism as individualism is generally understood in the world. But Mr. Spencer does not mean hands off and let alone at all, in any radical sense; he means hands off from the system which now prevails. The only true laisser faire doctrin is that of the Nihilists and the Anarchists—those people who say, "If you will simply abolish your laws altogether and not interfere by the state at all, we, the people, will take care of the whole subject;" but that Mr. Spencer does not mean.

I am well known to be, personally, a stanch defender of individualism. I sympathize deeply with all Mr. Spencer's dread of the extension of state intervention. But individualism, to work out its good results, must be complemented by two other factors of social life equally as important as itself, and these are equity and courtesy. I will presently define the term "courtesy," and explain it. Laisser faire is the doctrin of liberty in the sense in which individualism is now understood. Equity is the doctrin of rights. Courtesy, deference, altruism, is the doctrin of duty. The Comtean Positivism, like the Christian religion before it, is based on altruism solely. Equity is the doctrin of rights. It givs no emphasis to liberty and none to the doctrin of rights, but in the direction of the moralization of capital it has a great role to play. From its simplicity of method it fails to be integral. The individualism which now prevails in society, and which Mr. Spencer stands sponsor for under the name of laisser faire is not, in operation, at all the same individualism for which I stanchly contend before this club. I mean individualism as one of the factors of a composit social system which is imbued all through with the doctrin of equity also, and with the doctrin of duty; and so combined, it is an indispensable element to the true and final order of human society. But individualism—the freedom simply granted to the strong to encroach on the weak, and with no doctrin even which prohibits it—turning the weak over to the strong—as the natural law of the subject, which is the doctrin of the present system of political economy, and is in accord with Mr. Spencer's doctrin—operates exactly the reverse of what a true individualism limited by equity and limited by duty would accomplish.

State Socialism proposes to establish equity by compulsion—to moralize the world mechanically, and by the agency of the law to make men do right by rendering it dangerous or impossible to do wrong. In this attempt, they, on the other hand, disregard liberty, and duty, and courtesy. In giving us the equities they are heedlessly sacrificing our liberties; and they again dispense with all appeals to our better nature. This is the new slavery which Mr. Spencer, with his Cassandra-like vaticinations, warns us against.

I come to the central weakness of Mr. Spencer's position. It is in the assumption that Socialism in its very nature involves the element of slavery. This he states unequivocally. It is a bold and surprising assertion, which is untrue and cannot be logically maintained. In making it he shows a lack of that analytical acumen which should characterize the great philosopher. What I wish to force upon your attention here, the counter statement that I wish to to emphasize, is, that it is not in Socialism, as such, but in the compulsion involved in a certain form of socialism, that the danger of slavery inheres; and that there is a higher and nobler form of Socialism which is not only not slavery, but which is our only means of rescue from all sorts and degrees of slavery; so far as that is possible in the nature of things. I refer to Pantarchism, or that Guided Spontaneity, to which I shall hav occasion to refer more fully further on. It is not true either in fact or in theory that all Socialism involves slavery. It is frankly and fully conceded by me that the element of slavery resides largely in the State Socialism which Mr. Spencer is criticising; and all my educational instincts are aroused, as his are, to sense the danger from that side. But mere danger must not deter us. Navigation is very dangerous, but we cannot afford to dispense with it. We must learn to navigate.

There are many comforting and assuring circumstances on the other side. The government itself is steadily ameliorating, or is destined to amelioration. Its future proceedings also will be under the full glare of criticism—a different condition of things from what has existed in the past. The counterweight of a constantly increasing individualism is to be taken into account. People will become more and more difficult to be governed adversely to their interests, and that is an existing force against this encroachment of the government. The cheerful view of Mr. Ward, his counter view to Spencer, will be found at Vol. II., page 582 of "Dynamic Socioogy."

Mr. Andrews's third part was devoted to a description of the ideal government, called pantarchy, which Mr. Ward and other political economists are beginning to consider. It is defined in brief as a "guided spontaneity—everybody doing exactly as they hav a mind to, and at the same time being guided by those who know better than themselvs"—the people voluntarily submitting to and sustaining the organized influence of the wisest and the best. He called attention particularly to Mr. Ward's statement of the four natural stages of the evolution of human society, which are, viz.; 1. The solitary or autarchic state; 2. The constrained aggregate, or anarchic state; 3. The national or politarchic state, and 4. the cosmopolitan or pantarchic state. We omit the further report of this third part of Mr. Andrews's lecture, on the text of the pantarchic state, because we hav it in mind to present the same train of reasoning to our readers from Mr. Andrews in another form at no distant time.

After the lecture had received the criticism which it is a time-honored custom of the Liberal Club to bestow upon whatever is presented upon its platform in the way of a lecture, Mr. Andrews spoke as follows:

There has been little, almost nothing, valuable said in the way of direct criticism upon the positions which I hav assumed. I hardly know why it is required for me to say anything in reply. I can do only a little, perhaps, in the way of elaborating some of my leading thoughts. I do not recall a single position that has been taken by my critics that requires any special comment. If there be one it was made by Mr. Cohen, and to the effect that the order of society which I propound, and which I always insist on when I talk, and which I offend Mr. Langerfeld by insisting upon, is that this high ideal of society is adapted, not to the men and women that we actually hav in the world, but to ideal men and women, right men and women. Well, now, I plead guilty in relation to that. That is the flagrant truth of all that I hav propounded on the question. The great question in sociology, for me, is not what is necessary tomorrow, not what is adapted to the low condition in which people are to-day; but first and foremost, What is the high ideal of a perfect human society? And if there is nobody to propound that question; if there is nobody that cares for it except my own single self, then I propound and I care far it; and I regret that there are so few who care for it, so few who step on this platform that hav seemed to appreciate a word of what I say on that score. There are a few, and I greet them as "bretheren" and "sisteren;" and when we all meet on the higher plane, if ever that happens, we shall mutually recognize, I think, the greatness and rightfulness of the method which I propound.

It is unscientific, it is simply empiricism, it is quackery, to deal with the evils of society by simply feeling our way along, as some parties are doing, in order to get something to-morrow a little better than to-day, and building up something which you did not start right with, and without thinking in the first place what was right and what was wrong; because you had no scientific or perfect ideal, no distinct ideal from fundamental principles, with regard to what would be a perfect order of human life for perfect men and women. If you do not know that, you do not know where you want to go; you do not know anything about an ultimate. You are simply wandering off into the wilderness, for the purpose of finding a way, but with no purpose to go to California or to any other particular place.

It is only in the fact that Mr. Tucker does not emphasize or insist upon or greatly talk about it. He will admit, if you crowd him, all that I say, but it is not the thing he is interested in. What he is chiefly interested in is the pulling down of the old; the new must come up, so far as he is concerned, and take care of itself. I recognize the necessity myself for that destructiv process, and also experimental and temporary building; the building of scaffolding that we know is to be pulled down; but I want to know the form of the edifice that we are struggling to construct. I want to know something of the universal plan—of what Plato calls the architectonic. If nobody else cares for it, then I will care.

[A voice: "Judging from the past, at what time in the future do you think we will hav got to be perfect men and women?"]

I think that depends very much upon whether you men and women take my suggestions or not. As I see that there is only little probability of your doing so, the time will be probably a good way off—I should think it would be a great way off except I see there are changes in this respect rapidly going on, and I know that when you plant a new idea in men's minds, it is going to cling there whether they accept it or not. Though they despise it, it develops and grows; and three or five years hence people will be able and ready to appropriate and accept ideals that they may scout here to-night. Great ideas are now in the atmosphere. They are in the air. They are from the spirit world, if you choose, in some indefinit sense, as different people believe. There is a contagion of great purposes, great ideas, grand revolutions, and magnificent achievements for humanity, which the world never saw at any time before; and there is allied with that mere inception, mere feeling, a great and a pronounced conviction on the part of a few, of the principles at the bottom of this world movement, and faith in the thing to be accomplished.

The question, I know, in most minds—minds that call themselvs practical—is, what is the use of going away off a thousand, years ahead, or five thousand years ahead for an ideal and profound thought? Why not take hold of the thing immediately before our hands and do that? Well, suppose it should prove that reaching for the soundest, holding the highest, believing in the grandest, and knowing the best be the shortest way to arrive at all you aim at? I got this idea into the head of a friend of mine—if you will excuse the illustration, as I know you will, for the sake of its aptness—and he said, "Oh, yes; I see; it is a great deal easier to make a baby than it is to make a hand." Now, if you strive for the whole thing, if you demand a perfect human society, if you summon together only three people—if there are only three on this earth who believe in that, and who hav that ideal in common, and who remember the principles by which it is to be accomplished—you hav got a bigger thing done, in my judgment, than if you had conquered the assent of a whole continent to some small step in advance. And such a germ is planted here and now on this earth; it is growing every day, and honey-combing with its influence your society here, and the society of the world, and preparing to spring out like the birth of Minerva from the brain Jove, and fill the whole world. This world is to be transfigured, as it were, in a day, when the right principle is got hold of—when the right little handful of men and women appreciate that idea, and when they devote themselvs to that work. All this in a sense is here and now. We hav unknown people, obscure persons, probably, working together from hour to hour to realize the highest ideal—and that is the pantarchy in embryo. It is here among you, and it is more than the coming of Christ; more than anything of the past; more than anything that will be in the future; because it will be the birth of humanity, in a true sense. I mean the millennium based on science.

Some Questions about the Floods.

On reading the distressing account of the terrible floods in the Ohio valley, one cannot help asking: Why all this suffering, this cruel destruction of human labor and human hopes? Is there no way to protect the fruits of honest toiling along the shores of our mighty rivers and turn the superabundance of their water to blessing? Why is it that engineers, who make the study of "river-correction" (so called in German) a specialty, do not turn their eyes to Egypt, where for thousands of years the rising water of the Nile has been used to fertilize its beautiful valley? For what reasons cannot the same plan be followed here through the more level part of the country? Would not an extensiv network of canals be the safest outlet for those devastating waters which might be gathered in reservoirs and made useful in the drouth season? No doubt it would be a very costly undertaking, but how enormous the losses caused by the floods occurring almost every year and destroying not only valuable property and lovely homes but precious human lives? Levees, while robbing the river shores of their natural beauty and picturesqueness, are but poor protections against those powerful agents let loose from the clouds; moreover the riverbeds are constantly filling up with debris carried along by the water, and in course of time even high levees must become useless; on the other hand, the sediments in the canals would make excellent fertilizers, paying well for the trouble of cleaning the canals. I hav no knowledge of technical sciences and should be thankful to any competent teacher who would kindly answer the above questions in a popular manner, they being, I believe, of vital importance to the welfare of the country not only from the pecuniary, but also from the hygienic and therefore humanitarian point of view.

Years ago, while living in Alexandria, Egypt, I had occasion now and then to take a boat-ride on the great canal which brings some of the muddy Nile water to the above-named city. Along the borders of the canal there are beautiful gardens rich with the luxuriant growth of the semi-tropical regions. Calling back the by-gone days, I enter again those orange and lemon-tree groves, inhaling mentally their sweet perfume and that of the roses so abundant that their leaves are used for preserves. I close my eyes and look up once more to the graceful crowns of lofty palm-trees and the dark, glossy ones of the laurel.

Further on, by a quiet pond, the slender bamboo grows, and the calla-lily. Statues of Grecian goddesses and gods seem to play hide-and-seek about the tall oleanders and the glowing geranium hedges. Bands of children amuse themselvs on the broad and shady gravel walks, where promenade with equal solemnity the silent Turk and the stiff English governess. In the center pavilion of the khedive's garden Arab soldiers play fantastic music, and far off, beyond the green fields, steamers and sailing vessels cross the Mediterranean Sea, blue like the cloudless sky above it. Blessed be the powers of memory! While my mind wanders to sunny Egypt, I am sitting in my little sod cottage surrounded by the snow and ice of Dakota; my re-opened eyes are dazzled by the light reflected from the white prairie. The contrast is great, but despite the blizzards I had rather be here than there. Egypt may be the land of wonders, but America is the land of all possibilities! May its fertil soil soon be as free to all as air and sunshine!

Honor to Whom Honor is Due.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE TRUTH SEEKER, Sir: It should be a part of the religion of Freethinkers to use good taste in their language, and civility in their address or reference to all decent people, and especially to their equals and superiors in ability, amiability, and responsibility. To adopt the current sobriquets of the barroom and race-course, and apply them in brusk familiarity to those entitled to our best regards, is an act of culpable thoughtlessness or of graceless ignorance.

"The man who calls you Tom or Jack,
And proves by thumps upon your back
How he regards your merit,
Must needs to you be very rare,
Or you must hav much grace to spare,
To pardon or to bear it."

Such ill-applied familiarity is bad enough to be resented in ordinary cases, but when witlessly spoken of the worthiest and most noted of our thinkers it is little short of reprehensible. Popular abbreviations of some names are euphonius and endearing enough to be tolerated. Others are too harsh for endurance. To speak of Tom Paine and Bob Ingersoll is out of all keeping with propriety. Who would now say Tom Jefferson or Jim Garfield? Not even those who differ from them. Was ever Colonel Robert Ingersoll heard to mention any person except by giving full name and title?

To be a Freethinker, and possess all that the name implies, is to be a gentleman or gentlewoman, for not to be so is not to think, and true freedom is in acting with intelligent and sensitiv propriety. Classical elegance of diction is not to be expected from any but the scholar and artist, but it is not too much for even Liberals to exact of each other that they do not carelessly and purposely express themselvs in coarse and rude phrase, JOHN P. GUILD.

A Query.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE TRUTH SEEKER, Sir: Would it not be well for your correspondent from Cleveland to visit some college of science where vivisection is practiced, and learn the different methods, as by his own confession he is so ignorant in relation to the matter as never to hav heard of it until THE TRUTH SEEKER gave him the knowledge? I think, perhaps, it would be worth as much to him, and perhaps to the world, as Elmina's ghost-hunting, and I, for one, would rather contribute to aid him, if I believed in contributions for personal knowledge.

I think your anti-vivisectionists should be a little less ready to style such men as Dr. Foote and many others who agree with him, "worse than murderers." "I would not needlessly set foot upon a worm," but if by doing so I could save my child from death or disease, or even some other woman's child, I would not hesitate one moment, even though some good but very ignorant friend should feel called upon to call me "worse than murderer." LUCY N. COLMAN.

The Virgin Mary.

From The Boston Post.

It was left for a Boston Protestant preacher, Rev. Minot J. Savage, to say that "the Virgin Mary was a stigma on motherhood." The nations and creeds of the earth, even the Mahometans and Buddhists, hav united in respect for the exalted type of womanhood represented by the blessed virgin. Protestants hav awarded to her the credit due to Christianity for the social elevation of woman. And now comes a Boston preacher seeking for sensation, who is not content with uttering the customary filth against the purity of the papacy and priesthood, which is the stock in trade of his class, but who proceeds with the audacity of a clerical Barnum to befoul the most sacredly beautiful element in the Christian ideal. For shame!—Boston Pilot.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE Boston Post: A friend handed me the above slip, cut from your paper. I am always ready courteously to discuss opinions or arguments, but do not often turn aside to listen to one who merely calls me names. If, therefore, this had remained in the columns of the Pilot, I should hav taken no notice of it. But as you hav thought it worth while to giv it the currency of your circulation, I trust you will grant me the space for a brief reply.

1. That I hav ever sought after "sensation" is news to me, and will be, I think, to any one of my regular hearers.

2. As to the "customary filth against the purity of the papacy and priesthood," Mr. O'Reilly confesses (by calling it customary) that I am not altogether alone in my opinion. As to the fact concerning the ages to which I was alluding, I am quite willing to leave the matter to the decision of any undoctored history.

3. Now for the "head and front of my offending." I did say, "The Virgin Mary herself is a stigma upon all motherhood, holding aloft an ideal that mothers can never attain, and making them feel that they liv a lower, more common life, while they prostrate themselvs before her image as in the presence of an unattainable ideal."

Not only did I say it, but I am quite ready to abide by the consequences of my opinion. Mr. O'Reilly is welcome to all the comfort he can get from "the Mahometans and Buddhists," for I also said that nearly all the religions of oriental origin had always attached a special sanctity to the celibate life, and I gave at length the origin of those anti-human ideas.

On the Pilot's theory, God has enthroned virginity in the very heavens, as the type of a special and peculiar sanctity. If so, then ordinary motherhood is thereby relegated to a lower plane, and has attached to it the taint of necessary inferiority.

The Old Testament (Lev. xii, 2) treated all mothers as "unclean" and needing "purification," simply on account of the sacred fact of motherhood. Even the "Virgin" Mary had to be purified. See Luke ii, 22. And every student knows that the early Christians regarded marriage as only a concession to man's fallen and imperfect nature. That is, they thought that, had it not been for "the fall," no such unclean thing as wedded love would ever hav been known. And every student knows that it was out of such unnatural and prurient fancies that the doctrin of all the virgin mothers (Mary included) was born.

Any doctrin, then, that elevates virginity above motherhood as being something relativly inferior and impure does most certainly stigmatize all motherhood. Marriage and woman both will take their true places in the respect of the world only when wedded motherhood is elevated to the ideal position so long occupied by the outcome of a baseless tradition and a prurient fancy. M. J. SAVAGE.

Land Limitation Law.

From The Shaker Manifesto.

Land limitation is the one thing needful in these United States. The man, woman, or paper that will begin an agitation upon this subject and pursue it to a successful issue will become as immortal as John Brown, whose soul is marching on toward the emancipation of wages, slavery, hirelings, which is much deeper seated and far more universal than chattel slavery ever was on this planet.

Vested rights may not be touched. What, then, can be done? Where there is a will there is a way. Let land limitation be prospectiv. From Jan. 1, 1884, no citizen of these United States, male or female, shall buy and become possessed of more than 160 acres of land. So fast as present landlords die, their estates shall pass to landless heirs, 160 acres each; the overplus shall go into the market and be sold within one year, each heir receiving equal share of the proceeds. The operation of such a law would be like the dew of Mt. Hermon, the people would be continually refreshed thereby. Death would be a joyful messenger in the land. Let the funeral of a land monopolist become a festiv occasion. But if death claimed a land monopolist who had voluntarily sold or given away the legal overplus of his estate, let the mourners honor him or her by erecting some cheap but enduring memorial, such as planting a particular kind of tree in a section of the burial ground set apart by each town as a memorial ground wherein none other should hav the honor to be interred. How long would land monopolists run the risk of having the bells rung, the cannon fired, and bonfires lighted at their exit from the scenes of their unpatriotic earthly labors?

I think there is far more latent good in the hearts of evil-doers than philanthropists giv them credit for. Witness the fact that some of the most efficient abolitionists were from the ranks of slave-holders, and that the civil war itself was largely sustained by the self-sacrificing capitalists to whose misdirected financial abilities it owed its origin. "The foundations of the earth are out of course." The system of government may be largely improved. It can come only gradually.

The blessings flowing from a land limitation law require an abler pen and more vivid imagination than mine to properly depict. In every town in each county of New York state would begin a new life. Young men and women now looking westward for a homestead in which to build up a family would begin to lay by a little capital, to wait and watch the annual land market to secure the coveted prize. Farms would multiply, dwelling-houses with their accessories be built, schools be better supplied with children, and far better supported than at present, and public schools would soon become industrial schools, where economy, industry, and health would be among the subjects of education. Roads, lecture halls, and meeting-houses would be within easy reach of the people of a densely populated town, and the products of each district would be largely consumed by the producers in their neighborhood.

When so much good and no possible evil would flow from the land limitation law, why may we not hav it without unnecessary delay, to the end that there be neither rich nor poor left in the land?

Maryland Intolerance.

Another instance of petty persecution by Christians occurred in Baltimore recently. Two young Jews were working on Sunday in a back room of their tailoring establishment. The front door was closed and locked. Two policemen were searching the neighboring premises for a nuisance that some one had complained of, and, hearing the machines whirring, broke open the door and arrested both workers.

While the church accomplished nothing by these arbitrary and unwarranted arrests, the district attorney refusing to prosecute and the court discharging the men, they hav served to bring up the Sunday question in Maryland, and led to a study of the laws upon the subject.

In 1649 Maryland passed a legislativ act in favor of religious toleration. For this, while she was a Catholic colony, the church has claimed great credit. But the honor dwindles into insignificance upon learning that the toleration was limited to trinitarian Christians, and that Jews and Infidels had no rights the Christians were bound to respect. The declaration of rights, 1776, article 34, granted religious liberty only to those professing the Christian religion, and it was not until 1824 that all disabilities were removed. Whilst the Constitution of 1850 recognized the Christian religion, neither Jew nor Christian is recognized in the declaration of rights of 1867, nor is any mention made of the Christian religion. The declaration of rights (article 36) now provides "that it is the duty of every man to worship God in such manner as he thinks most acceptable to him, and that all persons are equally entitled to protection in their religious liberty, and no person shall be molested in his person or estate on account of his religious profession or for his religious practice, unless under the color of religion he shall disturb the good order, peace, or safety of the state or infringe the laws of morality."

The enforcement of Sunday observance upon Jews and Seventh Day Baptists is, therefore, a violation of the above declaration. Having observed the r own peculiar day, they ought to be allowed to labor on all other days, if they choose to do so. Superstitions are almost as numberless as men, and in a free country one superstition should not be regarded above another. And there would be no trouble did not the most powerful sect persecute the weaker one.

The man with no superstitious reverence for a particular day, is, however, unprotected by statute. For him there is no majesty of the law, no equity, no justice. Less than one hundred and fifty years ago, Ingersoll says, the following law was in force in Maryland. And the strange thing about it, he adds, is that it was never repealed, and is in force in the District of Columbia to-day:

"Be it enacted by the Right Honorable, the Lord Proprietor, by and with the advice and consent of his Lordship's governor, and the upper and lower houses of the assembly, and the authority of the same:

"That if any person shall, hereafter, within this province, wittingly, maliciously, and advisedly, by writing or speaking, blaspheme or curse God, or deny our savior, Jesus Christ, to be the son of God, or shall deny the holy trinity, the father, son, and holy ghost, or the godhead of any of the three persons, or the unity of the godhead, or shall utter any profane words concerning the holy trinity, or any of the persons thereof, and shall thereof be convict by verdict, shall, for the first offense, be bored through the tongue, and fined twenty pounds to be levied off his body. And for the second offense, the offender shall be stigmatized by burning in the forehead with the letter B, and fined forty pounds. And that for the third offense, the offender shall suffer death without the benefit of clergy."

A state that can keep such a law as that upon its statute books will not be apt to get sick at the stomach over punishing a couple of Hebrews for working on Sunday.

Defeated but Not Discouraged.

The legislature of Iowa has adjourned without passing the bill taxing church property. In the lower house the bill, which had passed the Senate, was met by such a storm of remonstrances that it was referred to a committee, who reported that it be voted upon for indefinit postponement, which was done, not a solitary member opposing such action.

In the Massachusetts House of Representativs, also, has been defeated by a vote of sixty-two to seventy-five the bill providing that disbelief in God shall not affect the credibility of a witness. Some of the phrases of the Christians opposing the bill are worth noticing. Mr. Kendrick, of Springfield, said that "so long as this is a Christian state, and the vast majority do believe in a God, it is not right to allow the testimony of those who do not so believe to hav as much weight as those who believe in the pains and penalties of perjury." Mr. O'Sullivan, of Lawrence, "in the name of Christianity, protested against the bill." Others of the Representativs took a view of the matter more in accord with justice and right. Mr. Wilson, of Salem, defended the bill, setting forth that it was in the interest of sincerity and honesty; that educated Agnostics were among the most honest and moral people in the world, and among the most reliable as witnesses. Mr. Millett, of Malden, and Mr. Bracket, of Boston, spoke in favor of the bill, pointing out the absurdity of allowing men of undoubted rectitude of character to be liable to attack on account of their disbelief in deity.

When men are full of Christianity—love of God and hatred of men—it seems impossible to get them to do justice. The Massachusetts bill was defeated by puritan bigotry; the Iowa bill, by the fear of the politicians that its passage would lose them the church vote. The remedy in Massachusetts is missionaries in the shape of Freethought books, papers, and lectures that shall educate the Christians out of their narrow-mindedness. In Iowa the Liberals should make the recreant representativs aware that Freethinkers hav votes. Every member of the lower house should be defeated if he again runs for the office, and he should be told why he is defeated and by whom. We believe there are Freethinkers enough in Iowa to do it if they will band together. Fifty men in a district will often change the result of an election. We hav been informed that some of the representativs are Freethinkers, but if they care no more for their principles than to sit still and see a bill remedying in some manner the injustice perpetrated upon Freethinkers, go by default, they deserve to be politically snowed under—every one of them. Not much can probably be done with the Democrats, for the Catholic church is the most powerful factor in that body and can put its votes in a solid mass just where it pleases, but upon the Republicans very effectiv damage can be inflicted, and ought to be.

Until that measure or its equivalent is passed by the Iowa legislature the voting Liberals of the state should hav long memories, and especially troublesome to traitors to our republican institutions.

Religious Test of Jurors.

Mr. Richard Busteed, one of the lawyers defending the negro Rugg on trial at Long Island City for murder, is reported to hav had a list of thirty-seven questions which he put to each of the men summoned on the panel of jurors. One of these questions is as follows:

"Do you believe in a future state of rewards and punishments, and do you also believe that if you answer any question put to you on the present challenge untruthfully you will be punished for that falsehood in a future state of being?"

"Among the qualifications prescribed for jurors by the laws of this state," comments the Herald, "we do not find any warrant for the religious test implied in the above question. Belief in a supreme being or a future state is not required by the law in the lawyer who defends an accused murderer, in any witness who testifies for or against him, or in the judge who may pass sentence of death upon him. Such belief does not appear to be any more essential to a competent juror. Formerly a statute of this state required that every person to be a competent witness should believe in the existence of a supreme being who will punish false swearing. This religious test was abolished by the constitution of 1846, which declared that no person shall be rendered incompetent to be a witness on account of his opinions on matters of religious belief. This provision still exists in the constitution. The Supreme Court has decided that 'it makes all persons competent witnesses, whether they be Infidels or Atheists or believe they are like the beasts that perish.' The constitution allows all officers of the state from the governor down to make either oath or affirmation on entering office, and the form prescribed does not involve an appeal to God. By what authority, then, is a juror catechised as to his religious belief or want of it?"

The Herald has done a virtuous action in calling attention to this case. But it raises, if the statement of facts be so, a question as to the competency of those judges who hav decided that Atheists cannot be allowed to testify. A few years ago Joseph Treat was a witness in a law-suit against the Woodhull women. Knowing him to be an Atheist, Mrs. V. Woodhull instigated her lawyer to raise an objection to his testimony on that ground. The judge sustained the objection and debarred Mr. Treat from testifying. If we remember rightly, Mrs. Woodhull won the suit because without Mr. Treat's evidence the plaintiff could not complete his case.

Clearly an injustice was perpetrated against Mr. Treat by the judge, and also against the plaintiff, for which some one is entitled to recover damages. The parties are now scattered, the plaintiff we know not where, Mrs. Woodhull is in England, and Mr. Treat is in his grave. Since then, however, several similar cases hav occurred in the courts of this state. Surely some one ought to be liable for exemplary damages.

Saving the Missionary System of Christianity.

The Catholics held a meeting at Cooper Institute in this city last Monday night to further protest against the sale of the Propaganda property in Rome by the Italian government. Mayor Edson presided, ex-Mayor Grace was present, as also were ex-Postmaster-General T. L. James, Recorder Smith, Eugene Kelly, and many other prominent men. Letters of sympathy were read from Senator Kernan, Congressmen S. S. Cox, Frank Hurd, and Perry Belmont. Preambles and resolutions were read reciting:

"That the Italian government is seeking, not only to ruinously affect the Propaganda by reducing the nominal value of its property by more than one-third, and placing entirely at its mercy all that great department or bureau of the papal administration, but it is an attack upon the liberty of the pope in the exercise of the functions of his office, upon the Christian religion, and the highest and noblest interests of civilization.

"That we solemnly protest against the conversion and confiscation by the Italian government of the property of the Propaganda, as contributors to and cestuis que trust in which we hav not only religious but property interest, and deny the right of that government to deprive us by confiscation of one-third of its proceeds, or by force to change its condition."

Thanks were voted to President Arthur, Secretary Frelinghuysen, and Minister Astor for their successful intervention, and President Arthur was requested to transmit a copy of the resolutions to the Italian government.

Ex-Postmaster-General James said:

"The proposed confiscation is robbery and usurpation under forms of law, and a blow that is aimed at the missionary system of Christianity. American citizens who love liberty, justice, and equal rights would fail of their duty did they fail to utter condemnation of this act, which disregards constitutional liberty. The Italian government, in its attacks upon the Propaganda, has committed an act as much to be condemned as would be the seizure by our government of the property of Trinity Church, of Columbia College, of the American Bible Society, or the Union Theological Seminary. I reply to the question as to how this affair in Rome comes to be any part of our business, that liberty is our business the world over; that if Italy persists we propose to hold that kingdom up to the execration of mankind."

Will the supporters of the Catholic church show the clause in the Constitution empowering our government to take the steps it has been induced to by these enemies of the republic? What statute is authority for interfering in a religious question, which these people desire to make this? When appealed to in the Tripoli matter, George Washington declared that this government is not in any sense founded on the Christian religion. What precedent can these Catholic coadjutors refer to to justify the United States government in warding off a "blow aimed at the missionary system of Christianity?" What tradition, even, constitutes our president guardian of religious property in Italy? We would like to hav the New York Sun, which has made a fool of itself in this matter, answer these queries.

If Trinity church property were all untaxed, with all that the directors might acquire from its untaxed rentals, our government would be obliged to tax it to protect our citizens. With as much propriety might Italy interfere to prevent taxing any of Trinity's rum-shops and bawdy houses.

This whole business is a miserable pandering to Christian power—another crime committed in the name of liberty.

Eclipse of the Sun's Brightness.

The Sun of this city neglects no opportunity of reminding the public that Ingersoll was the successful defender of Dorsey in the Star route cases. Because Mr. Dana believes Mr. Dorsey guilty, he presumes to denounce Col. Ingersoll for defending him in no measured terms.

A short time ago Sheriff Davidson, of this county, was charged with maladministration of his office. His alleged crimes were exactly similar to that which the Sun says Dorsey committed. Like Dorsey, Davidson was acquitted. Mr. Choate defended the sheriff. The morning after the jury rendered its verdict the Sun lauded Choate highly because he had defended a man whom popular clamor had already convicted. Every man, proclaimed Mr. Dana, is presumed to be innocent till a jury of his peers finds otherwise, and he is a noble lawyer indeed who will risk his reputation to defend a man public sentiment regards as guilty.

It makes considerable difference with some people whether the gored animal is an Atheistical Republican ox or a Christian Democratic beast. Consistency, however, still remains the same priceless jewel.

Christian Abuse of Spiritualists.

Without question Mr. Talmage may be allowed to be a doubter of Spiritualistic phenomena, but when he descends to calumniation of this sort the scorn and contempt of the decent portion of mankind should be visited upon him. Last Sunday forenoon he said:

"Spiritualism ruins the physical health and is a marital and social curse. Orgies of obscenity hav taken place under its wing. Women by hundreds hav been pushed off into a life of profligacy. If Spiritualism had full swing it would turn this world into a pandemonium of carnality. It is an unclean and adulterous religion, and the sooner it goes down to the pit from which it came up the better for humanity. Spiritualism produces insanity all over the land. If you put your hand in the hand of this influence it will lead you down to hell, where there is an everlasting seance. Spiritualism ruins the soul and makes men Infidels."

Mr. Talmage is known as the most reckless, mendacious, and dishonest pulpiteer of our times, but he never crowded more bitter and malignant untruths into a few sentences than in the above. Some Spiritualist Ingersoll should take him in hand.

Editorial Notes.

ONE of the questions scorching the hearts of the political editors of this city just now is whether "Brother Blaine" soured on "Brother Bob," or vice versa. When the truth comes out it will probably be found to hav been vice versa.

A LIBERAL Normal School is being built at Liberal, Mo. The edifice is rapidly approaching completion, and the only requisit to success is scholars. We know no reason why the school should not be a good one, deserving the patronage of every parent of growing children. The principal is Prof. W. E. Grayston, to whom application should be made for information relativ to studies, rates of tuition, boarding, etc.

THE 141st anniversary of the birth of Thomas Jefferson was celebrated at Newark on the 13th ult. by a dinner at which about three hundred gentlemen were present. Letters of regret were read from ex-Governor Hendricks and Senator Morgan of Alabama, and Representativ Eaton, of Connecticut. S. J. Tilden telegraphed as follows: "Concurring cordially in your wish to render the grateful homage of 55,000,000 of people to the illustrious political philosopher and the exemplar of administrativ reform, Thomas Jefferson, I regret that I can not possibly be present at your festival this evening."

THE Philosophic Inquirer, of Madras, India, whose genial editor was one of the good friends Mr. Bennett made on his famous journey, in its March issue condenses THE TRUTH SEEKER's report of the proceedings at the Bennett anniversary meeting in this city last December, and comments on the fact which one of the speakers developed, that Mr. Bennett was a Spiritualist. "The news that Mr. Bennett was a Spiritualist," says the Inquirer, "because of his belief in spirits so properly defined above, is indeed quite startling to us; but, while respecting the words of a public journalist, who held intimate friendly relationship with the departed hero of the anniversary day, we do not scruple to pronounce that Mr. Bennett's philosophical position is more logical, and, notwithstanding his declared belief in a future state of existence, Mr. Bennett to our thinking would hav been more consistent if he had fittingly declared himself to be a refined Materialist of Madame Blavatsky s type, the plea as might whatever be, that there is no midway between Western Materialism and Spiritualism, or that there is no middle term between Spiritualism and the dogmatic Materialism of the day." In his zeal our Eastern friend gets his language a little mixed, and his meaning is sometimes difficult to fathom. If Madame Blavatsky is not a Spiritualist we must get a new dictionary.

A CORRESPONDENT sends us the following yarn from the Kansas Herald, which paper credits it to "Carrollton (Ky.) Special," and asks us to comment on it:

"Dean Chapel is one mile from Worthville, Ky., on the Kentucky River. During the recent flood it was about half under water. After the waters had withdrawn pictures of Bible events began to appear on the four walls. From corner to corner there were representations of familiar scenes and personages of sacred history. These were clearly and beautifully outlined, some of them resembling steel engravings. The crucifixion covered a space two by three feet, and was certainly marvelous in its bold and perfect features. Two cities of destruction occupied the half of one wall. Gethsemane and the twelve apostles filled another half. There were animals of every description, and a portrayal of Noah's ark. It would be difficult to mention any important event related in holy scriptures that was not depicted on the chapel walls. Visitors came from distant homes to see these pictures, and by some they are regarded as miracles. Last Sunday, the 9th, the chapel was used for the first time since the flood. It was well heated, and gradually the pictures disappeared. At noon the walls became black, and not an outline could be traced. There has been a revival of unusual interest in the neighborhood at Dean Chapel; about forty conversions and twelve sanctifications. Last Sunday morning the worshipers who came out to join in the service and hear the Rev. Mr. Hubert were greatly moved, and filled the courts of God with 'sounding praise.' The entire community is wrought up as never before, and wide spreads the news of what God has done."

As there is no paper called the Special published at Carrollton, this account must be a special despatch, made by some sensation-seeking correspondent—perhaps by the reverend himself. The only comment we hav to make is that it is undoubtedly a lie.

To Correspondents.

CAPT. A. M. ENOCH.—M. E. Billings's address is Waverly, Iowa.

B. D. EVANS, M.D.—See page 66 of THE TRUTH SEEKER ANNUAL for evidence to prove the paragraph untrue.

K. KORTGAIRD.—The pope fights secret societies because membership in them has a tendency to weaken his authority. He charges them with being godless, because that in the minds of his followers is the mortal sin. But so far as our information goes the Freemasons are a pious body. At least, men hav been expelled and refused admission for Atheism. But we are acquainted with some Atheists who are Masons. It is probable, however, that they became Atheists since joining. Being a member of no secret society, and therefore unacquainted with the benefits conferred, we are not competent to advise as to which is the best, if any, for you to join.

WM. M. KENNEDY.—The early Christians were a communistic, ascetic sect. They were regarded by the Romans as harmless lunatics. They gradually gained in numbers, and when Constantine adopted Christianity he but piled pagan ceremonies on crazy asceticism—the result was Catholicism, which gradually grew to be the enormous power it was in the Middle Ages, up to Luther's time, since when it has gradually waned in western Europe. Recently it has begun to spread with startling rapidity in this country, especially in the Eastern states. The Waldenses are a Protestant sect in the Piedmont valley, Italy. They are also called Vallenses or Valdenses, from vallis, valley; and Vaudois, "men of the valley." For six hundred years they hav claimed descent from a race which they say peopled the same valley and professed the same faith in the first centuries of the Christian era. This claim was once generally allowed by Protestant historians, but is no longer tenable, and is not made except by the unread portion of Protestantism. The name Waldenses first occurs in 1194 in an edict of the king of Aragon. They hav survived thirty-three persecutions by the Catholics, some of them among the bloodiest of history. Roswell D. Hitchcock finds three distinct periods in the existence of the Waldenses: 1. When they differed but very little from Roman Catholics except in regard to purity of life and the use of scripture; 2. When they denounced Rome as Babylon and the pope as Antichrist; 3. Since their reformation in doctrin, which, beginning in a revolt against Catholic corruption, obscenity, and bestiality, has ended in an acceptance of Presbyterianism. Mr. Hitchcock, who is a D.D. and LL.D. and a noted writer of Protestant church history, denies the claim of antiquity made by and for the Waldenses. They did not exist before the twelfth century, and therefore did not "keep alive Christianity from Christ to Luther." The descendants of the early Christians are the Catholics. The Waldenses never were in the mountains of Asia, and your good friend the postmaster is laboring under an error. He will hav to try again before he can show an unbroken successsion of Protestants, or even Catholics, "from Christ to Luther."

H. W. GILBERT.—We hav no politics—nary a one. We used to be Republican, and voted for Hayes—the only thing, Ingersoll once said, for which he felt the need of the atonement. The Republican party, however, is allied to the Methodist church and is corrupt as the government of Russia. The Democrats do not steal quite as much, because their opportunities are limited. In this state the Democratic party is controled by Tammany Hall, Tammany Hall by Jonn Kelly. John Kelly by his uncle-in-law, Cardinal McCloskey, the cardinal by the pope, and the pope, the Protestants say, by the devil. We shall not insist on the last, but the rest we know to be true. Our sympathies are with Antimonopolists, and we once helped elect a member of the New York Assembly on that issue, but when he got to Albany he was, a lobbyist said. the cheapest member of the lower house, and when John Kelly joined the party and it was found that Thurber was crying against the railroads for the sole reason that because he had offended the officers of the leading roads they had discriminated against him on the freights of his monopolizing grocery house, we quit voting. Some people of this city whom we respect highly—among them John Swinton, who says he is a blue Presbyterian. Charles Wingate, a Freethinker on the quiet, and others varying in religious belief between the two—hav organized a Liberty Party. Mr. Wakeman thinks the Liberals should join this party, and take the League with them, but we fail to agree with him. In our opinion the League has already taken on too much. Some of Mr. Swinton's theories are dangerous experiments to make in the present condition of society, which is so largely Christianized as to be inclined to tyranny. At the present we are content to be a political party of one, ever on the lookout for the interests of Liberalism, and using all the means at command to further them. We hav answered your letter publicly, because of several other inquiries of the same tendency. If the need should arise. or the circulars could be used to help Freethinkers obtain their equality before the law, we will comply with your suggestion.

H. J. M.—The Christian statement that "if the Bible is true, and I believe it all, I will hav everything to gain and nothing to lose," is termed the ad utrumque paratus argument, that is, prepared for either event. But a very little examination shows its fallaciousness. There are many other bibles just as authoritativ as the Jewish Bible, and believed in by many times more people; therefore in order to be absolutely safe the believer must swallow them all. Of course it does no good to believe in the wrong religion; the practical question, therefore, is, Which is the right one? If to decide this the age of a faith be taken into account. Christianity is not true; if we count practical works, again Christianity is left; if the decision is arrived at by taking a census, Christianity is in a hopeless minority. If Christianity were the only religion in the world, this "argument" might possess some merit as a repartee, but as it is, it is wholly without force, for it requires a man to believe all religions, with all their absurdities and nonsense; and the more horrible they are the more necessity for believing them in order to be safe from their terrors. The Bible tells us that the very devils themselvs believe, but what Christian will assure us that the devils are safe? To be absolutely certain that he is safe, the Christian must put faith in the Koran, the Shasta, and all other so-called sacred books and deities; and then he might be wrong, for some religion which he could not possibly hear of might be the true one. To be "safe," a Christian has to sacrifice his reason, renounce experience, mistrust his own senses, and submit to what priests tell him about heaven, without a thought as to its truth or falsity. The other Christian "reply"—"If you take away the Bible, what will you giv us instead?"—is nonsense, because no sane person wants to believe a falsehood. It is not necessary in curing a man of a delirious fever to substitute the smallpox. There is truth enough in the world to fill all the niches of the mind without using the rotten thoughts of superstition. But Freethought does offer a glorious substitute, and that is the religion of humanity. For the worship of a God who can neither be helped nor harmed by man's endeavors, we urge a devotion to the well-being, well-doing, and well-living of the human race. Instead of seeking an impossible heaven in the skies, we should seek to realize a possible heaven on the earth. Instead of dreading hell, men should only dread wrong actions. In place of worshiping Christs and saints and virgins, our adoration should be shown by imitation of those heroes who hav contributed to the amelioration of the world's hardships, and to the advancement of the world's knowledge. In the words of the illustrious founder of THE TRUTH SEEKER, "Here is our duty, here is our allegiance, and not in the sky above us. We must make our heaven on the earth, and not in the air."

Literature.

BROWNE'S PHONOGRAPHIC MONTHLY, speaking of "A Roman Catholic Canard," published at this office, discourses mysteriously as follows:

"This is another document in the direction of a vigorous and aggressiv belief or non-belief. It is hard to tell whether what a man don't believe is a belief or not. That is about the way the truth is sought by THE TRUTH SEEKER, and whether he believes what he don't believe or not we don't know, but his profession is the profession of doubt. A little doubt is a good thing; too much doubt now and then is altogether too doubtful. Dudes don't like it. Wise people would rather not doubt. Good people never doubt, and doubting people hav no doubt, and that is about as much truth as we hav been able to obtain by this peculiar search after the peculiar. The pamphlet may help some to get a clearer insight into something that they don't know anything about; if it does we would be obliged if they will let us know about it."

Neighbor Browne deals mainly in shorthand, and his system is so near perfect that the element of doubt has been eliminated. This accounts for the exceptionally placid state of his mind. Nevertheless he believes no more than he doubts and is fooling away the hour of grace making pothooks. He will never get to heaven, but we hav faith to believe that if he ever finds himself in hades he will be given the best accommodation the place affords.

Letters from Friends.

NESHANIC, N. J., April 20, 1884.

MR. EDITOR: I hav got one more subscriber for you paper for three months. He is a deputy sheriff of this county. I was called as a witness before the county court, and was objected to on account of my religious belief, as I refused to kiss the Bible. I argued the point, and was allowed to affirm. So a little free advertising for the cause has been done. As there is not a paper published here that will giv me a chance, I agreed to hav the account published in THE TRUTH SEEKER, and send a few copies to be handed around.

Respectfully, A. L. GARDNER.

WAYNESBURG, PA., April 8, 1884.

MR. EDITOR: I see that Robert G. Ingersoll, with his characteristic strength and candor, has hurled another bombshell into the Christian camp—one that can but awaken a great many from their long sleep of ignorance. How I wish we had more "Bobs" and more such lectures! I know of no better way to bring this lecture to the notice of those who would otherwise never see it, and also introduce to them one of the best papers published, than by having you send THE TRUTH SEEKER of April 5th to some of my friends. Inclosed are names of those to whom I wish it sent. Send the papers, and send me a bill of the amount. H. CLAY LUSE.

CUYAHOGA FALLS, OHIO, April 15, 1884.

MR. EDITOR: I read in the Sociologist of your FREETHINKER'S ALMANAC. Inclosed find 25 cents for a copy. There is much said about Freethought. The word "free" is much talked of, and little understood. Men say they are free to do this, and leave that undone, not knowing they are under the control of circumstances during life, no matter how old they may be, or what faith they are subject to. I am an old man, yet hav to use my reasoning faculty as much as and more than in early life. The young folks claim that their will is certainly free for use, and they are the monarch—if not, why not? Are we not ourselvs responsible? so say our courts and judges. Hence it must be true, settled beyond dispute. WM. WILLS.

CORTLAND, O., April 21, 1884.

MR. EDITOR: Inclosed find order for 50 cents, 25 cents of it for "Crimes of Preachers," by M. E. Billings; and 25 cents for TRUTH SEEKER ANNUAL. When I first took your paper, about eighteen months ago, my wife would not look at it or let me read it to her. Now it is just the reverse; if she has no time to read it she is continually asking me to read it to her. She thinks, "Waifs and Wanderings" is just splendid; in fact, we both think we can't get along without THE TRUTH SEEKER. I love to read your letters from friends; it givs me great comfort to know we are not alone to fight this battle for freedom. Some of my neighbors are as anxious to read my paper as I am. They say it is a good paper, but hav not the wherewith to pay for it. In lending your paper I sometimes strike a thorough-bred Christian, and then we hav an argument; and then comes the fun, as by reading your paper, I can stand a pretty good racket, and I giv them the facts for what they are worth. At the same time I feel as if I were doing my duty. Wishing you success,

I am yours for universal mental liberty, J. D. WHEELER.

MONMOUTH, ILL., March 31, 1884.

MR. EDITOR: The tab on my paper has long admonished me that my subscription is over due, and that I am now indebted for its weekly visits to your kind indulgence, for which please accept my thanks. Inclosed find $3. When this subscription has expired, I hope to send in advance. Should I not be able at that time to do so, I will as soon thereafter as possible. No paper receives a heartier welcome, and none is read with more interest. Its fair, impartial presentation, and candid treatment of all subjects pertaining to the advancement of humanity and its varied interests, ought to commend it to all Liberal minded men and women everywhere, and certainly the subjects discussed in its columns are among the most important that can engage the attention or enlist the sympathies of those who wish well to their race, and desire its emancipation from the thraldom of superstition, bigotry, and the countless obstacles that impede the path of progress, causing this, the only world of which we know anything, to be for thousands a "vale of tears," instead of the glad, bright paradise it otherwise might be. RICHARD T. WATSON.

CASSETA, GA., April 11, 1884.

MR. EDITOR: Please enroll my name as a small stockholder in the Bennett monument. I deem it a great privilege to take stock in a monument erected to the grand old hero.

Orthodoxy is at a low ebb in this country, as you will see from this appeal I send you—it is from the circuit rider in this district. The Christians hav just turned out a man and his wife for heresy—the best paying members they had in the church. Churches in this country generally hav about two or three male members, and ten or a dozen women, often not more than one male, and he can't write. I also send you what they say about one of their best preachers.

Since writing the above, I attended one of the exhibitions of Miss Lulu Hurst, a plain, simple girl about seventeen. I went upon the platform with her. She could lay one hand on the back of a chair and it would fly over her head. I sat on the chair. She would just touch the back and it would throw me two or three steps every time. I had a cane in my hand; she laid one hand on it and lifted me off the floor. Two of the strongest men in the audience could not hold the chair down when it was on the floor, nor put it on the floor when it was up if she had her hands touching it. I understand she is an old-fashioned Baptist and knows nothing about Spiritualism. One man can't hold anything if she keeps her hands on it. She never grasps the object, but simply lays her hands lightly against it. What do you call it?

W. F. MALDEN.

LA CROSSE, WIS., April 23, 1884.

MR. EDITOR: I hope you will giv a little space for the following lines, as I think they might be interesting to some of THE TRUTH SEEKER readers, and at the same time be a good nut for the Christians to crack.

A NUT FOR THE CHRISTIANS TO CRACK.

If God a perfect being is,
How did he form the plan
To spoil with evil his own work,
And make imperfect man?

If God did perfect make the man,
Who made his imperfection?
For man could no more make the thing,
Than make the whole creation.

If God imperfect made the man,
Made him a sinful creature;
Where is the justice of his plan
To damn him for his nature?

Your well wisher, J. PETTEY.

WAYLAND, MICH., April 13, 1884.

MR. EDITOR: I am not a subscriber to THE TRUTH SEEKER, but hav been a constant reader of it for some time. I was pleased to read, in the editorial notes of March 29th, a recommendation to patronage of F. E. Sturgis, artist, of Upper Sandusky, Ohio, which I can fully indorse from a personal knowledge of his merits. He is a stanch Liberal, and has been for years, but adverse circumstances and poor health hav to a great extent crippled his usefulness. Now I would suggest that all good Liberals in affluence, who hav seen and admired his portrait of Mr. Bennett, send a dollar each out of their abundance, and make his heart glad by a present that will help him to some of the comforts of life. The first of May will be his thirty-first birthday. Why not make him a birthday gift? I will head the list by sending a dollar, and I am sure it will be gratefully remembered long after the donor's hav forgotten it. I will say that he is in entire ignorance of this suggestion, and perhaps would not approve of it; but I feel that the needy hav claims upon us which we ought not to disregard, and no doubt if the departed Hero could speak he would say, "Be ye Liberals in all things." S. A. STEWART.

BURTON, TEXAS, April 13, 1884.

MR. EDITOR: I send you herein twenty-five cents for the TRUTH SEEKER ANNUAL. Please send me the two numbers of THE TRUTH SEEKER preceding April 5th; my last week's copy is also minus. I will be obliged indeed if you will furnish the copies missing, as I am keeping every one, with view of having them bound, which will prove as interesting as ever to re-read over again and again, quite unlike the majority of literature. I am taking quite a number of Liberal and other papers, more indeed than I shall hav time this year to read, and thought of dropping some of them when the time of subscription expired; but the experience of missing those copies has taught me how inconvenient it would be to dispense with THE TRUTH SEEKER, which like good liquor seems to improve with age. That the paper is much better than at any time since my acquaintance with it, cannot be denied. It is richly worth the sum you ask for it. If you send me those missing numbers I will try to distribute them where most likely to do you and the cause the most good, should the others turn up. Please also send another copy of the number containing Ingersoll's lecture for a friend. H. B. JONES.

GRAND RAPIDS, MICH., April 19, 1884.

MR. EDITOR: Inclosed please find $3.00, my subscription for one year. Also please send me a copy of THE TRUTH SEEKER containing Brother Ingersoll's great lecture. I loaned mine to an "orthodox" to read, who in his religious zeal destroyed it, lest it might be the means of opening the eyes of some benighted wretch like him. However, the good work is going on, and orthodoxy is fast losing its hold in our beautiful city.

The Rev. Mr. Powers, a fast friend of the great champion, Ingersoll, is doing a good work here. His sermon on "Ingersoll or Talmage, Which?" was listened to by about fifteen hundred people, comprising the most intelligent in our city. The orator held his audience spellbound for one hour and a half, and closed with the lines and sayings of the two men, leaving Mr. Ingersoll happy in the thought that the power we call God does all things well, and that amid the vicissitudes of life, when the shadows fall, we can hear the "rustle of a wing."

On the other hand, Mr. Talmage was presumed to be happy too, in the thought that in the hereafter he will hav the uncontrolable bliss of being permitted to lounge upon the battlements of heaven and look down upon a wife, father, mother, son, daughter, sister, or brother, forever damned to eternal pain. S. B. HOFFMAN.

OLYMPIA, WASH. TER., April 9, 1884.

MR. EDITOR: In answer to many inquiries in reference to western Washington territory I will say that we hav a fine climate, plenty of good water, some good land, and a heavy growth of good timber. A strip of country west of the Olympic range, thirty miles wide by eighty miles long, with mild climate, good soil, and heavy timber, consisting mostly of fir, cedar, hemlock, spruce, and cottonwood, is unsurveyed and unsettled. The majority of emigrants on first arrival do not like the country, it being so different from the East. People coming from Michigan, Maine, and Pennsylvania are the best satisfied. Those coming from the prairie states are very much dissatisfied—think it too much work to clear the land; in fact, I would not advise anyone to come here expecting to find well settled neighborhoods, with school-houses and so forth. They will find instead a dense forest, without roads. For the young man with industrious habits, strong arms, and a determination to succeed, this country offers good inducements. I hav been here fourteen months. I came sick, and hav regained my health, weighing twenty pounds more than I ever did before. I like the country well, but would not advise anyone to sell a comfortable home to come here without first visiting the place and seeing for themselvs. LEVI SARGENT.

FRESNO CITY, CAL., April 10, 1884.

MR. EDITOR: Please giv me space in your paper to reply to Mr. C. B. Thompson. He states that intoxicating drinks hav done more evil in the world than orthodox religion. Possibly he is right, as orthodox superstition is limited in the United States. Mr. Thompson speaks of over-population. I hav stated my views on that question for more than fifty years. One thing that I hav asked a great many Christians is, "Do you believe in endless punishment? and if so how can you be the means of bringing children into the world, and so jeopardizing their souls, when there is so slim a chance that more than one in one hundred will escape a burning hell?" And, let me ask, Who is good, pure, perfect, and holy? Who will say, "I am?" If there are any such, let me hear from them.

I hav been reading Col. John R. Kelso's "Deity Analyzed, and the Devil's Defense" and "The Real Blasphemers." There is a great deal of interesting information in these books, furnishing one, as they do, with arguments to refute the dogmas of the Christian superstition. These, with Bennett's "Answers to Christian Questions," every Liberal should read.

GEORGE PADDINGTON.

MCCUNE, KAN., April 5, 1884.

MR. EDITOR: As I told you in my last, I hav been somewhat unsettled in locality, but as I expect to stay here a while you will please send my paper here. I hav been three months without it.

I am getting somewhat rusty out here in Kansas. I find a host of good, out-spoken Liberals, and some of the followers of the meek and lowly, which latter hav got so low that you dare not trust them. If you do they will beat you out of something.

An awful tragedy has taken place in our midst. A minister who has preached loud and labored hard to tell other people how to liv and how to raise their children has at the same time been leaving his own to run wild, with none but a poor weakly wife to look after a family of big boys. They grew up under his prayers and preaching. Not long ago one of those boys of the preacher shot and killed a young man at a district spelling school, all for a very trifling offense, and now the preacher is crazed with grief. He looks pale and thin. They tell me the mother is insane. There is something wrong. This preacher has never known God, or God has not known him. The boy is in jail, awaiting his trial. If he is adjudged guilty and is hung no doubt he will get religion and go from the gallows straight to heaven and join the rest of the murderers that hav gone before.

I am, as ever, determined to strike for the right and universal mental liberty. I think if some good live Liberal speaker would make some appointments in southeast Kansas the people would giv him a hearing. I giv my best wishes to the lovers of truth and I ask you to keep the old TRUTH SEEKER alive as we promised to do when our old hero, Bennett, left it to us. Let us remember his prison life. Let us not forget his worth. Let us liv as he would hav us liv if he were here. Please find inclosed two dollars, and send on my first copy.

Ever yours, M. S. GOWIN.

SUGAR HOUSE, UTAH, April 14, 1884.

MR. EDITOR: Inclosed find $1, for which you will send me four copies of the TRUTH SEEKER ANNUAL AND FREETHINKERS' ALMANAC FOR 1884. Through the kindness of a friend I occasionly read THE TRUTH SEEKER, hence this order for the ANNUAL.

It has been my pleasure to traverse a vast portion of the Yankee domain lying west of the Missouri, where the unearthly yell of the savage was heard from the confines of our country, in the inclement north, to the sunny plains of Mexico; and the huge buffalo roamed in herds of countless thousands from Texas to the Yellowstone; while the wild deer and fleet-footed antelope bounded at will o'er the vast plains, and slaked their thirst from the sparkling waters of every stream from the Rio Grande to British America.

The 26th of this month, it will be eleven years since mine eyes first beheld the far-famed and world-renowned Salt Lake City, "the center stake of Zion," or seat of government for the "kingdom of God on earth," where the superlativly grand and magnificently planned city of the saints is nestled down in the very shadow of the cloud-mantled and silver-lined Wasatch.

Here in this beautiful city, the most favored spot on earth, I first beheld a people among whom contention and strife are unknown. 'Twas here I first saw prophets and apostles. 'Twas here I first heard the "drippings of the sanctuary,' and saw "the living oracles." 'Twas here I first realized the meaning of faith, and mingled with people who pitied me for not believing their leaders could jump over the moon, and leave their pocket-handkerchief on the seven stars as a token of their having been in the immediate vicinity of those distant worlds. It was here also that I first heard that George Washington, of little hatchet notoriety, was a Mormon, though unacquainted with the fact. Here in the valleys of the mountains I learned that "God's chosen people" would sweep down from the forest-clad summits of the mountains of Ephraim, and take possession of every "nation, kindred, tongue, and people," Frank James and George Todd included, and a great deal more; but even here we must sleep, and I will away into dreamland. Fill my inclosed order, and make one heart feel glad. J. N. BARR.

WESTFIELD, N. Y., April 20, 1884.

MR. EDITOR: The question to which all others are secondary is simply this: Are the two conditions in which everything exists, call them God and nature, spirit or force and matter, male or female, or by any name used to designate opposits, distinct entities, the one sovereign, the other subject? or are they positiv and negativ conditions of the same thing, inseparable and convertible? Thus far in the history of the human family belief that they are distinct entities has held full control, and on it the monarchies, monopolies, and aristocracies of Christendom are founded; that it is the last expiring effort of the belief that our little world was the center of the universe, flat and stationary—a belief that has divided mankind into thousands of contending sects and factions, that never solved a problem, but complicates the most simple ones beyond the power of solution; has deluged the world in the blood of its children, and cannot too soon be buried with belief in flat worlds, where it originated. In opposition to the creation theory stands the self-evident fact that cause and effect are inseparable and convertible—all causes effects of of previous causes, all effects causes of future effects, with no beginning or end to either. That worlds derive their existence and sustenance from the elements in which they float, and as a whole are subject to the same laws of production and reproduction as their constituted parts, including the human family, is a fact that cannot much longer be disguised. Our world is following in the wake of the older planets of our solar family. Where we are they hav been, and instead of the man of our planet being the ultimate of organic law, he is simply at the head of animal life, and bears the same relation to the inhabitants of the older planets that lower grades of being on our planet bear to the human family. The same interchanging relation that exists between heat and cold, night and day, summer and winter, exists between the visible animal, whether man, monkey, or mouse, and a, to us, invisible counterpart, and the belief that either does or can exist independent of the other is as false as the belief has ever been destructiv. Whoever should assert that there are exceptions to the rule that twice two are four, or that half four are two, would be thought a lunatic or fool. Why not just as reasonable as the belief that there are exceptions to the law of interchange? Why not the same interchanging relations exist between the visible animals and the so-called spirit world, that exist between the roots and the top of the vegetable, the caterpillar and butterfly, or why not the same necessity for this double condition in one case as the other? If organic law may be taken as evidence, the same law of combination that makes higher numbers from lower ones, makes higher grades of being by combinations of lower ones, substitutes interchanges of sex for incarnation of unchangeable germs. Although it leaves all gods and the supremacy of spirit over matter out in the cold, it bridges the chasm between Materialism and Spiritualism, which nothing else ever will or can.

J. TINNEY.

HARVARD, April 13, 1884.

MR. EDITOR: Inclosed please find $2 50 for THE TRUTH SEEKER, which is a very welcome visitor at my house. I see by the paper that the monument is finished, and I am glad to hear that it is a nice one, for if anyone deserved a monument to his memory it was D. M. Bennett. I never had a personal acquaintance with him but by reputation. He was one of nature's noblemen.

I had the pleasure of attending two of J. E Remsburg's lectures at Capron, Ill. His first lecture was on the "Sunday Laws, Woman's Rights, and the Prohibition;" his second, "False Claims of the Church and Christianity." They were splendid lectures, from the fact that they were composed of undeniable facts, and any church-member knows that it is true that the church has opposed every new invention, and everything that diverged from the old ruts of orthodoxy, and as long as they believe their creed they should act according to their faith and creed. The man that worships an angry God—a God that is angry with his children every day—has a right to imitate his God. Any man that worships a God—I care not what kind of a character he givs him—will fashion his conduct after the character of his God. The teaching of that old Bible has caused more suffering and bloodshed than any other thing on the earth. The Blue laws of Connecticut and Massachusetts were founded directly upon the laws laid down in the Old Testament; and I warn the people of the United States to see that a scheming clergy do not get their God in the Constitution. It seems to me that any man ought to see that the clergy are doing everything they can to get the control of the people. It seems to me that they hav shown their cloven feet enough to open the eyes of the people. They see that they hav lost their hold on the people to a great extent, and they will make a powerful effort to regain their lost ground. The time was once that the people had to take just what the minister handed out, but such is not the case now, and I hope will never be again.

The Mormon question is the biggest nut our clergy hav had to crack for some time—and, in fact, it is a question that our best statesmen do not know what to do with. They dare not admit Utah as a state, with her polygamy. As long as we hold on to the Bible and our present Constitution, Talmage's theory in regard to the Mormon question won't answer; but throw away your Bible, and then you can say, "Stop your polygamous conduct, or by the eternal we will make you."

ABRAM CARMACK.

PORTLAND, OR., April 13, 1884.

MR. EDITOR: Allow me to correct a mistake in your notice of Liberal meetings. Instead of Portland, O.. "American Liberal League" read "Auxiliary Liberal League."

Your paper continues to be the best of all Liberal papers, since I hav seen their sample copies lately. THE TRUTH SEEKER contains 16 pages, of which more than half are filled with literary food such as we very seldom get in the pages of the North American Review or other periodicals. No. 14, of the 5th inst., for example, contains Ingersoll's lecture on four pages, each of which is four times larger than the pages of the North American Review, and as the type is more than twice less, then the same lecture would occupy in the Review about forty pages. Add to this the "Waifs and Wanderings" of S. P. Putnam and other valuable articles in your paper, and I am sure that you could spare every week from fifty to sixty pages and place them in a monthly journal of over 200 pages, or twice thicker than the mentioned Review, which costs $5 per year. The weekly TRUTH SEEKER would stay a journal of eight or ten pages and contain no less reading matter than any other Liberal paper, as the Investigator, Index, etc., for the same price, and as a premium would offer its readers a monthly TRUTH SEEKER say of over one hundred pages. Think of the advantage your readers would hav in obtaining twelve valuable books each year, binding them, and building a home library.

Judging by myself, I may conclude that each subscriber of any Liberal paper givs it each time to some poor Liberal friend or some rich religious friend, and if not lost in passing so many hands it at least loses its shape and form and is of no value to be placed in a case of a nicely furnished room. Not so with a monthly journal in book form. The over cost of printing and mailing two journals I am sure could be gained by obtaining perhaps four times as many subscribers. Not only outspoken Infidels but members of the church and ministers even of more or less reformed churches would subscribe for the monthly TRUTH SEEKER. The principal thing is to offer it cheap.

If you consider this worth publishing, please append your opinion, and, if it doesn't coincide with mine, your objections.

M. S. WAHRHAFTIG.

[The plan of Mr. Wahrhaftig is one often entertained, but abandoned because of expense and the uncertainty of success. We hav not the capital necessary to make experiments with. If we had 12,000 to 15,000 prompt-paying subscribers much could be done that is now impossible for lack of money.—ED. T. S.].

MRS. SLENKER TO MR. PINNEY.

MISTAKEN FRIEND: Thee is altogether wrong about "the complacent way in which Mrs. Slenker offers to do Spiritualism the favor of investigating," etc.

For years my Spiritual correspondents hav been urging me to "see and believe," just as my Christian friends hav told me to "come forward to the altar and pray," and I'd be converted. But having neither faith nor funds, I could not go and see. Then when Mr. Lacy made his proposal, I at first refused it, as I had no housekeeper. Finally things shaped themselvs so I could go, and I consented to do so if all those who had been urging me cared enough to help me a little toward it. So many had made offers of that kind that I felt sure if all were in earnest plenty would be raised. And I think so still, but it was so long before I made up my mind I would go that it may be August or September before I shall get off.

I am daily receiving so many letters of advice and invitations to visit one and another during my trip, and encouraging wishes and hopes that I will not giv it up, that I think even thee thyself would say it is best to go.

I do not propose to "investigate" very largely. I only wish to go and see what I can, and tell what I see, just as if I should visit a museum or some foreign land. As I am writing for a great many papers, and hav been doing so for thirty odd years, of course I hav a host of personal friends who feel interested in what I would see and say about Spiritualism.

Instead of being "complacent," I really feel distrustful and doubtful of being able to satisfy even myself. But there is an old saying, "Nothing risked nothing hav," and if I don't try to see and gain real information, I may remain ignorant till the end. I've been reading all I could of this ism for years, and now I hope to be able to see something of it. But I want no one to contribute who does not really wish me to go.

As to being "averse or indifferent" to a life to come, I would say that all the pious world has for ages called Paine a monster of iniquity, and has said Atheists believed in chance. Both of these assertions thee and I know to be false. Well, I hav always assured you that life was very pleasant to me; that I would rejoice exceedingly to know that I could liv on, and that we could all liv on indefinitly and be happy in a beautiful summer-land in the future.

Yet in the face of all these assertions, you insist that I am desiring annihilation. It is true I am "willing" to giv up my personal identity after death if it must be so. So am I "willing" to grow old, feeble, and helpless if it must be so. I would like to be the owner of millions of money, yet I am content and happy here in our "little brown shanty," and am glad to make joy and sunshine out of what is. I do not find life an "iceberg," and neither is it a hell of heated fire, but it is full of a genuin, genial warmth, and I hope to enjoy it for many years yet.

I love my home and friends, and enjoy them right here and now. Yet I am willing to leave them awhile if I may learn something by it. Our mind is us, and if we would be something we must seek to know something.

"Sweet is the smile of home; the natural nook
Where hearts are of each other sure;
Sweet all the joys that crown the household work,
The haunt of all affections pure."

ELMINA.

POMONA, CAL., April 12, 1884.

MR. EDITOR: Inclosed please find $3, for which send me THE TRUTH SEEKER for the next twelve months. I hav been permitted, through the kindness of one of your subscribers, to read your outspoken paper, and it affords great pleasure to one like myself who has drifted, through the medium of Freethought, so far away from the fold as to be classed by the faithful as bad, to read of the many of limited education who are in the same boat. I can easily understand why there are so many Freethinkers among the educated and scientific—for they are thinkers—men who form opinions through the action of their own brains, by reason, analogy, comparison, and by the application of natural laws, cause, and effect; but it is different with us who are limited in education and in brains. What we learned in our youth (fifty years ago) was principally a system of theology—of how to get to heaven in a certain boat named Methodism. That being considered the most important, all else was neglected; our eyes and thoughts were directed toward the skies; consequently we lost sight of the realities and began our search for the phamtoms—the supernatural; and for many long years our mind was befogged—limited to the narrow channel in which the gospel boat is guided by the arrogant "sky-pilot." The wants, necessities, luxuries, and pleasures of this life were excluded from our craft as rubbish, contaminating, foul, wicked, and damning. We traveled thus many long and sorrowful years, our young heart longing for the joys and luxuries of this world, this real world. But, alas! we were in a boat going in an opposit direction, with a cross for a jack-staff and a Christ for a compass. Our pilot did his level best, with the means at hand, to steer us around and past the rocks of Freethought and common sense, but we would strike so many cross currents that we would occasionally bump up against some of them—for they were legion—until, finally, one of them (Thomas Paine) knocked of our jack-staff and upset our compass, which so confused our pilot that he ran us clean out on dry land ("Bob" Ingersoll), knocking the bottom out and wrecking the whole business. Since then we hav remained on dry land, traveling the easy road of Freethought, being a free man, as nature intended we should be, always happy and free to enjoy the good things of this real world so long as our happiness does not conflict with the rights and privileges of others. By so doing we do not expect to be popular among Christians, get to heaven, or avoid hell, but merit the approbation of ever noble man, woman, and child who may know us, and keep our paper at par. The affairs of this world should consume all our thoughts; those of another world are too remote, too mystical for our attention or comprehension..

Pomona, like other towns, contains many Freethinkers, but, like others, the church element predominates to such an extent, and its efforts to increase its members and patronage are carried on with so much zeal, that many Freethinkers are so intimidated through fear of unpopularity and business loss that they keep mum and will not express their minds in a public manner, but will occasionally drop $5 or $10 into the coffers of the church, thereby placing themselvs in a false position with both parties. It is morally wrong for any Freethinker to giv money to build churches or pay the salary of the pounder of Bibles. Moral cowards are contemptible, and hypocrits are detestable. No Freethinker is worth anything that will pander to the Christian sentiment. He should stand or fall upon his record. profess nothing conflicting with his every-day life, rely upon himself and not upon gods or devils for the correction of his errors; in short, do right and he will be happy and the world will be benefited by his living it.

MOUND CITY, MINN.

MR. EDITOR: George W. Chapman, M D. Cawker City, Kan., says in THE TRUTH SEEKER of March 15, 1884: "A great deal is being said in Liberal papers in favor of free land and I presume there are many that think if the poor had all the good land they could work they would cease to be poor. I once thought so, but many of them are incapables. They are not learned in the school of farming." Dr. Chapman does not set forth the full meaning of the free-land question. It is not so much to keep these incapables in possession of a home as to prepare a way whereby future capables may possibly hav a home in this free country, where land should be as free as the air we breathe or the water we use. We cannot so clearly see the evil results of the land title system in America as we can in Europe. Look at Russia with her land owned by the few, and her many in serfdom, transferable with the land when sold. Look at England and Ireland—worse than serfdom—the land all owned by the landed aristocracy, who are drawing the life-blood from the people by heavy rents and destructiv usury. Ireland must fight or starve; there is no alternativ. The land cannot pay the rent and support the people. The tendency of the title in land is to bring about in our country the same state of affairs as is seen in England and Ireland today. It is to bring a landed aristocracy. Time only is required. The great jurist, Blackstone, says: "There is no natural reason why a deed upon parchment should convey the domain of land." This unnatural title in land is the basic structure of all those evils that are connected with banking, usury, credit, monopolies, and the whole train of bad effects that accompany the private banking system. The best right to land is possession and occupancy. The government should giv meets and bounds to land, and should recognize no other title than occupancy. Giv a man all he can cultivate, and he needs no more. If he is ambitious like Dalrymple, let him hav his thousands of acres if he can cultivate so much, and not interfere with others' rights.

The two great evils that are now holding the prosperity of the people in check are title in land and specie basis for money. These two are the strongholds of aristocracy, the bulwark of debt and usury, and the final degeneracy of the race. Our way of supporting the government by direct taxes is somewhat objectionable. The tax is drawn from that class of people who are the least able to bear it. There should be no tax on land. There is less than one per cent of real value in uncultivated land. All the rest is labor. The day labor pays no tax, and why tax farm labor? There must be a more equitable way to support our government than by direct taxation,

Suppose we change our system of finance? Instead of using national bank currency use greenbacks, fiat money, together with gold and silver. Let the government issue greenbacks and distribute them through the post-office in such quantities as the people may want to do business with. The trader, or whoever takes the money from the post-office, will pay a bonus or tax for the use of the money, and giv security for the payment of the amount that he received (without interest) on such time as may be agreed upon. Let this bonus be only enough to take the place of the direct tax. Some plan similar to the above may be formed that would relieve us of the inconvenience of direct taxation. This will also relieve us (in time) of paying the double interest that we are now paying to the national banks. This plan would in time wind up the credit system, and leave us a free people. What say you. Is this plan feasible? The bankers and the moneyed men, loaners of money, will say, No. What do the people say?

Children's Corner.

"His life is long whose work is well,
And be his station low or high,
He who the most good works can tell,
Livs longest though he soonest die."

May.

Smiling, sweet, all hearts addressing,
By thy joyous, gay caressing;
Never mournful, ne'er depressing,
Filled with fresh and fragrant blessing,
Bonnie, blithesome May.

Sunshine gilds the vales and hills,
And glittens on the dancing rill,
While hyacinths and daffodils
All the air with sweetness fill,
Bonnie, blithesome May.

Blue violets to life are stirred
At Nature's low, commanding word;
And we, with blossom, bee, and bird,
To thee all love and praise accord,
Bonnie, blithesome May.

My First Temptation.

Children often learn to steal and do other bad things from innocent motivs. They take what does not belong to them, simply because they want it, and not from any desire to do wrong. This desire to gratify a natural want, if not corrected and properly restrained, may lead to the habitual practice of thieving.

When I was so little that I remember what I am about to relate as one of the earliest events of my life, we resided neighbors to a huxter by name of Frane. I may as well explain that huxtering was a very common and useful occupation in those days, before the invention of railways. The huxter would load his wagon with butter, eggs, flax, or whatever brought the best city prices, and bring back oranges, candies, peanuts, and other fruits and nuts, which he would dispose of at fairs, vendues, camp-meetings, and other public gatherings, to good advantage.

The principal thoroughfare was the turnpike, and all public travel was done by stage coaches. At this time Mr. Frane returned from Philadelphia with his wagon loaded with boxes of nuts, candies, and oranges, and I was there to see him unload, and to smell the perfume of the splendid oranges, which filled the place with their odor. I had never smelled nor seen such fruit before, and was very naturally siezed with a strong desire to hav one. They were carefully piled away in a large kitchen adjoining the house, box upon box, and finally, the family all retired into the house to unpack and inspect other things. I marched around that old kitchen taking in the perfume of the oranges until I thought I must take one home, and being observant, I noticed that one of the boxes had a part of the side torn off. And this circumstance tempted me to put my hand into the box and see if I could get one out. I succeeded beyond my expectations, and soon held a splendid orange in my hands. I had wanted one, oh! so much, and now I had it. My heart leaped with delight; and I am sure Mother Eve had no more temptation than I when she ate the fabled apple. As fast as my short limbs would carry me, I made tracks for home, which was but a few yards across the way, and held out the orange to my mother, who, supposing it had been given to me, was much pleased, and proceeded to remove the rind and put it into sections for a division and taste all around.

While we were enjoying the orange, a young lady of the Frane family came into our house in a laughing mood, and privately whispered into poor mother's ears that I had stolen the orange. She said they had seen the whole operation, and were delighted to see how cute I was, and how I toddled off when I had secured it. She was brimful of merriment over the affair. But not so with mother. To her this was a thing to be dreaded. She saw that here was the time to teach me a lesson. I must be shown that I had committed a sin, and must not "covet my neighbor's goods;" so she asked me, in a very solemn way, how I got the orange. I said, "I dot it out of a box," and as we had eaten it now, I wanted more, so taking her by the apron, and pulling in the direction of neighbor Frane's kitchen, said, "Come, let's det anodder." She then explained that I had done a very naughty trick by "stealing"—that the orange belonged to Mr. Frane.

The Frane family enjoyed it as a good joke, and made light of it. Mr. Frane came in the direction of our house smiling, but that only grieved mother the more, and I began to feel badly too. I just began to realize that I had been naughty. Finally, mother said the only thing for him to do now is to pay for the orange, and, placing four pennies in my hand, I was obliged to go out and meet Mr. Frane and hand him the pennies. He did not want to take them, and kept a smiling and a-shaking of his head at mother, but she insisted that I must pay him for the orange. She said, "I want to teach him a lesson, that he must never take what does not belong to him." At last, Mr. Frane, appreciating her motivs, took the pennies for the orange, but I could see in the good man's face that he did it only to satisfy my mother, and not because he cared for the orange.

The whole transaction, however, made a lasting impression on me, and ever after in life when a temptation fell in my way by which I might hav taken advantages, that early circumstance and thoroughly moral lesson of the stolen orange would stand out in my memory like a bright picture and a never-failing reminder of duty. The pleasant thing in the picture is the memory of the kind lines upon the face of neighbor Frane. And the most important shadows are the sorrowful looks and words of my wounded mother, whose sole concern was for the future good of her baby boy. And that fact made her words as mellow as the fruit I had eaten. They ever shielded me with a halo of motherly love and affection. And who can love as a mother? That episode in my child life has been a talisman that always broke the tempter's charm, and rendered me free from any desire to steal. I would not harbor the guilt of a dishonest man for a fortune. I love honesty for the peace and satisfaction it affords, as "a guilty conscience needs no accuser." Remember, our actions become a part of ourselvs, and the most important thing is this: that while every atom of our bodies is cast off many times during a long life, so that our bodies are never the same from year to year, or from day to day, even, yet the experiences of life are never cast off, but are retained in the mind, to bless or curse us in the memory of all of them; and also another fact: that while the body is undergoing this constant change and waste, the mind is as constantly adding and accumulating more and more of experience and mental growth, the longer we liv.

ENIGMA.

In luscious melons, ripe and sweet;
In grizzly bear, with great big feet;
In Gog, a giant, very tall;
In Greece, a country, very small;
In Bartholdi statue, not yet done;
In good health, wished by every one;
In arctic regions, desolate and cold;
In lion, an animal, desperate and bold;

3.

I notice in the last Truth Seeker a numerical puzzle composed of 25 numbers, by H. Van Pelt. I hav not studied his out, but will send you as great a curiosity in combining numbers, for the Children's Corner. First make 25 squares and fill them with the numbers from one to 25 inclusiv. Thus:

17	24	1	8	15
23	5	7	14	16
4	6	13	20	22
10	12	19	21	3
11	18	25	2	9

Now the curiosity commences. Each line, horizontal, perpendicular, and diagonal, will make 65 when added. The four corner numbers, with the center one, will make 65. The four numbers 24, 8, 18 2, with the center one, will add the same; also 23, 0, 16, 3, with the center, will add 65; also 4, 1, 22, 25, with the center, will add the same; also 5, 14, 12, 21, with the center one will make the same; also 6, 7, 20, 19, with the center, will make 65 when added. There might be more combinations if I had time to study them up. If you deem this worth publishing I may send you another. Success to The Truth Seeker, although I am not a Materialist. Fraternally,

South Bend, Ind. H. C. Van Liew.

Correspondence.

Newburgh, April 19, 1884.

Miss Susan H. Wixon, Dear Lady: As it is nearing my annual examination at school, I cannot make many puzzles, because I hav to pay more attention to my studies. I am thirteen (13) and expect to graduate to the academy in June. But I will try to send some puzzles occasionally, and I send two in this letter.

I remain yours respectfully,
Robert Bernheim.

Callao, Mo., April 8, 1884.

Dear Miss Wixon: My pa has been taking The Truth Seeker as long as I can remember. I was not much interested in it until the Children's Corner was added to it, but now it is real interesting to me. The "Puzzle Box" is something new to me. I never attempted to solve any of them before, and they were quite difficult for me to work out. I may not be as bright as other little girls of my age, but I hav this excuse to offer, I hav not had the society and culture that I might hav had had my parents resided in a more favored part of the country. My ma and pa were among the early settlers of the mountains of Colorado, where I was born and raised until a little over two years ago, when we came to this place, where I hope to stay. This is a pretty country. I would like to hav your photograph, if it would not be asking too much, and I will send you mine in return if you desire it. Here are the answers to the puzzles in The Truth Seeker of March 29th. Yours respectfully,

Mary J. Mellor, a young truth seeker.

[The answers were correct, but as they hav once been published, we omit them from our friend's letter.—Ed.]

BIBLE MYTHS

AND THEIR

Parallels in Other Religions.

Being a Comparison of the Old and New Testament Myths and Miracles with those of heathen nations of Antiquity, Considering also their Origin and Meaning. With numerous illustrations.

The object of the work is to point out the myths with which the Old and New Testaments abound; to show that they were held in common with other nations; and then trace them to their evident origin and explain their meaning.

"It has long been acknowledged by the most eminent biblical students that the Hebrew scriptures contain a large mythical element; but, so far as we know, the present is the first complete and scholarly atttempt to trace these myths to their source, and ascertain their original signification."—Boston Courier.

"Never before has there been given a volume to the reading world that shows the research for the origin of these myths as does this one just published by J. W. Bouton, of New York."—Boston Times.

"It is unquestionably true that the results of a rationalistic study of the Christian scriptures are nowhere else so accessible as they are now made in the work before us.—N. Y. Sun.

Poetry.

Col. Ingersoll's Cabin Home in New Mexico.

This, however, has all been preliminary to a description of Ingersoll's log cabin in New Mexico, which Dorsey is building for him. The situation is one of the most beautiful in nature. Colfax county, in northeastern New Mexico, is an elevated plateau almost identical in area with the state of Massachusetts. The Palo Alto estate (commonly called Dorsey's ranch) is situated almost exactly in the middle of it. The whole country is one boundless and unbroken meadow. The estate proper consists of about 24,000 acres, in more than a hundred locations covering the springs that control the pasturage of more than a million acres. Dorsey's home ranch (his private property and not included in the Palo Alto estate) called Ojo del Monte—mountain spring—is situated on an elevation commanding a view of almost the whole county. It is next to impossible to convey the proper notion of western scenery to people unfamiliar with the optical effects of our rarified atmosphere. To say that when the air is warmed by the sun, between the hours of 9 and 4 a cow four miles distant will look larger, though the outline of form will be indefinit, than one ten paces off, is to assert what eastern people (save perhaps a few on the coast) hav not the data in their experience to verify. It seems impossible. To state that one can stand upon the vernada of Dorsey's residence in the balmy morning and gaze across endless meadows, upon mountain ranges 150 miles away, and see the peaks towering into the clouds, is to endanger your credibility by an assertion that almost makes imagination faint. In such a country, in the midst of such scenes, in an elevated position, yet sheltered by solemn pines and gnarled and twisted cedars, will be situated the summer home of Ingersoll. He has lately become a part owner of the Palo Alto estate, which, with its 45,000 head of grade cattle, is valued at $2,000,000. The house will be near Ojo del Monte—that is, a few miles away. Everything is "near" in a country where the natural roads are as smooth as race tracks and horses are as plentiful as chickens.

The building—or let us say buildings, for it is a great cluster—will be something unique in architecture, and I shall be greatly disappointed if the general plan is not soon extensivly copied in New England, where the material abounds in profusion and where fanciful things in architecture are now the rage. Nothing more perfectly delightful for a sea-side residence could be devised, especially for spots where land is cheap. Its size will be commensurate with the generous proportions of the man and his boundless hospitality for which his hearth has always been famous.

Ingersoll's immediate family consists of but four persons, a wife and two daughters, but I am told that he rarely sits down to a meal with less than a dozen about his table, and frequently that number is doubled. His New Mexico residence will accommodate thirty persons, exclusiv of servants, without crowding. He expects, as I understand, to occupy it from June to November of each year, and it is his purpose to withdraw himself so far from legal practice as to be able to devote that much of each year to the preparation of some books on religious and philosophical topics which he has long contemplated.

Learning that Mr. A. H. Young, of Raton, was the architect in charge, I called on him to obtain some facts for publication and was permitted to take a draft of the plan, which I send for reproduction in Opinion. To get the proportions right, make the distance around the veranda 940 feet. Formed into one rectangular building, this would make a house 300 feet long by 150 feet wide, about. You will thus be enabled to judge of the amount of space under roof.

"When do you expect to hav Col. Ingersoll's house ready for occupancy?" I inquired of the architect.

"By the 1st of July."

"Tell me how it will be finished—tell me all about it."

"Well, it will be built of logs entirely, on a stone foundation, and it will take twenty-five workmen from now till the time mentioned to finish it. Every log will hav the bark scraped nearly smooth, but left on, and then the whole will be oiled. The rustic effects will be carried out by making even the window frames of slabs, with the bark on, and all the doors will be of unique pattern. As for the windows, they will be of all shapes and sizes, those in no two rooms being alike, and stained glass will be liberally used. The floors, and such of the rooms as are not lathed and plastered, will be done in mountain mahogany and hard pine, two kinds of timber growing in the vicinity. No paint whatever will be used about the building, but all the woodwork will be treated with hot oil. The chimneys, of which there will be many, both in groups and scattered, will be of stone and red brick. Some will be inside, and others entirely outside the house, as may best serve effects in the general log-cabin design of the buildings. Every large room—and you see how numerous they will be—has a spacious fire-place for wood. With the exception of the octagonal room, which will be thirty feet high, and hav an observatory above all the buildings (you perceive it is not one building, but a numerous and grotesque jumble, all connected) will be but one story high. The roofs will be steep, semi-Gothic, painted gule red, which I think, with all the clustering gables and the chimney groups, will make a charming ensemble there among the green cedars and pines. I am very enthusiastic about it, for you see all the gentlemen of the county are proud to hav the colonel for a neighbor, and with the host of Eastern visitors he will hav, my work is sure to be appreciated."

"What will the whole affair cost?"

"Well, the contract price for the house alone is $10,000, but the stable, fences, putting in the fountain (you see the spring above throws the water thirty feet high at the house) will probably run the whole expense up to $15,000, and you are to take into account that much of the material costs nothing out there but the dressing."

As for society, Col. Ingersoll will not find himself among the barbarians in Colfax county. There is probably not another section in the whole Rocky Mountain region which contains a greater number of cultivated people than this.—Denver Opinion.

The Old Testament Manuscript.

This is the way the New York Times supports the recent "discovery" of the Pentateuchal manucript:

The example of Bishop Bryennios has already borne fruit. An enterprising finder of ancient manuscripts has found the original books of Moses in the latter's own handwriting, and has placed them in the hands of an eminent Hebraist, who is now engaged in testing them with litmus paper and with hydrochloric acid in order to ascertain if they are genuin.

The manuscript in question was found in the region through which the Israelites wandered on their way from Egypt to Judea. In the opinion of the finder, Moses had a good deal of leisure time on his hands during the forty years of wandering, and employed part of this time in writing the Pentateuch. The manuscript probably dropped out of Moses's coat pocket. Or Moses, instead of dropping the manuscript, may hav sold one of his old coats with the manuscript in one of the pockets to an Arab anxious to buy a nice second-hand coat, and the Arab, on afterward finding the manuscript in the coat pocket, may hav thrown it away, as an utterly worthless article, before Moses discovered that it was missing and sent to reclaim it. Precisely how the manuscript was lost is, however, a matter of no consequence. Its reappearance, apparently expressly in order to refute the critics who hold that Moses never wrote the Pentateuch, but that it was written by two literary partners—an Elohist and a Jehovist—is, on the other hand, an event the importance of which cannot be overestimated. If the new-found manuscript is really in the handwriting of Moses, and if that handwriting can be fully identified so that the manuscript can be offered in evidence, the enemies of Moses will be completely silenced.

Of course, there are those who, after the authenticity of the manuscript is as fully established as is that of the "Teaching of the Apostles," will demand to be informed how Moses could hav lost in the wilderness a manuscript containing the history of the conquest of Judea and other events which happened years after the manuscript was lost. No true archæologist—not to speak of theologians—will be in the least disturbed by such a question. If the manuscript is proved to be genuin by such evidence as the scorching of one of its corners by the patriarch's pipe and the fact that it is written with the identical stylographic pen which Moses is known to hav used, all subsequent arguments brought to prove that it a forgery can be disregarded. We might as well doubt the authenticity of the "Teaching of the Apostles" on the ground that the alleged author, writing at a time when bishops had become a distinct order of the clergy, knew nothing of their existence. At any rate, those good people who believe that Moses wrote the account of his own death will hav little difficulty in believing that he described the conquest of Judea before he had arrived in sight of the promised land.

The name of the ingenious finder of the Mosaic manuscript is not given. It evidently, however, was not found by Bishop Bryennios, and the latter will naturally be indignant with the person who has ventured to forestall him in making desirable discoveries.

The Origin of Religion.

The origin of religion is to be sought in the countless ages before the rise of theology; before spirits, ghosts, or gods ever took definit form in the human mind. The primitiv uncultured man frankly worshipped external objects in love and in fear, ascribing to them quasi-human powers and feelings. All that we read about Animism, ghosts, spirits, and universal ideas of godhead in this truly primitiv stage are metaphysical assumptions of men trying to read the ideas of later epochs into the facts of an earlier epoch. Nothing is more certain than that man everywhere started with a simple worship of natural objects. And the bearing of this on the future of religion is decisiv. The religion of man in the vast cycles of primitiv ages was reverence for nature as influencing man. The religion of man in the vast cycles that are to come will be the reverence for humanity as supported by nature. The religion of man in the 20 or 30 centuries of theology was reverence for the assumed authors or controllers of nature. But, that assumption having broken up, religion does not break up with it. On the contrary, it enters on a far greater and more potent career, inasmuch as the natural emotions of the human heart are now combined with the certainty of scientific knowledge. The final religion of enlightened man is the systematized and scientific form of the spontaneous religion of natural man. Both rest on the same elements—belief in the Power which controls his life, and grateful reverence for the Power so acknowledged. The primitiv man thought that power to be the object of nature affecting man. The cultured man knows that power to be humanity itself, controlling and controled by nature according to natural law. The transitional and perpetually changing creed of theology has been an interlude. Agnosticism has uttered its epilog. But Agnosticism is no more religion than differentiation or the nebular hypothesis is religion. We hav only to see what are the elements and ends of religion to recognize that we cannot find it in the negativ and the unknown. In any reasonable use of language religion implies some kind of belief in a power outside ourselvs, some kind of awe and gratitude felt for that power, some kind of influence exerted by it over our lives. There are always in some sort these three elements—belief, worship, conduct. A religion which givs us nothing in particular to believe, nothing as an object of awe and gratitude, which has no special relation to human duty, is not a religion at all. It may be formula, a generalization, a logical postulate; but it is not a religion. The universal presence of the unknowable (or rather of the unknown) substratum is not a religion. It is a logical postulate. You may call it, if you please, the first axiom of science, a law of the human mind, or perhaps better, the universal postulate of philosophy. But try it by every test which indicates religion and you will find it wanting.

BEES! BEES! BEES!

FROM $2,000 TO $5,000 A YEAR KEEPING HONEY BEES.

The particulars are simply to prevent the great loss that most bee masters hav to contend with annually. Then giv the bees a chance to increase and collect surplus honey to their fullest capacity; all of which can be easily accomplished by using the kind of hive described in "Kidder's Secrets of Bee-keeping."

Send for the Book and see how easily it can be done with a few swarms of bees.

THIS BOOK IS A RELIABLE GUIDE

to all persons that keep bees, especially to the novice or new beginner, as it teaches how all of the troubles and disappointments that the bee master is liable to, can be successfully overcome, such as Foul Brood, Dysentery, Bee Robbery, Ravages of Moth Millers, Loss of Queen, loss of bees in Swarming time, by their flight to the forests, also the great loss in winter and early spring management, which is usually more than all other ways combined. This book will also inform the bee master HOW BEES WILL INCREASE AND THROW OFF SWARMS to an enormous extent, all conditions being favorable. The old stocks will frequently swarm three or four times each, and oft times the first swarms thrown off will swarm once or twice each with a good hive and right kind of management. In warmer climates the bees will increase and swarm to a much greater extent.

GREAT YIELD OF SURPLUS HONEY.

This Book will inform the bee master how to get the greatest amount of surplus honey, and at the same time hav it in small packages weighing three-quarters of a pound to two or three pounds, as may be desired, which will command the highest price in market. In a good season the bee keeper may calculate on two or three hundred pounds of surplus honey from each old stock, and from fifty to one hundred pounds from the earlier young swarms, especially if they do not over-swarm.

NO MORE BEE-STINGS IN MANAGING BEES.

The Book will post the bee-keepers how to manage them when putting them on, or taking off surplus honey boxes, and not get stung in the whole operation.

BEE-KEEPING FOR OUR SONS AND DAUGHTERS.

It being the most pleasant, as well as the most profitable business that young people can engage in, and at the same time remain at home with their parents. The author has known of several young men who commenced the culture of the bee in their teens, and are now making more money than their fathers who run the farm, and doing it easily and with small investments. We must also remember that the women folks often make the best of bee-keepers, and not so liable to neglect them as the men folks.

KIDDER'S BEE BOOK

should be in the hands of all persons who like honey, and take an interest in the little honey bee. It contains more matter than many books that sell for two dollars, and is embellished with numerous cuts and drawings. There is no trouble, loss, or damage that a bee master has to contend with but what the book will give the proper remedy by simply referring to the index, and that will point to the page where it is fully explained.

In order to bring this book more prominently before the mass of bee keepers, the Author proposes to giv, as a premium to each purchaser of a book, from this date until July next, the privilege of making his Celebrated Patent Bee Hive, as spoken of in book, for their own use (but not to sell) Free of Charge, otherwise there will be the usual Patent Fee of Five Dollars to each individual that wishes to make and use the hive.

PRICE, BOARD BOUND, CLOTH BACK, 75 CENTS.

N. B. The directions for hive making with cuts, drawings, etc., will be inclosed within each book sold, until July next (not longer). Now is the time for all bee-keepers to avail themselves of this liberal offer, which is simply to buy a book at the Regular Price, before July next

Around the World.

FOUR LARGE VOLUMES.

With a steel plate engraving of the author in Vol. I. and each volume illustrated with forty-seven cuts.

BY D. M. BENNETT,

Late editor of THE TRUTH SEEKER, author of "A Truth Seeker in Europe," "Gods and Religions of Ancient and Modern Times," "The World's Sages, Thinkers, and Reformers," "Champions of the Church," etc., etc.

Handsomely bound in red cloth, $6.50; in leather, red edges, $9.50; in morocco, gilt edges, $10.50.

Readers of THE TRUTH SEEKER know the circumstances under which this work was written. The last words penned by the great author were for the fourth volume which was nearly completed at his death, and which will now contain an account of his world-lamented death and burial. Mr. Bennett was a very patient and faithful chronicler of the habits and customs of the different peoples of the many places he visited. The every-day life of all nations is laid before the reader by one who has visited them and beheld them with his own eyes. Particular attention is paid to the progress of Freethought in the various countries he visited, and the morality of so-called pagan nations is contrasted with the morality of Christian countries, much to the detriment of the latter The work is a

Freethinker's History of the World.

This work and "A TRUTH SEEKER IN EUROPE" should be in every Liberal's library Besides its intrinsic worth it is a memento of one of the greatest Freethinkers the world has known—of one who ranks with Voltaire and Paine in the force and clearness of his writings.

PROSE POEMS

And Selections,

BY

ROBERT G. INGERSOLL.

This new book is a gem. It is a model in every respect. In fact, one of the richest, brightest, best ever issued.

It contains, besides the celebrated "Decoration Day Oration," never before published, and all the famous "tributes" heretofore printed in various shapes, but never brought together till now, many other gems selected from the speeches, arguments, lectures, letters, table-talks, and day-to-day conversations of the author.

The work is designed for, and will be accepted by, admiring friends as a rare personal souvenir. To help it serve this purpose, a fine steel portrait, with autograph fac simile, has been prepared especially for it.

In the more elegant styles of binding, this volume is eminently suited for presentation purposes, for any season or occasion.

In workmanship the volume is a masterpiece. The type is large and beautiful; the paper heavy and richly tinted; the presswork faultless; and the binding, as perfect as the best materials and skill can produce. The book is quarto in size, and contains 248 pages. No item of expense has been spared to make the work worthy of author and public.

TESTIMONIALS:

Read the following testimonials, and be convinced that our claims are correct in every particular and that your ailments can be eradicated without the aid of MEDICIN. THESE APPLIANCES ARE THE ACME OF PERFECTION:

Remarkable Cure of Paralysis in One Week.

CINCINNATI, Dec. 19, 1882.

DR. L. TENNEY—Dear Sir: As I feel greatly indebted to you for the benefit I hav received from your treatment, and the use of your Magnetic appliances, I can say without hesitation to those afflicted as I hav been that the effect was simply marvelous. Two weeks ago I was stricken with paralysis in my right arm and could not use it at all, but after wearing a suit of your MAGNETIC CLOTHING for one week, can use it quite as well as ever. I hav also been troubled with Dyspepsia and Kidney Complaint for a number of years, from which I hav suffered intensely, and, although doctoring all the time, never found but temporary relief. Since putting on your appliances I hav experienced great benefit, and if I improve as rapidly as I hav in the past two weeks, will soon be well. I would, therefore, recommend to those suffering as I hav your Magnetic appliances as the only means of effecting a sure cure. Yours respectfully,

WM. H. CLEMMER,
No. 80 Eastern avenue.

Remember that the same appliances which will effect a cure in a case of Paralysis will at the same time eradicate CATARRH or DYSPEPSIA in the same patient. We do not, like the Old School Physician, change medicins every day until, after dosing the patient almost to death, he may possibly strike something (if he is very skilful) that brings relief for the time being.

Neuralgia of the Heart of Six Years Standing Cured in Three Weeks.

SHULLSBURG, WIS., Dec. 11, 1882.

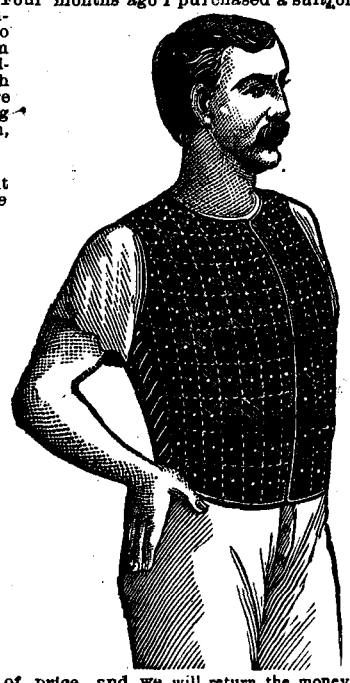
DR. L. TENNEY—Dear Sir: After wearing one of your MAGNETIC VESTS for about three weeks, I was entirely cured of Neuralgia of the Heart and Side, which had been a source of misery to me for the last six years. I had tried numerous remedies before without benefit, but as soon as I put on the MAGNETIC VEST I got relief instantly. With unbounded gratitude, I remain

Yours respectfully,
H. A. BROWN.

Ladies, read the following testimony from a lady who had been under drug treatment for eight years with nervous prostration and female weakness:

OSBORN, O., Dec. 15, 1882.

DR. L. TENNEY: Your letter just received; also the Clothing on Tuesday last. Fitted perfectly. FELT BETTER FROM THE FIRST HOUR I HAD THEM ON. Am not joking, and if I improve as rapidly as I hav since Tuesday, will soon be well. Will report again soon. Respectfully yours, E. J. K.



This lady reports herself entirely cured in less than six weeks after putting on the garments, and, although in bed, unable to get out, when applied, she nevertheless was able to ride twenty miles in two days after the application. The lady's name can be had upon application at this office, by anyone desiring to communicate with her.

Ladies, read the following testimony from a lady who had been suffering for two years with an Ovarian Tumor, and who had been told that nothing but the knife would save her life, and the chances were as 9 to 1 against recovery. In four months' time she is perfectly well, and has not taken a dose of medicin since putting on the appliances. Consult us when your physician tells you he can do nothinog for you; it will pay you.

SHULLSBURG, WIS., November 19, 1882.

DR. L. TENNEY, Dear Sir: About two years ago my health began to fail me; I became nervous, lost all desire for food, and, in fact, began to fail rapidly, so that I became alarmed and consulted several physicians of St. Louis, at which place I was then stopping, all of whom declared that I had an Ovarian Tumor, and that the only thing that would save my life would be the knife. About six months ago I grew rapidly worse, and had about made up my mind to take the only course that seemed left to me, and submit to an operation, when my attention was called to the Eureka Magnetic Appliances. As a drowning man will catch at a straw, so did I catch at this faint hope of a cure. Four months ago I purchased a suit of your appliances. From the very first I felt invigorated, the tumor, which had extended entirely across my abdomen, began to decrease, my pains became less from day to day, until now I am as well as I ever was in my life. Since putting on the appliances I hav not taken a single dose of medicin. My bowels, which before were constipated, are now regular. I would therefore cheerfully recommend them to anyone suffering as I hav, believing that they will do all and more than you claim for them. I remain,

Gratefully yours, MRS. MARY J. STEWART.

Remember that these appliances are not worn next the skin, but over the under-garment, and, unlike all other appliances in the market, they impart no shocks and leaves no sores.

Children's garments upon application.

Any of the above garments sent to any address upon receipt of price, and we will return the money if they are not as represented in every respect. If you are uncertain as to what would best suit your case send us word stating symptoms, and we will advise you what would be best suited to treat you. While our appliances are offered at less than one-third of what others are selling worthless appliances for, yet we will guarantee that the magnetic quality is a hundred fold superior to any other appliance ever offered the public, and will outlast the garments themselvs. Every magnet is put through a particular process, and hav raised five times their own weight six months after being magnetized, while not a single appliance in the market will attract the smallest particle of iron, the majority of such worthless appliances having so-called magnets made of material no better than hoop-iron, and not capable of retaining magnetism for a moment. All of our garments are made from the very best material for the purpose, and will outlast any and all other garments now before the public. Every magnet is arranged in the garments upon scientific principles, and not haphazard as in all the others. We offer you therefore

The Only Scientific Magnetic Appliance Ever Constructed.

And challenge comparison with any of the so-called magnetic garments now offered under that head. At the same time the application of labor-saving machinery in our manufacture enables us to offer them about

ONE-THIRD THE PRICE HERETOFORE CHARGED,

So that we can say with truth, None are so poor that they cannot procure them, being but a trifle higher than ordinary clothing.

Remember that we are offering you the cheapest and best magnetic appliances in the market, and if upon receiving the garments they do not meet your expectation, return them at our expense and we will refund your money.

Ladies' Abdominal Jackets and Gentlemen's Vests are made to order, and a fit guaranteed.

Embracing those of the blood and Nerves, the Diseases of Men, the Diseases of Women, and the various causes, physical and social, leading to the many plainly treated by that plainest of books, PLAIN HOME TALK, EMBRACING MEDICAL COMMON SENSE—nearly 1,000 pages, 200 illustrations, by Dr. E. B. FOOTE, of 120 Lexington ave., New York. To whom all letters from the sick should be addressed. In its issue for Jan. 19, 1878, Mr. Bennett's TRUTH SEEKER thus speaks of Dr. FOOTE and his medical publications: "We know him (Dr. Foote) personally and intimately, and we say with all the assurance that knowledge imparts that he is a man of the highest incentivs and motivs, whose life has been spent in instructing and improving his fellow-beings by giving such information as is well calculated to enable them to be more healthy, more happy, and to be better and more useful men and women. His medical works possess the highest value, and hav been introduced and thoroughly read in hundreds of thousands of families, who to-day stand ready to bear willing testimony to the great benefit they hav derived from the physiological, hygienic, and moral lessons which he has so ably imparted."

Gems of Thought.

IN Greece the gods once flourished in regal splendor; society was based upon the belief in them; the theory and supernaturalism connected with them were woven into their literature, their poetry, and their art. They were a great and grand people, but they had only a limited knowledge of nature and her laws; they foolishly looked to the gods for aid; they expected supernatural assistance, and they failed. They and their works passed away. Their superstition was superseded by another of a still worse variety—more dark and forbidding—called Christianity, and all their greatness passed away, and a wreck, a shadow, was all that remained.—D. M. Bennett.

ALL of us are planting flowers; will they blossom? Some of them; some will be bright, and will fill our homes and lives with fragrance. Some of them will grow for a little while and glad us with the anticipation of what is coming; and then, in spite of all our care, a worm shall gnaw their root, and frost shall blight them, the leaves shall turn black and fall off, and only the withered dead shall remain in our hands.—M. J. Savage.

THERE is no flock, however watched and tended,
But one dead lamb is there.
There is no fireside, howe'er defended,
But has one vacant chair.

The air is full of farewells to the dying,
And mournings to the dead;
The heart of Rachel for her children crying
Will not be comforted!

—Longfellow's Resignation.

I COULD stand here by the hour and read passages from other bibles than the Christian and the Jewish—passages of the most exquisit truth and tenderness, the most delicate sense of divine things—taken from books that were written centuries before Christ was born, and among heathens; passages more delicious in their moral aroma than anything you can find in the New Testament. This we affirm; it is not matter of conjecture; it is not matter of speculation or of guess; it is matter of simple knowledge. We hav but to use our eyes and the fact is before us, that all the religions of the race are of one stuff.—O. B. Frothingham.

IT is time that a higher view of education prevailed than that which regards it as a mere means to an end, that end being the low and contracted one of being fitted to earn a living in some special sphere of toil. The correlated idea that every boy who gets an education a little above the average common school level must quit the farm or the mechanic's shop for some professional career is infinity mischievous.—Toronto Globe.

WE repudiate utterly the orthodox doctrin that only a small portion of the human race are elected to be saved; that those favored few were predestinated into everlasting life before the foundation of the world; and that all the rest of mankind were foreordained to everlasting death, which means everlasting life in unutterable and profitless suffering. We turn from such a proposition as from the blasphemy of demoniacs.—Rev. Samuel J. May.

MY last days are cheered by the sense of how much better my later years hav been than the earlier, or than in the earlier I ever could hav anticipated. Some of the terrible faults of my character which religion failed to ameliorate, and others which superstition bred in me, hav given way, more or less, since I attained a truer point of view; and the relief from old burdens, the uprisings of new satisfactions and the opening of new clearness, the fresh air of nature, in short, after imprisonment in the ghost-peopled cavern of superstition, hav been as favorable to my moral nature as to intellectual progress and general enjoyment.—Harriet Martineau's Autobiography.

ALLOWING the gods to be the authors of the existence or order of the universe, it follows that they possess that precise degree of power, intelligence, and benevolence which appears in their workmanship; but nothing farther can ever be proved, except we call in the assistance of exaggeration and flattery to supply the defects of argument and reasoning. So far as the traces of any attributes at present appear, so far we may conclude those attributes to exist. The supposition of further attributes is mere hypothesis; much more the supposition that in distant regions of space and periods of time, there has been, or will be, a more magnificent display of these attributes, and a scheme of administration more suitable to such imaginary virtues. We can never be allowed to mount up from the universe, the effect, to Jupiter, the cause; and then descend downward, to infer any new effect from that cause; as if the present effects alone were not entirely worthy of the glorious attributes which we ascribe to that deity. The knowledge of the cause being derived solely from the effect, they must be exactly adjusted to each other; and the one can never refer to anything further or be the foundation of any new inference and conclusion.—Hume on Providence and a Future State.

PROSPECTUS OF

The Truth Seeker

FOUNDED BY D. M. BENNETT.

THE LEADING FREETHOUGHT JOURNAL OF THE WORLD.

LARGEST, CHEAPEST, BEST.

PUBLISHED EVERY SATURDAY, AT $3.00 PER YEAR; $1.50 FOR SIX MONTHS

SAMPLE COPIES FREE.

33 CLINTON PLACE, NEW YORK CITY.

Among the reforms THE TRUTH SEEKER aims to effect are:

Total separation of church and state, including the equitable taxation of church property; secularization of the public schools, abolition of Sunday laws, abolition of chaplaincies, prohibition of public appropriations for religious purposes, and all other measures necessary to the same general end.

Its sixteen large pages are filled every week with scientific, philosophic, and Freethought articles and communications by the ablest Freethinkers in the country. It gives all the Liberal news, and keeps its readers posted on current secular and theological events. It is the armory from which hundreds draw their weapons in contests with priesthood. All the Liberal papers are good, but THE TRUTH SEEKER is

THE BEST AND LARGEST.

It is conducted in a broad and truly liberal spirit, and gives everyone a hearing upon all subjects pertaining to the welfare of the human race.

OPINIONS REGARDING IT.

A paper like THE TRUTH SEEKER is something more and better than an advocate of truth. Through it its subscribers touch elbows with each other. Each reader knows that he is one of a goodly company who find comfort and inspiration in its pages. If they should meet each other they would feel like brothers and sisters. They hav lived under one intellectual roof, felt the glow of the same fireside, and broken together the bread of life. Such a paper is to thousands a substitute for the church.—GEORGE CHAINEY, in This World.

THE TRUTH SEEKER, founded by D. M. Bennett, is to-day perhaps the strongest foe with which superstition has to contend, and a long future of great usefulness is, we trust and believe, before it.—Winted, Conn., Press.

There ought to be five hundred subscribers to THE TRUTH SEEKER in this county, just to rebuke the infamous church bigots who are using force and fraud to suppress Liberalism.—Worthington, Minn., Advance.

This sterling and widely-circulated Freethought journal has won its way deep into the hearts of its readers. THE TRUTH SEEKER is a great paper, and deserves the most generous support of the Liberal public. The recent numbers received are splendid in every respect.—San Francisco Universe.

THE TRUTH SEEKER has gathered its resources, and will be a stronger, better, and brighter paper than ever.—Liberal League Man.

THE TRUTH SEEKER has become a necessity to the Liberal cause.—Kansas Blade.

Odds and Ends.

BEWARE of dried apples. They love not wisely, but to swell.

"NOTHING but leaves," as Adam remarked, when admiring his wife's polonnaise.

A BURLINGTON boy sent for a fifty cent watch and received a sun-dial. He named it "Faith," because faith without works is dead.

"NO, Laura; no. They do not open the campaign with a can-opener. They do it with a corkscrew. How little, alas! do women know about politics."

"MA, what did the minister mean when he talked about angels with palms in their hands? Havn't we all of us got palms in our hands 'fore we go to heaven?"

A POET sent to an editor a contribution entitled, "Why do I liv?" and the editor answered: "Because you send your contributions by mail, instead of bringing them in person."

A NEIGHBORING paper, reporting a recent social, says: "The opening piece was rendered by a 'mule quartet.' The reporter wrote it 'male quartet,' but the compositor knew better."

"WHAT are you doing?" asked Fogg's wife, as she saw him bundling up something suspicious, preparatory to going fishing. "Spirit-rapping," said Fogg, and he winked to himself all the way down to the creek.

FIRST Western desperado: "Well, did you kill old Col. Rich?" Second desperado: "Yes, I fotched him." "How did you do it?" "I found him riding on his horse along a lonely road, and had plenty of time to aim." "But where is his horse?" "I did not touch that." "Did not take the horse?" "Certainly not. In this section they will hang a man for stealing a horse."

DR. GALEZONSKI says that the ocular symptons of poisoning by nicotine are manifested by myosis and other ocular disorders, consisting principally of double amplyopia, with chromatic scotoma and chromopsia. It would be well to commit this to memory, and the moment you feel any myosis or double amblyopia stealing over your system send for a stomach-pump.

A BOY was sent out to milk the cow, and after he had been gone something over two hours his father started out to look him up. He found him sitting patiently on a three-legged stool in the corner of a ten-acre lot. "What the mischief are you sitting there for?" demanded the irate father. "Why don't you do your work and get back to the house?" "Because," answered the boy, "the teacher said to-day that all things comes to him who waits, and I am waiting for the cow."

DOCTOR: "Hav you got the better of the ague yet?" Patient: "No, sor. Me and me wife is as bad as iver, sor." Doctor: "Did you get that whisky and quinine I prescribed?" Patient: "Yis, sor; but it did no good at all, at all." Doctor: "That is strange! You took it according to directions, I suppose?" Patient: "Yis, sor; ye know a man and his wife are one." Doctor: "What has that to do with it?" Patient: "Well, ye see, sor, bein' as we are one flesh, I tuk the whisky and gave Biddy the quinine."

SOMETIMES it does seem as if this old world had slipped an eccentric, and was only working one side. The wicked man flourishes like a green bay-tree, while his honest neighbor gets whip-sawed at every deal. The doctor prescribes quinine for your chills, and the druggist puts you up something worthless and cheap for $2 an ounce. There are fifty-three authors of "Beautiful Snow," and not one for the "Bread Winners." In Philadelphia one manufactory makes nothing but century-old "grandfather's clocks," and furnishes pedigrees for the same to the purchaser, until to own a tall, antique clock is proof positiv that your family began only with your father. In Chicago they make violins that look one hundred years older than the most genuin Stradivarius, four weeks after they are made, so that now an ancient, honest-looking, decrepit violin is prima facia evidence of a glaring and outrageous fraud. There is milk in the water of commerce, and sugar in the sand the grocer sells. We hav rigors where we used to hav chills. "Old Subscriber" is really a man who borrows the paper from a neighbor, or reads the copy pasted up on the bulletin board. "Constant Reader" never read anything in all his life save the pictures on a circus poster, and "Taxpayer" is the signature of a tramp. A struggling genius writes a poem with a soul of fire that livs forever and a day, and dies in tears, loneliness, and poverty, in a hall bed-room, fifth floor, back. The queen writes a book that no living man outside the Guelph family and the proof-reader could be hired to read, and has pie three times a day, owns four dogs, and has India shawls to giv to the flood sufferers. So it is. Man goeth to the skating-rink with joy in his heart, and mirth on his lips, and he cometh away with his back so full of pine slivers that the porcupine sayeth unto him, "Thou art my brother," and the hedgehog crieth after him, "Behold my father and mother." When December is here with a select assortment of chilblains and frost bites, we cry, "Would to heaven it were July." And when July has come, straightway we are sunstruck. There are three thousand known, classified, and described species of fish. And yet a man can fish in good water all day long and never one solitary specimen of the smallest kind, and bringeth with him only a two weeks' ration of malarial fever. This also is vanity.

I never took a girl to church
The longest way back home to plan,
But what she left me in the lurch,
And walked back with another man.

Garfield was shot to death in the prime of a good and useful life. Lincoln was taken away just when the country least could spare him. De Long laid down his life for science ere yet his sun had reached its meridian, while a man who can write forty-nine chapters of the Bible on one side of a postal card will probably liv to the age of 93. This doesn't seem right.

THE TRUTH SEEKER

A JOURNAL OF FREETHOUGHT AND REFORM.

Entered at the Post-Office at New York, N. Y., as Second-class Matter.

Vol. 11. No. 19. | PUBLISHED WEEKLY. | New York, Saturday, May 10, 1884. | 33 CLINTON PLACE. | $3.00 per year.

Notes and Clippings.

THE best reporter in Kansas City is a woman, Mrs. Rees. She is connected with the Journal, and speaks four languages.

A PHILOSOPHER says it shocks him to hear people laugh aloud, the act is so purely physical and such a survival of barbarism. The philosopher is evidently a Bostonian.

IN Buffalo there is a Woman's Union to advance the interests of the sex in general. There are classes for instruction, in which women may learn penmanship, typewriting, and bookkeeping.

AN umbrella carried over a woman, the man getting nothing but the drippings of the rain, signifies courtship. When the man has the umbrella and the woman the drippings it indicates marriage.

MARITAL happiness appears to be on the decrease in New England. On one day Judge Allen, in the supreme court at Springfield, Mass., granted fourteen divorces, and refused four. There will be no need of pointing to Chicago as the wicked city after this.

AT a recent performance of "Faust," in an English town, when the time came for the orthodox descent of Mephisto into the lower regions, the apparatus would not work, and Mephisto stuck just his head and shoulders visible above the stage. "Thank God," cried a Christian spectator, "hell's full."

THE Bombay Guardian, a religious paper, referring to the sunset afterglow, which has recently been again observed in Bombay, says: "We will not venture to predict that this may be by way of preparation for the final conflagration, but one thing it is safe to say, namely, that it is well for every one to be ready."

IT is stated that Osman Digma has sent a message to King John, of Abyssinia, through friendly sheiks, threatening an attack on Abyssinia unless the Christians of that country become Mussulmans. History repeats itself, and Mohammedan Osman Digma is doing now only what Christian Constantine did fifteen hundred years ago.

AT a revival in Louisville a short time ago the class-leader urged those who were present to get up and tell what the Lord had done for them. A tall, matter-of-fact specimen of the granger arose, and in a loud, earnest voice, said: "He ain't done nuthin' for me, and I'm about tuckered out. The fact is, I'm a stranger, and need help right off."

THE Sun is authority for the statement that the Rev. Clara M. Bisbee has started a Free Church in Boston on the basis of "ethical culture." There will be in the service no petition to deity in the hope that human supplication may reverse the irrevocable decrees of nature, but "unworded music shall express our common confidence in that power which makes for righteousness."

A SICK man, lying on his death-bed, expressed a wish to see General Booth and his son before his death. Accordingly they were sent for, and promptly arrived at the sick man's bedside. On seeing them the sick man requested the general to stand on one side and his son on the other, and then said, "I can now die happy and like Jesus Christ."

THE Paris Communists hav decided to put up to competition the monument to be erected to the memory of the Federals who were executed and buried in the cemetery of Pere La Chaise during the Commune. The Prefect of the Seine refused to allow the monument to be placed in Pere La Chaise, but the municipal council propose to erect it in another part of Paris.

OLIVE LOGAN writes that Mrs. Victoria Woodhull is married to John Biddulph Martin, a rich London banker, "and any fine day you can see the pleased and amiable face of the now Mrs. Martin side by side with that of her faithful sister, Tennie C. Claflin, as they sit together in their comfortable carriage and roll toward their splendid residence in Courtfield Gardens over the smooth avenues of lovely Hyde Park."

FROM experiments made upon the pulse and temperature as affected by smoking, it has been found that the rate of both has been increased. Let the average temperature of non-smokers be represented by 1,000, then that of moderate smokers would be 1,008, and while the heart among the former class was making 1,000 beats, in the latter there would be 1,180 in the same space of time. This quickening of the action of the heart is considered a dangerous sympton.

A CORRESPONDENT of a labor paper says the workingmen want by constitutional means to limit land ownership, to fasten income taxation on the country, to control and own government railroads and telegraphs, to establish industrial schools and abolish the aristocratic West Point and Annapolis academies, to reduce labor hours, to prohibit all paper money but that made by the government, to bring down government expenses—yes, perhaps even to wipe out the Senate and Supreme Court!

OUR Puritan ancestors served the Lord as if the devil helped them, remarks the Winsted (Conn.) Press. They fined people for killing any game except an Indian, and banished the peaceful Quakers, first having stolen their horses. But they allowed no profane swearing or smoking of tobacco within a mile of any habitation. The Boston public library has just received, among other valuable papers, a recently discovered proclamation by Lieut. Gov. Wm. Stoughton, the council, and the assembly, issued in May, 1696, in which head-money was offered for dead Indians, and fifty pounds for every Indian man, and half that sum for any Indian woman, or child under fourteen, brought in prisoner. A premium was offered for scalps, "the scalps of all Indians slain to be produced and delivered to the commissioner for war, as the law in that case provides and the benefit of plunder."

Woods and Forests (English) says: "Any person, however ill-informed, might easily get the exact hight of a tree when the sun shines, or during bright moonlight, by marking two lines on the ground, three feet apart, and then placing in the ground on the line nearest to the sun a stick that shall stand exactly three feet out of the soil. When the end of the shadow of the stick exactly touches the furthest line, then also the shadow of the tree will be exactly in length the same measurement as its hight. Of course, in such a case, the sun will be at an exact angle of 45 degrees. Measurements of this character could be best effected in the summer, when the sun is powerful, has reached to a good hight in the heavens, and when the trees are clothed with living green so as to cast a dense shadow. To many to whom this idea may not hav occurred, it might be made annually a matter of interest thus on warm summer days to take the hight of prominent trees, and so to compare growth from year to year."

A CARGO of human freight left France the other day. Each year one of the general inspectors of prisons visits the six central penitentiaries where women convicts are serving their time to ask for volunteers to go to New Caledonia as wives for convicts serving out sentences in that penal colony. Fifty women who answered this appeal were shipped the other day from Bordeaux, and when they arrive at New Caledonia they will be divided between the two religious establishments, one at Noumea, and the other at Bourail. The convicts of the first class—that is, those who hav distinguished themselvs by good conduct, and who are accordingly to be rewarded by land grants—are informed of the arrival of the women. Those who are unmarried, or who are widowers and desire to get married, go to Noumea or to Bourail, where they are allowed to make their choice among the women. Of course they are not forced to make a choice, nor are the women forced to marry if the men who select them do not please them. The authorities introduce the men and women to each other, and allow them to act as they please. During the last century a more rapid and more curious system was in force. When the women arrived they, with the men, were drawn up in lines facing each other. The name of a man was called, and then the name of a woman, and when the list had been called over the couples thus paired were at once married.

A DISPATCH from St. Petersburg says that the Novoe Vremya warns Russian mothers of a new religious sect which has given several proofs of its existence. In Rostov, on the Dov, an officer engaged a middle-aged nurse for his three-year-old son. She was very attentiv and seemed fond of the child, but after two months she suddenly left the situation and the town. The child began to ail the very next day, lost its memory, and suffered from continual drowsiness. A week later it died without having been really ill. The corpse was placed in the coffin, when a young Jewess burst into the house, threw herself upon the dead child, and crying bitterly said, "The same woman poisoned my child. She was my nurse before, and now she has murdered your poor boy!" The woman spoke the truth. It has been found that in Rostov there is a society of child murderers, who poison children by means of narcotics. They are instigated to do so by a fanatical woman, who says, "It is every woman's duty to spare the evils of life to as many children as possible, and to make them share in the bliss of heaven before the earth has contaminated their souls."

THE persecution to which Mrs. Parnell, the mother of the Irish agitator, has been subjected, says the Boston Herald, would seem to indicate that the disposition to injure in a lawless and secret manner was by no means confined to one side in this Irish controversy. It is evident that the only cause for such molestations would be the relationship which exists between Mrs. Parnell and her son, and it is to spite the latter, rather than the former, that she has been made the victim of numerous annoyances. In fact, experience would seem to prove that it is not only the ignorant and the vicious who are disposed to thrust the law to one side when their interests are served by so doing. The mob in Cincinnati was supposed to number in its midst a great many respectable people, and it is notorious that insurance companies invariably charge for insuring distilleries against fire nearly twice as much as the inherent risks of the business are worth, for it has been found that men who are anxious to break up the trafic in intoxicating liquors are often sufficiently fanatical to secretly set fire to distilleries, and are upheld in such wrong-doing by a distorted public opinion.

REV. MINOT J. SAVAGE, in a recent sermon, treated the question of divorce with great freedom, but in a manner which showed that the historical and legal aspects of the problem had been closely studied by him. He demonstrated that severe laws, civil or ecclesiastical, concerning marriage and divorce had not raised the moral standard of communities, nor even prevented that standard from being lowered. From this to the position that the increase of divorces in Massachusetts, and throughout New England, is no indication of a growth of immorality was but a step. This increase, he held, was but the public or legal expression of a kind of evil condition, the like of which has existed for a hundred years. The house reported to be broken up by divorce may hav been broken up twenty years before the divorce took place. The still bolder ground was taken that in those cases where only legal bonds held husband and wife together, there was nothing but the sham and mockery of marriage, and the law should set them free. Divorces, or the desire for them, will be less frequent as men and women advance in intelligence, education, and self-control. The loose construction, the confusion, the illogical form, and the disagreement of the laws in the several states concerning marriage and divorce were denounced by the preacher as disgraceful to our civilization, and as the real causes of many of the frauds practiced by persons without principle.

The Secret of the North Pole.

There are three principal directions in which explorers hav attempted to approach the North Pole. The first is by way of the sea which lies between Greenland and Spitzbergen. We include under this head Sir Edward Parry's attempt to reach the pole by crossing the ice-fields which lie to the north of Spitzbergen. The second is that by way of the straits which lie to the west of Greenland. The third is that pursued by Russian explorers who hav attempted to cross the frozen seas which surround the northern shores of Siberia.

In considering the limits of the unknown north-polar regions, we shall also hav to take into account the voyages which hav been made around the northern shores of the American continent in the search for a "northwestern passage." The explorers who set out upon this search found themselvs gradually forced to seek higher and higher latitudes if they would find a way round the complicated barriers presented by the ice-bound straits and islands which lie to the north of the American continent. And it may be noticed in passing, as a remarkable and unforeseen circumstance, that the farther north the voyagers went the less severe was the cold they had to encounter. We shall see that this circumstance has an important bearing on the considerations we shall presently hav to deal with.

One other circumstance respecting the search for the northwest passage, though not connected very closely with our subject, is so singular and so little known that we feel tempted to make mention of it at this point. The notion with which the seekers after a northwest passage set out was simply this, that the easiest way of reaching China and the East Indies was to pursue a course resembling as nearly as possible that on which Columbus had set out—if only it should appear that no impassible barriers rendered such a course impracticable. They quickly found that the American continents present an unbroken line of land from high northern latitudes far away toward the antarctic seas. But it is a circumstance worth noticing, that if the American continents had no existence, the direct westerly course pursued by Columbus was not only not the nearest way to the East Indian Archipelago, but was one of the longest routes which could possibly hav been selected. Surprising as it may seem at first sight, a voyager from Spain for China and the East Indes ought, if he sought the absolutely shortest path, to set out on an almost direct northerly route! He would pass close by Ireland and Iceland, and so near the North Pole, and onward into the Pacific. This is what is called the great-circle route; and if it were only a practicable one, would shorten the course to China by many hundreds of miles.

Let us return, however, to the consideration of the information which arctic voyagers hav brought us concerning the north-polar regions.

The most laborious researches in arctic seas are those which hav been carried out by the searchers after a northwest passage. We will therefore first consider the limits of the unknown region in this direction. Afterward we can examin the results of those voyages which hav been undertaken with the express purpose of reaching the North Pole along the three principal routes already mentioned.

If we examin a map of North America constructed in recent times, we shall find that between Greenland and Canada an immense extent of coast line has been chartered. A vast archipelago covers this part of the northern world. Or, if the strangely complicated coast lines which hav been laid down really belong to but a small number of islands, the figures of these must be of the most fantastic kind. Toward the northwest, however, we find several islands whose outlines hav been entirely ascertained. Thus we hav in succession North Devon Island, Melville Island, and Port Patrick Island, all lying north of the seventy-fifth parallel of latitude. But we are not to suppose that these islands limit the extent of our seamen's researches in this direction. Far to the northward of Wellington Channel, Captain de Haven saw, in 1852, the signs of an open sea—in other words, he saw, beyond the ice-fields, what arctic seamen call a "water sky." In 1855 Captain Penny sailed upon this open sea; but how far it extends toward the North Pole has not yet been ascertained.

It must not be forgotten that the north-west passage has been shown to be a reality, by means of voyages from the Pacific as well as from the Atlantic. No arctic voyager has yet succeeded in passing from one ocean to the other. Nor is it likely now that any voyager will pursue his way along a path so beset by dangers as that which is called the northwest passage. Long before the problem had been solved, it had become well known that no profit could be expected to accrue to trade from the discovery of a passage along the perilous straits and the ice-incumbered seas which lie to the north of the American continent. But Sir Edward Parry having traced out a passage as far as Melville Island, it seemed to the bold spirit of our arctic explorers that it might be possible, by sailing through Behring's Straits, to trace out a connection between the arctic seas on that side and the regions reached by Parry. Accordingly, McClure, in 1850, sailed in the Investigator, and passing eastward, after traversing Behring's Straits, reached Baring's Land, and eventually identified this land as a portion of Bank's Land, seen by Parry to the southward of Melville Island.

It will thus be seen that the unexplored parts of the arctic regions are limited in this direction by sufficiently high latitudes.

Turn we next to the explorations which Russian voyagers hav made to the northward of Siberia. It must be noticed, in the first place, that the coast of Siberia runs much farther northward than that of the American continent. So that on this side, independently of sea explorations, the unknown arctic regions are limited within very high latitudes. But attempts hav been made to push much farther north from these shores. In every case, however, the voyagers hav found that the ice-fields, over which they hoped to make their way, hav become gradually less and less firm, until at length no doubt could remain that there lay an open sea beyond them. How far that sea may extend is a part of the secret of the North Pole; but we may assume that it is no narrow sea, since otherwise there can be little doubt that the ice-fields which surround the shores of Northern Siberia would extend unbroken to the father shores of what we should thus hav to recognize as a strait. The thinning off of these ice-fields, observed by Baron Wrangel and his companions, affords, indeed, most remarkable and significant testimony respecting the nature of the sea which lies beyond. This we shall presently hav to exhibit more at length; in the meantime we need only remark that scarcely any doubt can exist that the sea thus discovered extends northward to at least the eightieth parallel of latitude.

We may say, then, that from Wellington Channel northward of the American continent, right round toward the west, up to the neighborhood of Spitzbergen, very little doubt exists as to the general characteristics of arctic regions, save only as respects those unexplored parts which lie within ten or twelve degrees of the North Pole. The reader will see presently why we are so careful to exhibit the limited extent of the unexplored arctic regions in this direction. The guess we shall form as to the true nature of the north-polar secret will depend almost entirely on this consideration.

We turn now to those two paths along which arctic exploration, properly so termed, has been most successfully pursued.

It is chiefly to the expeditions of Drs. Kane and Hays that we owe the important knowledge we hav respecting the northerly portions of the straits which lie to the west of Greenland. Each of these explorers succeeded in reaching the shores of an open sea lying to the north-east of Kennedy Channel, the extreme northerly limit of those straits. Hayes, who had accompanied Kane in the voyage of 1854–55, succeeded in reaching a somewhat higher latitude in sledges drawn by Esquimaux dogs. But both expeditions agree in showing that the shores of Greenland trend off suddenly toward the east at a point within some nine degrees of the North Pole. On the other hand, the prolongation of the opposit shore of Kennedy Channel was found to extend northward as far as the eye could reach. Within the angle thus formed there was an open sea "rolling," says Captain Maury, "with the swell of a boundless ocean."

But a circumstance was noticed respecting this sea which was very significant. The tides ebbed and flowed in it. Only one fact we know of—a fact to be presently discussed—throws so much light on the question we are considering as this circumstance does. Let us consider a little whence these tidal waves can hav come.

The narrow straits between Greenland on the one side, and Ellesmere Land and Grinnell Land on the other, are completely ice-bound. We cannot suppose that the tidal wave could hav found its way beneath such a barrier as this. "I apprehend," says Captain Maury, "that the tidal wave from the Atlantic can no more pass under this icy barrier, to be propagated in the seas beyond, than the vibrations of a musical string can pass with its notes a fret on which the musician has placed his finger."

Are we to suppose, then, that the tidal waves were formed in the very sea in which they were seen by Kane and Hayes? This is Captain Maury's opinion. "These tides," says he, "must hav been born in that cold sea, having their cradle about the North Pole."

But if we carefully consider the theory of the tides this opinion seems inadmissible. Every consideration on which that theory is founded is opposed to the assumption that the moon could by any possibility raise tides in an arctic basin of limited extent. It would be out of place to examin at length the principle on which the formation of tides depends. It will be sufficient for our purposes to remark that it is not to the mere strength of the moon's "pull," upon the waters of any ocean that the tidal waves owes its origin, but to the difference of the forces by which the various parts of that ocean are attracted. The whole of an ocean cannot be raised at once by the moon; but if one part is attracted more than another, a wave is formed. That this may happen, the ocean must be one of wide extent. In the vast seas which surround the Southern Pole there is room for an immensely powerful "drag," so to speak; for always there will be one part of these seas much nearer to the moon than the rest, and so there will be an appreciable difference of pull upon that part.

The reader will now see why we hav been so careful to ascertain the limits of the supposed north-polar ocean, in which, according to Captain Maury, tidal waves are generated. To accord with his views, this ocean must be surrounded on all sides by impassable barriers either of land or ice. These barriers, then, must lie to the northward of the regions yet explored, for there is open sea communicating with the Pacific all round the north of Asia and America. It only requires a moment's inspection of a terrestrial globe to see how small a space is thus left for Captain Maury's landlocked ocean. We hav purposely left out of consideration, as yet, the advances made by the arctic voyagers in the direction of the sea which lies between Greenland and Spitzbergen. We shall presently see that on this side the imaginary land-locked ocean must be more limited than toward the shores of Asia or America. As it is, however, it remains clear that, if there were any ocean communicating with the spot reached by Dr. Kane, but separated from all communication—by open water—either with the Atlantic or with the Pacific, that ocean would be so limited in extent that the moon's attraction could exert no more effectiv influence upon its waters than upon the waters of the Mediterranean—where, as we know, no tides are generated. This, then, would be a tideless ocean, and we must look elsewhere for an explanation of the tidal waves seen by Dr. Kane.

We thus seem to hav prima facie evidence that the sea reached by Kane communicates either with the Pacific or with the Atlantic, or—which is the most probable view—with both those oceans. When we consider the voyages which hav been made toward the North Pole along the northerly prolongation of the Atlantic ocean, we find very strong evidence in favor of the view that there is open water communication in this direction, not only with the spot reached by Kane, but with a region very much nearer to the North Pole.

So far back as 1607, Hudson had penetrated within 8 1-2° (or about six hundred miles) of the North Pole on this route. When we consider the clumsy build and the poor sailing qualities of the ships of Hudson's day, we cannot but feel that so successful a journey marks this route as one of the most promising ever tried. Hudson was not turned back by impassable barriers of land or ice, but by the serious dangers to which the floating masses of ice and the gradually thickening ice-fields exposed his weak and ill-manned vessel. Since his time, others hav sailed upon the same track, and hitherto with no better success.

We come now to the most conclusiv evidence yet afforded of the extension of the Atlantic ocean toward the immediate neighborhood of the North Pole. Singularly enough this evidence is associated not with a sea voyage nor with a voyage across ice to the borders of some northern sea, but with a journey during which the voyagers were throughout surrounded as far as the eye could reach by apparently fixed ice fields.

In 1827 Sir Edward Parry was commissioned by the English government to attempt to reach the North Pole. A large reward was promised in case he succeeded or even if he could get within five degress of the North Pole. The plan which he adopted seemed promising. Starting from a port in Spitzbergen, he proposed to travel as far northward as possible in sea boats, and then landing upon the ice, to prosecute his voyage by means of sledges. Few narrativs of arctic travel are more interesting than that which Parry has left of this famous "boat-and-sledge" expedition. The voyagers were terribly harassed by the difficulties of the way; and after a time, that most trying of all arctic experiences, the bitterly cold wind which comes from out the dreadful north, was added to their trials. Yet still they plodded steadily onward, tracking their way over hundreds of miles of ice with the confident expectation of at least attaining to the eighty-fifth parallel, if not to the Pole itself.

But a most grievous disappointment was in store for them. Parry began to notice that the astronomical observation by which in favorable weather he estimated the amount of their northerly progress, showed a want of correspondence with the actual rate at which they were traveling. At first he could hardly believe that their was not some mistake; but at length the unpleasing conviction was forced upon him that the whole ice-field over which he and his companions had been toiling so painfully was setting steadily southward before the wind. Each day the extent of this set became greater and greater, until at length they were actually carried as fast toward the south as they could travel northward.

Parry deemed it useless to continue the struggle

There were certainly two chances in his favor. It was possible that the north wind might cease to blow, and it was also possible that the limit of the ice might soon be reached, and that his boats might travel easily northward upon the open sea beyond. But he had to consider the exhausted state of his men, and the great additional danger to which they were subjected by the movable nature of the ice-fields. If the ice should break up, or if heavy and long-continued southerly winds should blow, they might hav found it very difficult to regain their port of refuge in Spitzbergen before winter set in or their stores were exhausted. Besides, there were no signs of water in the direction they had been taking. The water-sky of artic regions can be recognized by the experienced seamen long before the open sea itself is visible. On every side, however, there were the signs of widely extended ice-fields. It seemed, therefore, hopeless to persevere, and Parry decided on returning with all possible speed to the haven of refuge prepared for the party in Spitzbergen.

The most remarkable feature of this expedition, however, is not the high latitude which the party attained, but the strange circumstance which led to their discomfiture. What opinion are we to form of an ocean at once wide and deep enough to float an ice-field which must hav been thirty or forty thousand square miles in extent? Parry had traveled upward of three hundred miles across the field, and we may fairly suppose that he might hav traveled forty or fifty miles farther without reaching open water; also that the field extended fully fifty miles on each side of Parry's northerly track. That the whole of so enormous a field should hav floated freely before the arctic winds is indeed an astonishing circumstance. On every side of this floating ice-island there must hav been seas comparativly free from ice; and could a stout ship hav forced its way through these seas, the latitudes to which it could hav reached would hav been far higher than those to which Parry's party was able to attain. For a moment's consideration will show that the part of the great ice-field where Parry was compelled to turn back must hav been floating in far higher latitudes when he first set out. He reckoned that he had lost more than a hundred miles through the southerly motion of the ice-field, and by this amount, of course, the point he reached had been nearer the Pole. It is not assuming too much to say that a ship which could hav forced its way round the great floating ice-field would certainly hav been able to get within four degrees of the Pole. It seems to us highly probable that she would even hav been able to sail upon open water to and beyond the Pole itself.

And when we remember the direction in which Dr. Kane saw an open sea—namely, toward the very region where Parry's ice-ship had floated a quarter of a century before—it seems reasonable to conclude that there is open-water communication between the seas which lie to the north of Spitzbergen and those which lave the northwestern shores of Greenland. If this be so, we at once obtain an explanation of the tidal waves which Kane watched day after day in 1855. These had no doubt swept along the valley of the Atlantic, and thence around the northern coast of Greenland. It follows that, densely as the ice may be packed at times in the seas by which Hudson, Scoresby, and other captains, hav attempted to reach the North Pole, the frozen masses must in reality be floating freely, and there must, therefore, exist channels through which an adventurous seaman might manage to penetrate the dangerous barriers surrounding the polar ocean.

In such an expedition, chance unfortunately plays a large part. Whalers tell us that there is great uncertainty as to the winds which may blow during an arctic summer. The icebergs may be crowded by easterly winds upon the shores of Greenland, or by westerly winds upon the shores of Spitzbergen, or, lastly, the central passage may be the most encumbered, through the effects of winds blowing now from the east and now from the west. Thus the arctic voyager has not merely to take his chance as to the route along which he shall adventure northward, but often, after forcing his way successfully for a considerable distance, he finds the ice-fields suddenly closing in upon him on every side, and threatening to crush his ship into fragments. The irresistible power with which, under such circumstances, the masses of ice bear down upon the stoutest ship has been evidenced again and again; though, fortunately, it not unfrequently happens that some irregularity along one side or the other of the closing channel serves as a sort of natural dock, within which the vessel may remain in comparativ safety until a change of wind sets her free. Instances hav been known in which a ship has had so narrow an escape in this way, and has been subjected to such an enormous pressure, that when the channel has opened out again, the impress of the ship's side has been seen distinctly marked upon the massiv blocks of ice which hav pressed against her.—R. A. Proctor.

A Little Tell-tale for Freethinkers,

AND A MORAL DRAWN THEREFROM RELATING SOMEWHAT TO LABOR EMANCIPATION.

Should any one of my attentiv readers doubt, in reading my story, whether it be true in all its details, he will nevertheless admit that it may be true, and then there will be no need for further supporting its reality. But not only will the reader admit the story's possible accuracy, but more than this, if he be a Freethinker, he will experience a desire not only that the story rest on a basis of facts, but a desire to see these facts repeated often before he may die, and to see them become the rule governing events within as few centuries of delay as practicable.

When Beauregard fired the first confederate shot at the federal Fort Sumter, events found me at the head of a charcoal-iron furnace in northeastern Alabama. We made stoves and pottery with our iron, and were doing a quiet, regular, and profitable business, selling our product in Southern states and getting once in a while an order from machine shops for pieces of castings too heavy for their cupolas. As we took the precaution, when about to cast such pieces of machinery, to keep out of our furnace the bog-ore which we used to mix with our excellent red hematite when casting pottery, we made a good record with our heavy castings, and it was this good record which shaped events thereafter. But orders ceased coming in; bills could no longer be collected after the secession war had commenced.

The establishment was owned by two men widely differing in their sympathies with regard to the national questions at issue, and the result was that operation was discontinued. The northern sympathizer sold out to his southern partner and went back to Pennsylvania. My activity was cut short, and, irresolute as to what new turn to giv to my career, but preparing to leave the waters of the Coosa river possibly for the far west, I received a telegram from the remaining partner, now the sole owner. He had gone to Montgomery as a delegate. The telegram called upon me to join my former employer, and when I had entered my name at the counter of the Exchange Hotel, my employer took hold of my arm, and leading me to a secluded seat, burst forth: "Can we make cannon?" and my answer was: "Certainly, if we get pay enough for them." I then had to make an estimate on the investment further required for changing the establishment into a cannon foundry. When my estimate was handed in, Mr. G., now my employer once more, confessed not to possess the money needed, in fact, that in paying off his former partner he had exhausted all his ready means. But the next day, when returning from a session of the confederate delegates, he introduced me to two of his friends, who, he said, had made up their minds to join him in the new enterprise, they wanting me to draw up papers for them. And then they stated the conditions on which they had agreed. The furnace property as it stood, with the iron-ore quarries and a piece of land at some distance, on which we had sunk a shaft into a vein of bituminous coal, and a quarter section on the river, on which we had built cabins for the negroes, which, in our former operation, we had hired from slave-owners in the neighborhood, in fact, the property of Mr. G., was to go into the partnership at a valuation of $50,000 in gold; Mr. F., one of the new partners, was to convey to the future firm fifty full-grown male negroes, those of them as had acknowledged wives on the date of the transfer to take their wives along, the total number to be valued at $50,000 in gold. Mr. H., the other of the new partners, was to pay into the bank account of the new firm $50,000 in gold. But it was agreed, also, that the future firm should keep the works in repair, and pay the taxes thereon; should furnish subsistence to the slaves, as it would furnish fuel for the boilers and engins, all these expenses to be for joint account, each of the partners being interested in the firm, enterprise, and property of the firm at the equal rate of $50,000 each of them. The papers were drawn up carefully, and a lawyer having approved of them, they were properly signed and sealed, the owners to act as an administrativ board, and to employ an executiv officer, as which I had the honor of being employed. I started for the works with a confederate government order in my pocket for 100 cast-iron guns of different caliber, to be cast hollow and be cooled, after being cast, from their inside, and smooth-bored. The fifty slaves, all stout, strong fellows, with some good mechanics amongst them, were promptly delivered; the shops were enlarged and fitted up, and when, on June 8th, a sample gun-carriage had arrived from Chattanooga and a telegram told of the state of Tennessee having joined the confederacy, the confederate officer watching the manufacture of guns for the government could fire the three first shots from three guns manufactured in the confederacy. The hundred guns were cast, bored, and delivered, and new orders were received and executed. All were paid for in gold, and the three partners received rich dividends, amounting on first of July, 1862, to $25,000 for each of the partners.

It thus appeared that Mr. F. received as the result of about 300 working days for each of the working male negroes he had contributed to the capital of the firm (the negroes having been lodged and boarded by the firm at an expense of about twenty-five cents per head and day) a dividend of $500, or of $1.66 for every day a negro had worked.

I had besides the negroes some white free laborers (immigrants) employed, paying them $1.00 for common labor, and $1.50 to $2.00 for skilled labor, but those, equaling on the average in their action to the results obtained from slave labor, earned about $1.25 in the average, from which they paid themselvs to the boarding-house keeper for lodging and board at the rate of about 50 cents per working day, or $3.00 a week.

It thus appeared that slave labor netted to its owner, $1.66 per working day, and free labor netted 75 cents to its owner, and the main cause for this difference consisted in the fact that slave labor was counted in as a part of the capital invested in the enterprise, and free labor was not. The difference in the cost of sustenance was caused not so much by the free white laborer living better fed than the negro as by the fact that, buying for about 30 negro households, I had the goods at wholesale prices, and may hav used a little better discretion, and may be judgment, in feeding the negroes, than the boarding-master showed in setting table for his white boarders.

Although some anxiety was experienced once in a while, as when Gen. O. M. Mitchell, of Gen. Buell's Federal army-corps, had captured Huntersville early in 1862, and when Gen. Bragg was reported as falling back in the north of us, and when Sherman was at Meridian, we remained unmolested at the works by the war. We continued casting guns, and dividing profits larger than those of the first year, but when new contracts were made in 1864, the word "in gold" had to be dropped out, and the words, "currency of the confederate states," took the place. Sherman's forces came close unto us in 1864, but it was not until Gen. Hood, in December, falling back before Gen. Thomas, sent a detachment to receive what guns were ready, and to warn us of the enemy's approach, that we realized our danger. We then discontinued operation, and then, not a day before, our negroes ran away, scattering all over the country. In April, 1865, a detachment of Gen. Wilson's forces passed the Coosa on a raft, and fired all the premises; and, finding out what we had been manufacturing, blew furnaces and machinery up with quarry-powder, of which they found a quantity; some of the negroes betraying its hiding place.

Having retired in time, I succeeded in getting through the lines into New Orleans, where one of the partners—the sole remaining one—lived. The two others had joined the confederate army, and had paid for their conviction of state right vs. Union right, and of the superiority of the white race above the negro, with their blood and lives.

I found that the remaining partner had entered, with his two now defunct partners, into an additional agreement, in case they should leave their lives on the battle-field, by which the property had become exclusivly his own, but had also been encumbered in favor of their heirs. All that was now left of it consisted in the real estate with ruins thereon, and in a large deposit in a Montgomery bank of "currency of the confederate states." The slaves, contributing one-third of the capital, had, by right of war, been set free by the Emancipation act, and had availed themselvs of their liberty when we had nothing more for them to do. The works had been destroyed by Gen. Wilson's detachment. So nothing remained to me but to settle my account, tell where the books of the concern were hidden, and go my way West.

A dozen years had passed. I had come East and collected a nice little capital for a mine, which I had opened and sold when it had become worth more to my neighbors and Eastern corporations than it was to me. Imagining that I deserved a rest, I concluded to once more go over the ground of my former activity. There were many faces I desired to see once more, and I needed time for coming to a conclusion as to what I should now drive at. I was conscious of my love of adventure, which the great West had fostered only, but I also knew about some literary penchant in my blood, and between the two I could not decide as yet. Thus the Morgan steamer brought me once more to New Orleans. I found the man who had been my employer twice in a filthy looking office, doing cotton broker's business, much older and much poorer than I had known him before. He held his property in Alabama yet. Many had been wanting to buy it from him, but nobody had bought it. So he had clung to it, paying taxes on it, but owing the interest on the incumbrances. He received me with open arms, and what he never had done when he was rich and my employer he did now, invited me to his home and introduced me to his wife and daughters—ladies of refinement, but little reconciled as yet to their after-war situation. As this would hav been the wrong place for reflecting on former neglect, I accepted and passed some pleasant hours with these Creoles of strong Southern instincts. It all resulted in Mr. G. accompanying me on a trip to the Coosa river. We reached Center, took saddle-horses, passed the river on a flat-boat, and rode toward the ruins. There was considerable of change all round. Many new block-houses were to be seen, and many spots which I had known covered with young timber and underbrush were now under cotton growth. Riding along we met a negro, now a man of about thirty-five. When he had looked at us with an open mouth for a few seconds he jumped right into the air about five feet high—or that much it looked—he drawing his knees up to his chin before he alighted on the ground again, and a "Hallo" proceeded from his lungs loud enough to burst a foghorn. Well, he was one of our emancipated negroes, and from him we learned that most of them had returned to their old neighborhood and were now, most of them, owning little cotton plantations, making a scanty living from their own crop as well as from working for others.

We looked over the ruins, and when night approached, presented ourselvs at the door of a white farmer, who in the past had done much hauling for the works. We were soon comfortably seated, and with a well-furnished table before us. The news of our coming had spread fast, and when next morning I looked out of my window at sunrise, the front fence proved to be turned into a long bench by a crowd of well-built negroes, young and old, and two of them, one a fine mulatto, who had been office-boy, had learned to read, write, and figure up to some extent, now well-dressed and full-grown; the other, apparently the oldest of all those present, who formerly had run his daily shift at the boilers and blast-engin, approached the house and expressed a desire to see me first, and then their former owner. The former office-boy, now a Methodist preacher, but more desirous to work than to preach, as he stated, opened the conversation on the subject, which apparently intensely occupied their minds.

As an office-boy he had learned and known about the first arrangement between the three former owners and partners, and all the negroes who had now come with them knew about it. Mr. F., on whose plantation most of them had been born, had had one-third interest in the enterprise and property for furnishing fifty negroes to do the work, and they, the negroes, had had their board, and their master had had $1.66 a day, or in some years more than that for every one of their day's work. Now, if we would start up the furnace again, and make pottery and stoves as heretofore, the time for cannon having gone by, fifty of them, though not all the identical fellows, but when not the same, then as good ones as there were in their places, would come and do the work, and would take to begin with no more than they had for themselvs heretofore, namely, twenty-five cents a day, to keep them in grub, and then they would want one-third of all the net proceeds of the business divided amongst the fifty, and they would keep good order, and they had organized so that in case any of the fellows would not work or behave well they would get rid of him and put another one in his place, and though as a whole they would keep their title of ownership, it would attach to the single ones only as long as they would do their task, and they would do as ordered in all cases, but select their own foreman, and would themselvs put an estimate on every one of their lot, so as to make the division amongst themselvs according to merit. He then thus continued:

"We all of us hav become disgusted at the hypocrisy and cowardice of the Northern states and government, in granting to us what they call emancipation, while they withheld from us the most important and essential part of our emancipation—we mean the economical part of it. Our former masters owned us and had the benefit of the capital we or our labor represented. When we became our own owners, we found that our value had disappeared. Our masters had been robbed of it, but it was not left with us. It was sunk in the transaction. And when we inquired, "Why so?" the sole answer we ever received was, that it made all the difference in the world whether a laborer was a slave and belonged to a master who owned him. In that case labor was capital and could be counted as such, and be accepted as such, and share in dividends as such; but when the laborer was a free man and belonged to himself, and was owned by those only who as wife and children depended on him as their sole capital, in that case labor was capital no longer, and the rich people could not acknowledge such free labor as capital entitled to interest in the enterprise, and to share its profits; and why not? because free labor could always be bought for mere sustenance, and therefore need not to be allowed any further compensation, interest, or share in profits." And after a little pause, my own astonishment not allowing me to find the right answer yet, he continued:

"We fail to see or understand that, now we are free, we are worth less than we were worth when slaves, or that our emancipation should justly assign to us a lower position in the economical order of things than we occupied heretofore. We rather believe that if white laborers do occupy such a lower position than we did, we should not be forced down to their level, but they also should be emancipated economically, so as to represent the labor capital as we did; and if so emancipated, they would soon succeed to organize so as to establish the relativ values they represent, the same as we fifty hav organized and estimated ourselvs singly by majority vote."

I had, in formers years, read almost all the socialistic literature of Germany, France, and England, had myself deeply felt that there was something rotten in the position of the laboring classes. There was a practical solution—labor capital—entitled first as the money invested in boiler and engin to fuel—to sustenance while working—then to share in profits. Every laborer—menial or mental—representing a capital-value, owned by himself exclusivly, or jointly with those depending on him for sustenance; increase in value of enterprise during his working life-time or his connection being his accumulation as well as what he may save from dividends—a glorious idea!

I requested the committee to let me hav three days for considering the matter. Then I asked for ten days more. Mr. G. and I went to see the heirs of his former partners. One sold out and the other took the former interest in place of his claims. I joined with some money, and then we made the contract with our friends the negroes. They hav been joined by some white men, mechanics, to complete the fifty, the white men being voluntarily valuated pro rata higher than any negro except the preacher, who is now bookkeeper. We others hold the other two-thirds. No gang of laborers ever worked with greater emulation, never laborers were closer kept to duty, than they do keep one another; nowhere loss and leakage is more closely prevented.

We make stones and pottery, make coke from coal on our own land, and mix it with charcoal in the furnace, and with a portion of bog ore run with our red hematite, our castings hav corners as sharp as chisels, and the bookkeeper, in answer to questions as to what the labor capital will be entitled to at the end of the first full year's operations, has nothing to say, but a broad, bright smile spreads all over his face. We hav a store which sells at little above cost, and the laborers there hav credit for their sustenance money, and if, as is seldom done, they ask for money, they get it as a loan, payable out of their dividends at the now approaching end of the year. So far I see no inconvenience resulting from the arrangement, but a great many advantages to all concerned. One man died. A new comer took his place, agreeing to let the dead man's wife hav part of his share for a certain time to come. Another got on a drunk, and failed to put in an appearance. A substitute was found by his fellows, and when this had happened three times, the committee men announced that by their covenant he had been expelled for good, and a substitute had been put in. There is rather to much ore on hand broken in the quarries, because the force we can send there get ahead better now than ever they did twelve years ago, and a second furnace is contemplated if the first year's result will allow it and the labor capital will contribute its share to costs from dividends.

It is true that thus the original character of the investment will partly be lost, but as also new labor capital may be added at a valuation regulated by the laborers amongst themselvs, and in being properly accounted for pro rata to the existing investment, the original arrangement will not be disturbed.

MORAL.—Labor is capital, as money and property are.

The Liberal Club.

The 338th regular meeting of the Manhattan Liberal Club, held on the evening of the 2d inst, opened peacefully. Mr. Wakeman brought the assemblage to order by rapping on the table with a little mallet, and called for the reading of the records. The new secretary read the minutes of the previous meeting in a voice that showed a manifest inclination to sink into his boots. The chairman then invited attention to the valuable nature of the last two issues of THE TRUTH SEEKER—one containing Col. Ingersoll's lecture, and the other Mr. Andrews's reply to Herbert Spencer. He also called notice to Man, which is getting into deep water on the subject of Spiritualism. Mrs. Elmina Slenker had taken an oar, and great trouble was apprehended before they got through with it.

Mrs. Imogene C. Fales, president of the Sociologic Society, was introduced as the speaker of the evening. She is an engaging lady, apparently on the desirable side of middle age. The lecture, the title of which was "Co-operation and Progress," was read from manuscript, and set forth that the condition of labor was most deplorable and pauperism on the increase. Meanwhile, wealth accumulated in the hands of the rich. Children who should be at school are obliged to labor in some places from fifteen to seventeen hours per day for insignificant pay. Women were also degraded by being forced to work for inadequate renumeration. This state of things breeds immorality and crime. The cause of this disastrous condition of affairs, Mrs. Fales held, was competition; the remedy, co-operation between capital and labor and a more general prevalence of the Christian religion. The lecture closed with a poem, a part of which ran as follows:

"And the smiths shall liv on the coarsest fare,
With the little that they may call their own,
While the idler is free from work and care,
For the best of all shall go the drone.
And the smith complains of the anvil's song—
Complains of the years he has wrought and pined;
For the priest and rulers are swift to wrong,
And the mills of God are slow to grind.

"But a clear, strong voice from over the sea
Is piercing the murk of the moral night.
Time is, time was, and time shall be
That John o' the smithy shall hav his right.
And those who hav worn the miter and crown,
Who hav pressed him sore in body and soul,
Shall perish from earth when the grist is ground,
And the mighty miller claims his toll."

Mr. Hunn, taking the platform first, said that it was out of the question to expect that capital would co-operate with labor. Labor had always been ready and willing to take an interest in the business of its employer, but the employer had never offered to share the profits with his employees. Whatever labor demanded it should take by political action. Workingmen cannot look to Christianity for aid, because the ministers are upheld and the churches are filled with the very men who seek to keep the prices of labor down. There was an irrepressible conflict between labor and capital.

Mr. E. H. Heywood, who has come to New York for the purpose of abolishing death and taxes in this municipality and elsewhere, was invited to the platform by Capt. Putnam. He said capital, being the result of labor, had no rights at all. "Interest is robbery!" "Pay no rent!" these words the English government found stronger than dynamite. Mr. Heywood thanked the club for the timely financial aid it had rendered him in his fight for the liberty of printing. The Comstock laws were a menace to freedom. They needed but the word "obscene" changed to "incendiary," as applied to literature, to imprison all labor and socialistic agitators.

Mr. Cohen, the member from Jerusalem, seeing that the lady speaker had begun the business, consented to quote scripture also, which he proceeded to do with great versatility. He would call attention to the passage which condemned every man to eat his bread in the sweat of his "brows." Any man, he admitted, who could earn a million dollars in the sweat of his brows was welcome to it. Mr. Cohen recurred to this text several times, the peculiarity of his accent and pronunciation convulsing his hearers with laughter to a dangerous degree; and then, having worked that passage for all it was worth, he came out with another: "Do unto others as thou wantst others to do unto you." The effect of this new rendering of the Golden Rule was cataclysmal. It appeared especially funny to the ladies, and they laughed gleefully. Mr. Cohen's facilities for English speech are hardly commensurate with his fecundity of thought, but he is usually right.

Professor Vaughan, of Virginia, accused several eminent persons of stealing his thunder and giving it to the people. As for himself, he was a martyr. If he were to go back to the pulpit, the genius of the world would become a sycophant at his feet. The cause of misery in this world was the condition of woman. "So long," said he "as man is the bread-winner, woman is a slave." We should crucify capital upon the cross of public contempt and odium.

A small gentleman who gave the name of Mars reached the platform and announced that he was not a member. Mr. Wakeman interrupted to say that that was just where the trouble began; none but members were allowed to speak, except on invitation. This had no effect on Mr. Mars. He began his speech. Mr. Wakeman said he must limit his remarks to five minutes. Mr. Mars smiled grimly and proceeded, and Mr. Wakeman sat helplessly but serenely down. The small man said that when a person hears ideas expressed that call his soul up in him it is hard to sit still. He was a Christian Socialist, and could not understand how anyone could fail to believe in Christ.

Mr. Andrews said Mr. Heywood was on the right track. Capital had no rights. No rent should be paid beyond the extent to which the property had deteriorated during the time it was occupied by the tenant. As for dynamite, it was an important civilizing agent. It placed a new power in the hands of the people, and the rulers were learning to respect it. The recent remark of Gladstone, that the trouble with the Irish would not cease till England did Ireland justice, showed this; as did also a late speech of the Hon. Abram Hewitt, which sounded as if it had come from the Liberal Club itself.

Mrs. Fales, in taking the floor to answer her critics, upheld the rights of property. Interest was right; rent was necessary; co-operation was imperativ. She invited Mr. Wakeman to giv his opinion. The chairman said he was sorry to see six people giv themselvs away as the preceding speakers had done. Mrs. Fales's co-operation would not do. Cohen's Socialism was not good. Heywood's Individualism, ditto. Mr. Vaughan would serve as a melancholy example—a monument of what to avoid. The real scheme was unselfish devotion to the supreme man, humanity.

At the next meeting Mr. Clinton Furbish will expose himself to annihilation by bringing up the subject of "Pantarchism in Politics."

Comstockism Again.

A curious feature of the obscenity craze has recently developed. On the 19th of December last, a young man named Muller was convicted before Judge Brady in the New York Oyer and Terminer, of selling indecent pictures. The fact was that in, the course of his business as a dealer in rare books and art works, he sold photographs of pictures which were exhibited in the Paris Salon, in which nude figures appeared. One of the jury, when reproached for this infamous verdict, and told that the Paris Salon was the highest tribunal in the art world, is said to hav replied, "Vell, ve av saloons enough in New York vere dey av such biedures." He thought the Paris Salon was something like the beer saloons in which he had received his art education, and he was willing to display his own great purity of mind at Muller's expense.

Shortly after this conviction, Judge Brady made a violent effort to shirk his responsibility by writing a letter to a New York paper in which he said substantially that the law was all wrong, and endeavored to convey the idea that he was all right. The General Term of the Supreme Court subsequently distinguished themselvs by affirming this conviction and it is now on appeal to the Court of Appeals.

On the 1st May, instant, the New York Herald presented to its readers pictures of nude figures copied from those exhibited in the last Paris Salon. The selling of these papers was precisely the same offense for which Muller was convicted. It had been decided by the case of Muller that such pictures were obscene, and the law is explicit and clear that he who sells or exhibits such pictures shall be punished, and therefore every newsdealer, stationer, or train boy who sold one of the papers was precisely as guilty as Muller, and in the same degree and to the same extent, and as liable to the punishment of the law. Moreover, every person who mailed one of these papers was liable to be tried and convicted under the United States laws before Comstock's judge in a court where the obscenists boast that they never lose a case. Here is a vast field for blackmailing enterprise suddenly thrown open, and we wait with interest the attacks upon the quarter of a million people who hav sold, exhibited, or mailed the New York Herald of May 1st, 1884. Verily, great is the majesty of the law. E. W. C.

The Uselessness of "Christian Homes."

NOTHING BUT A MOCKERY AND AN EXCUSE FOR BEGGING.

From the Chicago Daily News.

At 5 o'clock yesterday afternoon a young woman rang the bell at the Woman's Christian Association, 1514 and 1516 Wabash avenue, and was admitted to the presence of the matron, a pleasant-faced, sweet-voiced lady, with white hair, and black eyes shaded with heavy black lashes.

"I am engaged," she said, without rising from the little, orderly desk at which she was writing, "but if you will be seated I will see you in a moment." The wait gave the visitor a chance to look around the room, which contained only ordinary furniture, but everything was scrupulously neat. There was a stand of house plants in the window, a bed in one corner of the room, and a basketful of freshly-laundried house linen under the center table. The house was as quiet as a deserted nunnery, but strongly flavored with boiling cabbage.

"Now I am at your service. What did you wish?" the matron finally said.

"Hav you any vacant rooms?"

"Not vacant rooms, but plenty of beds. We hav to employ the doubling-up system, and there are several rooms in which a new boarder would not be objectionable.

"Prices range from $3.50 to $6 a week, according to location."

"Are there no accommodations for less?" was asked.

"That is the bottom figure."

"I suppose the house is open to all classes of working women?"

"Well, yes; but I could not admit you till you hav been approved by the committee of arrangements. You will hav to produce references as to your Christian character, and show that you will be a reliable boarder."

"Well, I cannot furnish any references. I am a stranger in the city—came here in January, and do not know one person in the state from whom I could get a testimony of character. I left Davenport, Iowa, to begin life for myself and took a position in a State street wholesale jewelry house as assistant bookkeeper and assistant cashier. I had the misfortune to incur the displeasure of the head cashier, who used his influence against me, and I was discharged without a moment's warning. Though I am conscious of having done my work faithfully, I hav not asked for a recommendation from the firm, but I hav always been conceited enough to think that I had the appearance of a lady. However, you may be of a different opinion, but as a woman I appeal to your womanly heart for consideration."

"You hav friends in Davenport; why not write to your former pastor for a letter?"

"I had no pastor."

"Then you did not belong to the church? You are not a Christian?"

"No," said the girl, "I never was a member of any church, but that does not debar me from calling myself a Christian."

"Well, but we are all church-members in the house. Everybody is obliged to attend some Protestant church on Sunday, and to participate in morning and evening prayers. If you are not a believer in Christ's church I do not think it would be desirable to hav you in the association, for you might express some opinions derogatory to religion that would hav a very bad influence on the other young ladies, and of course it is our purpose to avoid any such evil."

With some reference to the luxuries of the freedom of speech, the girl intimated that she would furnish bonds to keep the peace in all controversial points, and continued: "The woman with whom I hav been boarding is going to break up house-keeping next week and I must get some place to liv to-morrow. As I told you, I am out of a situation and hav nobody to help me and nothing to depend on but my own exertions. May I come in your house on probation, or until I can find safe accommodation? I hav very little money—not enough to pay a week's board—but I will giv you my watch and chain as security."

"No, I could not accept you. You will hav to go before the committee and be examined; we must take precaution; I cannot tell whether you are reputable or not, and it is essential for the good of the boarders that your reputation be satisfactorily established. The committee met yesterday; the ladies are not supposed to carry the business of the association to their private homes, and I think you will not be able to see them until next week. Come in on Tuesday at 2 o'clock and you can hav an audience," and the silver-haired matron bowed her friendless, homeless, moneyless sister out into the big, strange city, with its temptations and vices, the only avenues not closed against her.

Musings by the Way.

Is God of nature a component part,
Of things material the soul and heart?
Inherent in all nature doth he dwell,
As Pope's immortal lines so wisely tell?
" All are but parts of one stupendous whole,
Whose body nature is, and God the soul."
Are nature's laws expressions of his power?
Does he dwell in the rock, or plant, or flower?
Is life the exhibition of his will?
Does he the life in plant and beast instil?
Doth he dwell in the planets in their course,
Of this great universe the moving force,
Who dwells inherent in its every part,
" As full, as perfect, in a hair as heart?"
The only theory of God that can Convince the mind and please the heart of man.
On such a theme as this none can know aught;
The subject is too deep for human thought.
Our faculties their narrow limit reach
Before to us they aught of God can teach.
Something we learn of nature and her laws,
We cannot know of their inherent cause.
Nor need we care. Our time we waste away
Investigating this. As well to say
That God's the essence of material things,
Or say that each from its own nature springs.
No mystery from the mind could be removed
By having God's existence clearly proved.
The child who, told "God made all things," replied,
" And who made God?" had reason on his side.
Too much the mind of man has dwelt on themes
On which his thoughts were superstitious dreams;
Too long for truth has put his trust in creeds,
In books deemed sacred, and miraculous deeds;
Has turned away from nature and her laws
To fruitless speculations on their cause.
'Tis time to learn this, and devote the mind
To studying nature's laws their truth to find,
The only source of wisdom given to man
By which to understand creation's plan.
Let man leave things he has no power to learn,
To those within his mental grasp to turn;
To know of God man seems to hav no need,
Still less of superstitious form and creed.
To cultivate his intellectual powers,
And rise to that high plain by birthright ours,
By reason governed to that high degree
Which sets the mind from superstition free,
And, leaving all that's mean, and vile, and base,
Instructs, improves, and elevates his race;
To study nature, and material things,
Great source from which all human duty springs—
These should be man's more high and noble aims,
And nobler far than superstition claims.
His duties man has faculties to know,
Nor needs a revelation them to show.
What duty to our fellow-man requires
Is shown by our own wishes, needs, desires.
Before our birth we know of no life here,
And here no signs of future life appear.
If we liv here a life of real worth
We need not fear a life beyond the earth.
Our business is with life on earth to-day,
And not with one beyond the mists away.

W. R. Dyer.

The Nebular Hypothesis False.

It is amusing to me to read the speculations based upon the Laplace hypothesis of cooling worlds. Undoubtedly if the earth was once a ball of liquid fire, it must hav cooled fastest at the poles; and possibly in that case life would hav begun in the arctic circle when the equatorial belt was too hot for any form of life. But how much time do scientists allow for life-history on our planet? Forty-eight million years, at least, says Geologist Dana. A hundred million, says Sir William Thompson. Two hundred million, says Haughton, and thousands of millions, say others.

But what do astronomical scientists say? According to their data, not more than eighteen million years can be allowed for the contraction of our earth from infinit space; and in the course of five million years our sun will be reduced to half its present volume, when of course all life on this earth will hav ceased. See Newcomb's "Popular Astronomy," 1879, pp. 515–519.

The Laplace theory is a baseless assumption. There is no proof that our sun is contracting. All worlds are growing by meteoric accretion, and the only source of internal heat is the pressure of gravity. When our earth has grown to the size of Jupiter it will be red-hot at the surface, like that planet; and when it attains the size of our sun it will shine like the sun. Our solar system has but one sun; others hav two, and some probably more. W. H. Burr.

"Calling" Ministers.

On the subject of special calling to the ministry, a writer in the Sunday Gazetteer says: "There is hardly a preacher living, who is bound up by the creeds of men, whether he be educated (in books) or uneducated—possessing learned ignorance, or natural ignorance, but will claim that God has in some mysterious way called him to 'go and preach the gospel.' Since the death of the apostle John, there is no account that God ever called any one especially to the ministry. If he did, Ingersoll ought to get up one more lecture and call it 'The Mistakes of God.'

"About ninety-nine out of every hundred who are trying to teach the people know about as much in regard to the spirit of truth as a Hindoo priest does of the pretended vision of old Mother White, the witch of Battle Creek, Michigan.

"Among the great number who claim to hav been called to preach, there is hardly two of them that hav been called in the same way.

"I once knew a man back in old hoosierdom who claimed that he was called to preach in the following manner, which I will state in his own language, as I received it from him. He said: 'Once upon a time, while I was out hunting 'coons, all at once while alone near Pattie's garden, I took my seat by the root of a large gum-tree, and while meditating upon my wickedness, all at once a light shone around me above the brightness of the sun, and I heard a voice calling unto me and saying: "Jefferson, Jefferson, where art thou?" And I said, "Here am I, Lord, what wilt thou hav me to do?" And the Lord said, "Go preach."'

"In Missouri I knew another man that was called too. He was called on this wise: A mischievous fellow climbed up in a bushy tree near by where a wicked man was plowing, by the name of Joab ——, and called out to him—'Joab-a-dab, go preach my gospel.' This he repeated the third time, when the fellow unhitched his horse from the plow and went to his house, and informed his wife that he was not going to whip her any more, and when she asked him for an explanation, he said, 'I am called to preach.'

"In another neighborhood, same state, I knew another fellow that was called by his neighbor's donkey, which noise he mistook for an angel calling him and saying, 'Go preach, go preach, go preach.' And 'go preach' he did.

"I once knew a 'preacher woman' up in Iowa who actually said God took two of her children because she would not respond to the call, and to save the rest from the same fate, she at last consented to 'go preach.'

"It is said of the renowned Caskey, of Texas, that he once went to a certain place to preach, and as he was going into the pulpit, he espied a dog which had taken possession of it. Calling a halt, and in a forbidding manner looked down upon the animal, he said, 'You may be called to preach, too, but this is my appointment.'

"The time might hav been during the age of the wooden moldboard, tin grate, and log school-house, for a man to claim such nonsense, but not now. The world has outlived all such assertions.

"What the world is in need of just now is more teachers and less 'preachers;' more school-house (not sectarian manufacturing companies) and less 'church' houses, and more truth and less humbug.

"This calling business has just about as much sense in it as for a man or a woman to stand up before intelligent people (eighteen hundred years since the death of Christ) and declare that they are 'living witnesses for Jesus,' when the truth is, they never saw him (unless they are near 2,000 years of age), or any one else who ever did. If such people are the light of the world, deliver me from the darkness. I wonder if any of these so-called preachers would actually go before a magistrate and make oath that they had been called by divine authority to preach. No, they will not do it. They don't believe it themselvs. And if there should be such, then the authorities ought to take them into custody, and hav a room provided for them in some benevolent institution for lunatics."

Chapter XXIX.

ANDERSONVILLE.

Heart-sickening, terrible, it was—that gloomy prison-pen. It was a starless night of desolation that brooded over the unfortunate ones. How much better to die in battle than thus linger in the chambers of disease, where so many ghastly forms are hovering, so many faces pale with despair, so many sinking hourly into unknown graves. The days, the weeks, and the months creep by, while the suffering grows more intense and the horror more painful. The bravest and the strongest yield at last to the slow torture. Only those divinely gifted temperaments that can be mirthful even in the midst of the most disastrous environments could survive the awful strain upon spirit and flesh.

It is only with smiles and laughter, after all, that we can bid defiance to the fates. The gift of humor is the imperial gift indeed. It crowns man with greater power than all the solemnities of thought. The sublimest of poets is he who can touch us with the sweetest cheer.

Our friends survived the dreadful ordeal simply because on every possible opportunity they would crack a joke. Whether there was meat in it or not, somehow or other it kept them alive. The poorest joke was their best friend.

A most melancholy spectacle they did present indeed—all rags, and half dirt, and decidedly lean. The doctor's two hundred and fifty pounds of flesh had dwindled amazingly, although it had certainly fought a good fight, and only yielded inch by inch to the advance of starvation.

"You'll catch up with us after awhile, doctor," said Stubbs. "I think that on the home-stretch you won't weigh much more than I."

"I feel as if I was a vacuum already," said the doctor. "My Waterloo is surely approaching. I have only my bony part for the fight."

"Oh, horrible! That's the worst pun yet. Only a starving man could have thought it out. I'll bet this last whiff of tobacco that you can't make a poorer one."

"Give me the tobacco first and then I'll try it."

"I'll divide, and then farewell to the weed. There's no chance after this to buy or steal any."

"There is no lower deep indeed. If I can't smoke then I ham not——"

"You've struck it this time, John Bull and all. A worse joke was never yet perpetrated by mortal man. The stakes are yours."

"Nevertheless you shall have your half; only, as being the bigger man, I will take the better half."

"The halves are so small it's pretty difficult to tell which is the feminine half without a microscope."

"You divide with Jones and I'll divide with Cupples, and in that way we shall probably reach the ultimate atom and solve the problem of the universe."

"Small favors thankfully received," said Cupples. "My teeth are almost dropping out, but I guess I can demolish this."

"This is the last round," cried Jones; "after this only bone soup."

"Why not toss up for our own bones," said Cupples. "I feel as if mine were of no further use. I have no flesh to hang on them. I'll bequeath them to the highest bidder."

"We'll take our evening stroll. Something may happen," said the doctor.

"Don't lay that flattering unction to your soul," cried Stubbs. "In these days it's a perfect blank, and nothing happens. No prizes in this lottery."

"Better keep a-going, though; that's always my advice to the sick. So long as a man can move he won't die."

"Then let's move, for I've made up my mind not to die."

The melancholy quartette pursued their slow and serpentine path around the narrow inclosure, with a desperate thought, almost, to pass the dead-line and end the tragedy. But, somehow or other, hope still whispered in their hearts.

The rebel soldiers, not much better off than their prisoners, managed to enjoy themselves after a fashion and eagerly caught at every new thing that might enlighten their monotonous occupation. A couple of Indian or Gypsy women had strolled into the encampment, and were attracting crowds by their tricks of sleight-of-hand and intricate dancing and wild songs. They were quaintly dressed, with bright colors, head-dresses of gorgeous feathers, and little tinkling bells upon their feet. Their long hair floated over their faces with graceful confusion, and their swarthy and wrinkled skin made them seem as old as the hills. They reminded one very strongly of the witches of Macbeth, they had such a thoroughly fascinating aspect, like all supremely ugly things. Extremes meet. The very ugly is as attractive as the very beautiful. They glided along with snake-like vivacity. Their performances were simply wonderful, tossing colored balls in the air, and catching them on nose and lip and brow and chin, and sending them like sparks rebounding into the air, while half a dozen bright knives went flashing to and fro in their hands, and the motion of their feet made as they advanced a soft, delicious melody. For one moment, enchanted by the delirious spectacle, the gazing prisoners seemed to forget all their misery. They crowded close to the line, rank on rank, and watched with haggard yet glistening eyes the tiny pageantry. Somehow or other it reminded them of home and of the thousand joys of memory and of hope. Such is the magic of motion, the silent music blending with such exquisit and infinit grace—a voiceless harmony, that somehow leaps into light and color and makes enchanting pictures. The guard grew less stern as they felt the influence of that rushing spell of fountain-like out-raying movement, and did not seem to care even if the vast crowd did for a moment pass over the dead-line in their eager admiration of the entrancing jugglers.

Then suddenly, spray-like, a charming voice burst forth, mingling with the tinkling bells, and lifting itself up like a flame, as if to touch the stars. Cupples seemed smote by lightning when that voice reached his ears. He knew in a moment that it was Bessie's, and those wheeling, grotesque figures were the child and her mother. He grasped Jones by the hand, and a quick recognition swept between them.

"I know who that is," whispered Jones. "Keep still. Something will come of this."

Cupples felt a quick blow upon his breast as the two swift figures surged close by him. He grasped his torn blouse and wrapped it snug to his bosom, for he felt that there was a precious freight within.

Still the figures went glancing on, and there was no sign of the communication that had been made. The glittering toys went dancing along the air. The music rang out more free and bold. There seemed a jubilance in it; the notes tossed and tumbled and chased one another onward, upward, through the sparkling air. Swifter turned the feet, and merrily clanked the bells, and the gorgeous colors mingled in bright confusion as the figures whirled in a mazy dance. All at once the panorama ceased amid the thunderous applause of the multitude; and then the two demure women with downcast eyes and indolent motion gathered a few stray pennies, and vanished almost like a dream.

"Let's unravel the secret," said Cupples. "Here's the package. That was a good shot they made. It struck me right on the heart."

"There's the nicest, keenest little saw I ever handled, almost like a diamond, it is so delicate and bright. That will open the way to liberty," said Jones.

"This a map of the country and a tiny compass," cried Cupples. "This is our guide. But here's something that I don't understand. It's all Greek to me."

"All Greek to me, too," said the colonel. "I must hand this over to the doctor."

"I can diagnose it," said the doctor. "It's a cipher, but I haven't the key, and what's the good of it?"

"We must depend on our wits for the key," said the general. "We haven't much brains if we can't find out. To begin with, the simplest explanation is the best. How would they naturally begin a note? Why, with Cupples, of course. Let's try it. The first word is C, the second, u, and so on. Wait a minute. There it is. When you know one or two letters you know the whole. Listen: 'Cupples, push due north from the oak-tree. In a gully to right we shall meet you with horses. Amy.' That's to-night, boys. Give me that saw. I know how to make a hole."

With the instrument of deliverance in their hands, it didn't take long for our adventurers to find themselves outside the barracks. Vast clouds floated through the heavens, gilded with the resplendent moonlight. On a little knoll about a mile away towered the noble oak, their first landmark. Its broad arms swung against the sky as if with a joyous welcome. Toward this they hurried, and soon stood beneath its cathedral canopy. Now for due north; but a sudden darkness filled the sky. The moonlight was quenched in tremendous drifts, and the low roll of thunder was heard.

"A match," cried the colonel. "We must read the compass."

Not a match, however, was in the crowd, and they could not tell which way the magnetic needle pointed.

"What shall we do?" cried Cupples; "no moonlight and no brimstone."

"There's always light," cried Jones as he swung his arm round and caught a fire-fly. "A man's a damn fool that can't pick his way anywhere."

He held the tiny creature close to the compass, and the thousand motions of its little wings flashed radiant jets upon the trembling needle, whose vibrating point revealed the hidden heavens wherein the star of freedom was blazing.

Onward they pushed through the intense blackness, under the impetuous guidance of Col. Jones, who seemed to know by instinct just where to advance. The rain poured while they plunged forward into deeper gulfs of the encircling forest. Suddenly the black walls flashed with dazzling brightness, as they broke into a narrow gully. It flared with radiance, bursting and shimmering from a couple of pine torches in the hands of Amy and Bessie, who were suberbly mounted, and beside them swift steeds impatiently pawed the ground.

"Mount and away," cried Amy; "I know the road."

Instantly they mounted and dashed after the retreating figures of the mother and child, who could ride as skilfully as any of them, and with the same exultant freedom; for they sat upon their horses a la Grace Greenwood, in manly fashion, and not with awkward feminine grace. Instead of being on the horse like a civilized woman, they were a part of the horse like a civilized man, and moved harmoniously with its fiercest motion.

"So you can ride as well as sing and dance," cried Cupples as he dashed alongside these brilliant equestriennes.

"I have learned to do everything," said Amy. "Why not?"

"That isn't quite feminine is it? There are some things a woman shouldn't know."

"Not if a man knows them. Woman should be as universal as man in knowledge and capacity."

"I see you are quite independent, and can get along without us."

"Indeed we can, and that's the glory of living for a woman—to know what man knows, only know it a little better."

"That's woman all over; she's bound to be ahead."

"Of course; because she has both reason and instinct. A woman guesses; a man can only reckon. The clouds are breaking. See the light on the hills."

The morning indeed just touched with roses the distant horizon. The stars glittered and grew faint in the advancing brilliancy, while a thousand jewels hung in the green dome beneath which the fugitivs swiftly passed. The rosy splendor increased, and the clouds that lingered about the orient sky in heavy columns and fantastic fleecy lightness, sparkled with multiplying hues that seemed fresh born each moment from the bosom of the day, whose pathway was more and more illuminated as it pressed onward to its midday throne.

"Just an hour's halt," said Amy as they galloped to the bank of a rivulet. "Here's a good place. It looks as if no mortal foot had ever trod it before."

It was indeed a secluded spot in the very depths of the forest and the mountains. It was like a vast amphitheater hedged in by lofty and pine-crowned hills that stretched away in desolate grandeur. Just back of our little company could be heard the thunder of the stream whose wild waters were leaping over a precipice fifty or sixty feet in hight. As one threw back the interlacing branches of the immense foliage, a vision of transcendent loveliness burst upon the view. The white glory of the cataract appeared spreading and glittering like a bridal veil, floating like soft sweet draperies in the gentle air, and then dropping like a mass of diamonds on the mossy stones beneath, from whence like a suddenly unloosed steed the exultant river forward swept.

The party rushed up, spread their hands, and drank of the gleaming waters.

"Here's luck," cried Jones, "right from the skies."

"Plenty of luck if we have pluck," said the doctor.

In a few moments they plunged on again, until the occident seemed to receive into its bosom the wealth of the morning and the noon, and the retreating day glowed with rival adornments. Again, the night flung its stars along boundless space, while the great northern light flamed on its familiar tower like some friendly beacon.

"We are in the most dangerous spot," said Amy; "the great army of the Confederacy lies somewhere between here and the Union troops."

"You know the country well."

"I do. I studied it faithfully because I knew that we were to take this trip."

"You knew we were in prison, then!"

"After awhile. Bessie had a strong impression that you were. I searched and discovered the truth."

"So we owe this rescue to an impression! That's good for Spiritualism."

"Perhaps so; but I didn't follow the impression until I verified it. An impression is a good thing to start with, but a poor thing to end with. Reason after all is our guide."

"I see you are pretty sound. You evidently study things originally."

"I have been compelled to. You can't deal with nature second hand, and make a living."

"Where are we now?"

"I don't know. Our only safety is to go right forward."

On through the pathless wilderness still they struggled. Suddenly they halted on the brow of a mighty precipice. A myriad lights were blazing before them far and near, tossing in and out among the hills, and covering the broad valleys and fields. Even to the distant horizon the fires leaped,

"This is a rebel encampment. If we are in the picket-lines we are lost, for sixty thousand men are in those tents. Hark!"

The noise of approaching troops was heard. Instantly, not ten rods away, a picket-company appeared as if from the caverns of the earth. The officer of the day was approaching. There was apparently no escape.

"Shall we fight?" cried the men.

"No," cried Amy, "that would be useless. Let us wait and see."

Infidel Philosophy.

Gen. xxii, 16. "And he delivered them into the hands of his servants, every drove by themselvs, and said unto his servants, Pass over before me and put a space betwixt drove and drove."

Of what imaginable benefit can it be to the world, after so many centuries hav passed by, to know how Jacob drove his cattle? I defy any man to write about anything of less importance. And yet this silly stuff is found in the Bible and palmed off on the unsuspecting as the word of God. Christians, are you not ashamed of the imbecility of the God you worship? If he had told the world something about utilizing the power of steam, or about the solar system, or about the art of printing, or telegraphy, or geology, it would hav been to some purpose. But no, it is of vastly more importance to the Christian to know about the "mandrake dicker," and the manner of driving cattle. "Great God and little fishes!"

Let the lady teachers call up their Sunday classes and read Gen. xxxi, 35; Gen. xxxviii, 27, 28, 29, 30, and Gen. xxxix, 7. If these passages are the word of God, they cannot be impure, neither can they be imperfect, for God is both pure and perfect. There is not one teacher in a thousand who would read these passages before her classes in the Sabbath school.

Lady teachers, I would like to hav you ask yourselvs why you would not read this scripture to your classes. No matter whether you believe that God is the author of this language or not, the reason why you would not read it before your classes is because it is too low and filthy. Did God ever write or indite anything that is too foul for the pure chamber of a woman's mind? There are very few women who would not feel grieved and insulted if such language were imputed to them. My fair sisters, is it possible that God has written something that you are ashamed of? Every noble-minded man takes a just pride in seeing the dignity of woman everywhere maintained. Two-thirds of all the Sabbath-school teachers in the country are women; and if the idea is to be impressed upon the minds of the young, that the filth in the passages above referred to is the word of God, I would rather regard woman as being too pure to do it. And the question arises whether it is possible for them to sustain the position of high-toned and intelligent women and teach the young that such indecent thoughts and unsavory sentences are a part of the word of God.

Abner Kneeland was imprisoned for what was termed blasphemy, but I doubt if he ever taught the young that such indecent language is a part of the word of God.

Bible believers are compelled to lay great stress on dreams. The wonderful conception of Jesus Christ has no other foundation to rest upon than a dream. In Gen. xli, 7, will be found an account of a dream which shows that in Bible times men dreamed just as foolishly as they do at the present time. Men dream of flying, they dream of seeing dead friends, and of attending the funeral of friends still living, and many other foolish and impossible things. Pharaoh dreamed that he saw one ear of corn eat up another ear. What of it? Suppose the president should dream that he saw one ear of corn eat up another, and suppose it should become known that he consulted the postmaster-general, and the secretary of state, and the attorney-general, and many others, to find out the meaning of his dream, would not nine out of every ten, who might hear of the circumstance, believe that the president's brain had become addled?

But this is what a great king did. And every Christian dude will tell you that God had a great deal to do with Pharaoh's dream. If God ever paid any attention to the folly of such a dream, it shows that he was just as big a fool as any of the rest of the fools who lived in Pharaoh's time. A dream would not hav a feather's weight in a court of justice now, and yet the Christian lays great stress on dreams when he does not know who dreamed, or when, or who told the story, simply because the statement is written in a certain book. "There is something rotten in the state of Denmark" when the chamber of the mind is robbed of that which is useful and filled with such rubbish. And when it is filled with stinkpots it is a thousand times worse, and this is the reason I hav so often called the attention of the ladies to the nature of their Sunday work. I am deeply interested in women and human kind, and for that reason I would hav every one consider wel what she does when she teaches the young that the Bible is the word of God.

I hav now gone through one book of the Bible, and pointed out a few only of the many absurdities, immoralities, and impossibilities contained in it. In like manner, if time could be spared, I might go through the other books and show that not one is a faultless production, as it should be if it emanated from a perfect being. I propose to glance through the other books and notice some of the more glaring absurdities and contradictions.

Let anyone read the book of Genesis carefully, and doubtless many errors and fallacies would be observed which I hav not noticed. "Search the scriptures" is a Bible command, but the time has come when the Infidel is more interested in having the people search scriptures than the minister. I wish I could induce all, especially young men who hav long and useful lives before them, to study the scriptures more carefully. I heard a minister say not long ago that when one began to criticise the scriptures he might know the devil was after him. Don't be afraid of the devil, but weigh every sentence, always asking yourselvs if this is the language of God. Ever bear in mind that God knew the result of every act from the beginning, that he has power to do everything in his own way, and that nothing in the broad universe can escape his "all-seeing eye."

Exodus ii, 1–5. Here is an account of a marriage, and, as far as can be learned from the narrativ, a first child born—a son. Owing to a decree of Pharaoh, the mother hid the infant among the flags. After the child was hid, his sister watched him to see "what would be done to him." Read the verses carefully, and then thank your stars that you are not compelled to tell where that sister came from.

I hav not the time to quote enough scripture to bring fully before the reader's mind all the judgments and wonders brought about in Egypt by God, Moses, Aaron, and the magicians. But I would advise all to read a few chapters of Exodus, beginning with the fourth, and ending with the twelfth. These chapters, with the "Age of Reason," acted as an eye-opener to me long years ago, and saved me from a life of mental bondage.

I remember well the beautiful Sunday that I lay with my head pillowed on the root of a giant oak, with the birds singing over my head, and read those chapters. To-day I sit with the same Bible before me, referring to marginal notes made with a pencil on that Sunday, over forty years ago. I hav read those chapters many times since that day, and every time they hav filled me more and more with disgust. O Christian, can you believe that such outrageous lies show the finger-marks of God?

Suppose a man should tie up his son and then command him to do something, and then punish him in the most brutal and inhuman manner because he did not do it, what would you think of such a man? Should not God be more reasonable and considerate than man? But this is just what God did.

Exodus vii, 3. "And I will harden Pharaoh's heart, and multiply my signs and wonders in the land of Egypt." 4. "But Pharaoh shall not hearken unto you, that I may lay my hand upon Egypt, and bring forth mine armies and my people, the children of Israel, out of the land of Egypt by great judgments."

Now, to harden Pharaoh's heart, and literally tie up his hands so that it was utterly impossible for him to comply with the requisition made upon him, and then because he did not comply to turn all the waters into blood, so that (verse 21) "the fish that was in the river died, and the river stank, and there was blood throughout all the land of Egypt," etc., and to keep on sending the most dreadful plagues and curses upon the Egyptians, shows that the Christian God can get down to meaner acts than the Bible shows the devil to be guilty of. The mind can't conceive of anything more despicable and mean, either among Gods or men.

Would it not be a wonder for the Hudson river to be turned to blood? But the Hudson is but a small stream compared to the Nile. We will suppose that Moses and Aron, with the help of God, did turn all the waters of Egypt into blood. Will some one explain how the magicians could turn the waters into blood, after Moses, God & Co., had already done it? If the magicians could turn the waters to blood once, they could twice, and then it would be bloody bloody blood. And then to think of the double-distilled stink of dead fish which had been killed the second time—whew! But it must all be so, for (shade of Munchausen!) is it not written down in scripture (22. "And the magicians of Egypt did so with their enchantments")? and didn't the minister say that all scripture is given by inspiration?

"Some books are lies frae end to end,
And some great lies were never penned.
E'en ministers they hav been kenned,
In holy ratpture,
At times a rousing whid to vend,
And nail't wi' scripture."

What a fortune such a magician would be in the hand of Barnum! It would do well enough to let him operate on a few small streams and streak the country with red here and there just to giv variety, but it wouldn't do to let him out on Lake Superior or the River St. Lawrence.

This bloody story must be a grand feast for the Christian, for he is as fond of blood as a nest of young tigers. A few years ago I would hav been imprisoned or perhaps roasted for holding up to ridicule this truly ridiculous story. And many are the Christians to-day who think they would be doing God service if they dare let the bad blood out of me. The same fiendish hatred that imprisoned poor Bennett would hav tortured him to death in true inquisitorial style if all courts were run on strictly Christian principles. Persecution is just as natural to the Christian as the grip is to the jaw of a bulldog.

God got in the habit of braying to Moses about his great power and how he would multiply his signs and wonders in the land of Egypt. He also takes great pains to let Moses know what a powerful colossus he is. "I am the Lord," "Jehovah," the great "I am." Whoop! Big Injun! See um war-paint! Being beaten by the magicians in blood, God thought to make a point on them by bringing up the frogs, but the magicians matched him in his own game, frog for frog.

But it must be admitted that in the matter of lice (Ex. viii, 17, 18) God got the start, but with the same practice in lousy tricks that God had had I would go two to one on the magicians.

Ex. ix, 14. "That thou mayest know that there is none like me in all the earth." What a bombastic God the Christians worship! Gen. ix, 15. "And in very deed for this cause hav I raised thee up for to show in thee my power and that my name may be declared throughout all the earth." Here is a case where a man is "raised up" for the express purpose of being afflicted, with the entire people, in this grievous manner, that God might show his power. Poor, weak, pusillanimous God! Could not a great God show his power in some other and less inhuman way? Must he deluge a whole country in blood, and afflict the people with the stench of putrefying fish and frogs, to show his power. The most cruel despot on earth could not exceed these acts in brutality. Christians hav put men in loathsome prisons whose highest ambition was to benefit human kind because they could not respect such a God.

Ex. xiv, 17. "And I will get me honor upon Pharaoh, and upon his hosts and upon his chariots and upon his horsemen." 18. "And the Egyptians shall know that I am the Lord, when I hav gotten me honor upon Pharaoh, upon his chariots, and upon his horsemen."

Such bombast might be expected from a swaggering bar-room rowdy, but no gentleman would express himself in that way. Suppose God should again come down on earth and hold converse with mortals, as in times of old, and suppose he should toy around young virgins, and make himself familiar with leading monarchs, as he did with the old lechers, kings David and Solomon, he would not be tolerated in decent society.

If I were a Christian I would try and hurry up the process of evolution and bring my God up to a standing where gentlemen could associate with him without being "spotted."

JOHN PECK.

Naples, N. Y.

Banished.

From Massachusetts, 1660. Written to Mr. H. A. Abbey's picture. By John Greenleaf Whittier.

Over the threshold of his pleasant home
Set in green clearings passed the exiled Friend.
In simple trust, misdoubting not the end.
"Dear heart of mine," he said, "the time has come
To trust the Lord for shelter." One long gaze
The good wife turned on each familiar thing—
The lowing kine, the orchard blossoming,
The open door that showed the hearth fire's blaze
And calmly answered, "Yes, he will provide."
Silent and slow they crossed the homestead's bound,
Lingering longest by their child's grave-mound.
"Move on, or stay and hang!" the sheriff cried.
They left behind them more than home or land,
And set sad faces to an alien strand.

Safer with winds and waves than human wrath,
With ravening wolves than those whose zeal for God
Was cruelty to man, the exiles trod
Drear leagues of forest without guide or path,
Or, launching frail boats on the uncharted sea,
Round storm-vexed capes, whose teeth of granit ground
The waves to foam, their perilous way they wound,
Enduring all things so their souls were free.
O true confessors! shaming those who did
Anew the wrong their Pilgrim fathers bore!
For you the Mayflower spread her sail once more,
Freighted with souls, to all that duty bid
Faithful as those who sought an unknown land
O'er wintry seas from Holland's Hook of Sand,
Aquidneck's isle, Nantucket's lonely shore.

And Indian-haunted Narragansett saw
The way-worn travelers round their camp-fires draw,
Or heard the plashing of their weary oars.
And every place whereon they rested grew
Happier for pure and gracious womanhood,
And men whose names for stainless honor stood,
Founders of states and rulers wise and true.
The muse of history yet shall make amends
To those who freedom, grace, and justice taught,
Beyond their dark age led the van of thought,
And left unforfeited the name of Friends.
O mother state, how foiled was thy design!
The gain was theirs, the loss alone was thine.

A Liberal Normal School.

Brief mention was made in a recent issue of THE TRUTH SEEKER of a school to be established at Liberal, Mo. Mr. Grayston, the principal of the Institute, has since forwarded his announcement, and it affords us much pleasure to make public the fact that at last Freethinkers hav a school for their children in which no superstition is taught.

Mr. Grayston's Institute does not aspire to be a college, but is "simply a school where young people can prepare themselvs for the profession of teaching, and for business." Besides the elementary studies, however, the student "can gain a clear idea of the principles of the sciences, and of the rudiments of history and literature." The importance of a thorough knowledge of English is recognized by Mr. Grayston, as well as the duty of imparting instruction in the greatest of modern discoveries, Evolution. Upon this latter point, Mr. Grayston says: "Ignore the laws of Evolution, and the most instructiv lessons of nature are lost. Without this law of progress all nature is nothing. This 'new philosophy' is revolutionizing the intellectual world. Its truths are recognized by the brightest intellects of our age. In spite of the combined opposition of bibles, creeds, and theologians, it asserts its right to a seat in the intellectual parliament of the world—the school-room. In this respect, the Liberal Normal leads the way. Every respectable school in the world is destined to follow."

The citizens of Liberal already maintain a Sunday-school in which the children are arranged in groups according to capacity, and are instructed in literature, history, and science. Facts alone are taught, but "nothing of a dry and repugnant nature ever appears in the program." The introductory course of the new Institute is for pupils of an age when object lessons are the most useful means of conveying information. The methods are based upon the kindergarten system. From this the scholars are advanced to the Preparatory course, then to the Teachers' and Commercial courses. A three years' Scientific course will meet the requirements of all who wish to prepare for scientific and lecturing work. All mythologies, bibles, and religions will be given an impartial hearing. They will all be compared, contrasted, and criticised alike. The leading arguments from every source will be given an equal hearing. Special privileges will be given to none. If they cannot stand a purifying criticism they will hav to fall.

The languages, however, will find no place in the curriculum prepared by Professor Grayson. He considers time spent in learning the dead languages to be time wasted. He would teach only modern tongues that are to be used by the learners. As the making of travelers is not the prime object of the Institute, he has not left room in the courses of study for any foreign language. But the instruction in English is very complete and thorough, and for mental training he considers the sciences superior to the classics, which are at best but a "preparation for the mother tongue." And "students cannot afford to throw away so many years in a preparation. They can learn the mother tongue easier than the classics."

Permission is granted to students to select such special studies as they may desire to become proficient in, upon a satisfactory completion of which they will be awarded certificates and diplomas. Arrangements will be made for a musical department, and children in the primary department will be trained in vocal music gratis. The organization of literary societies will be encouraged by the principal. For this purpose the students will hav the free use of the school buildings. A reading-room, well furnished with the best periodical literature of the day, is maintained in connection with the library for the use of the town. To this students hav free access. The Institute, at the beginning, will occupy four buildings, two of which will be used for school purposes, and two for boarding.

The first term opened last Monday, May 5th. Mr. Grayson asks for the patronage of the Liberal public, which he certainly should hav, if the school is of the high character he says he means to make. Liberal parents educating their children away from home should write to him for particulars as to board, tuition, etc. Address W. E. Grayson, Liberal, Mo.

Laboring Among the Canadians.

Mr. Chainey has been over the border filling engagements in Meaford and Belleville. In the latter town his efforts were limited, however, to an attempt to fill the engagement, for the Christians were on the warpath and were too numerous for the Freethinkers. The particulars are that in the latter part of March Mr. Chainey visited Belleville and organized the Belleville Secular and Literary Society, electing to the presidency Mr. J. Irby Iles. At the same time arrangements were made for Mr. Chainey's return on April 24th, and the City Hall was engaged for the occasion. Notice was given several days in advance of the date through the local papers, which had the effect of arousing the church party to unwonted activity. Petitions addressed to the mayor, requesting him to refuse the use of the City Hall, were signed by all the pious bigots of the place. The mayor was nothing loth, and ordered the doors of the hall to be kept locked on the evening. Mr. Chainey and his Belleville friends demanded admission and the use of the hall, according to the contract made nearly a month previously, but were peremptorily dismissed by the little Cæsar filling the mayoralty. The corporation of Belleville therefore now has a lawsuit to defend, in which justice and right are all on the side of the plaintiffs. Our Canadian brethren are plucky; they are not afraid of spending a few dollars in fighting their enemy; and although the courts of Canada are as bigoted and subservient to the church as the customs officers and city officials, they do not despair of eventually shaming the Dominion into granting equal rights to Freethinkers.

The objects of the secular societies Mr. Chainey is forming were outlined by him to a reporter of the Belleville Intelligencer, who called to get his version of the outrage on freedom of speech. The society, he said, was organized to act as an auxiliary body to the Freethought Association of Canada, whose purpose is to encourage the free discussion of all questions of public interest, the maintenance and enforcement of the right and duty of free expression of opinion and belief, and promulgate as the true scientific basis of organization the following epitomized statement: In things demonstrated, unity; in whatever can be doubted, free diversity; in all things, charity. Also, to afford mutual benefit, assistance, and support to the members of the association and its branches by subscriptions, donations, and divers other friendly means, such as shall from time to time be determined by the convention, the central executiv, or branch societies. The association was incorporated by a general act of Parliament 1877. The executiv is now engaged in raising funds with which to employ Charles Watts, of London, England, president of the British Secular Union and editor of the Secular Review, to settle in Toronto and lecture throughout Canada. To prepare the way for Mr. Watts, Mr. Chainey is trying to organize as many societies as possible in advance of his coming. Societies hav been formed in each of the following places: Welland, Aylmer, and St. Thomas.

Mr. Chainey set forth the purpose of his lecture on "The Church of the Future," and explained his conception of the fundamental principles of Secularism as follows:

"The mind is to be perfectly free to explore and investigate in all directions. It is only the Freethinker who knows the true joy of thought. Heresy means opinion. For eighteen hundred years it has been a crime worthy of eternal pain to hav an opinion. Morality is all those actions that are inspired by affection. We are not totally depraved. Our normal condition is the moral one. We are not good through what we believe, but by what we love. All physical, intellectual, and moral culture pertains to this world. If there is another world we will attend to that when we get to it. Men and women need all the help that we can giv them. It is the duty of the strong to help the weak. The very mountains receive the rains and snows and treasure them up in springs, that they may giv them to the grass and flowers in the valleys at their feet. If there is, as the church teaches, an all-wise and all-loving God, it is his bounden duty to serve us, not ours to serve him on trust.

"Having explained at length these principles, I counsel each society to construct a home of its own. I prefer to call our places of meeting secular homes, instead of churches. The word 'home' is more suggestiv of the loving spirit we are seeking to develop between man and man. Each of these homes should hav three departments.

"The first should be a gymnasium, with kitchen and bath-rooms attached. The next should be library and reading-room, and small room for the study of the various physical sciences. The third and last should be a free hall, with a large stage, and so adapted either for dramatic entertainments, a ball, or a lecture. I would divide the year into four quarters by four great festivals, coming on the first Sunday in each quarter. The first I would name Memorial Day, in honor of departed friends and all the great heroes and martyrs of history deserving to be held in everlasting remembrance. The second should be named Flower Festival, and should celebrate the return of spring and the birth of flowers. This holiday should be principally for the children, and could in many ways be made one of profit and delight. The third should be called Liberty Day, and be consecrated to rejoicing over every victory of freedom—the emancipation of slaves, the birth of republics, and the dawn of light and truth, freeing the human intellect from the fetters of ignorance and superstition. The fourth and last could be the Harvest Festival, taking the place of Thanksgiving Day in America. How beautiful and rational would these four holidays be!

"I would next divide each week as follows: Sunday morning either an original lecture or oration, or the reading of one by a well-trained reader. The afternoon should be given up to the children's lyceum, in which they should be educated by rythmic marches and light gymnastics into physical grace and strength.

"Here also they should be educated in self-possession and expression of face, eye, hand, foot, through recitations and dramatic impersonations. The dramatic principle is the most important in relation to personal culture, and yet it is entirely neglected by our present education, and treated as an outcast by the Christian church. By its application to life we will hav as an ever-present consciousness the joy we seek at the theater. I can only glance at this now. But the evening should be given up to a dramatic entertainment, and thus furnish incentiv to the cultivating of this element. Such a church would reform and develop the theater, which at present as often administers to vice as to virtue. But that is not the fault of the theater, but of the neglect of this principle in education.

"Monday should be science night, and especially devoted to the study of systematic truth. This will be our only theology.

"Tuesday should be discussion night; and so devoted to the development of our reasoning faculties.

"Wednesday should be athletic night, and devoted to this especial study and public exhibition and encouragement of those at work in gymnasium.

"Thursday should be art night, devoted to the study and practice of art in all its many beautiful forms, but most especially in its relation to personal culture. Even a truly graceful form is rare. Those whom one would think hav every opportunity in life to cultivate this, the sons of the rich, hav become many of them mere warts and wens, physical escrescences, things which we can neither call monkeys nor men, and are obliged to call them dudes. A woman with a fine form makes a hundred thousand dollars a year by its exhibition. Why do we pay so much money to sit in the outward shadow of beauty? Because we lack it in our own lives.

"Literature should be studied in social relations. If a church was needed for nothing else but this it would be well worth our while to build one for this alone.

"Saturday night I would devote to music. The songs of church and chapel are false and artificial. They come from the lips, not the heart.

"At the Quarterly Festival I referred to, I would hav the naming and registering of children. This church should also hav in charge the celebration of marriages and the burial of the dead. My time will not permit me to giv the proper ceremonies for these festiv and mournful events. Their characters, however, are fixed in the nature of things.

"The necessity for reform in all these things is the sure prediction of such a church as I hav sketched. How it will come and when I cannot say. Whether will be the product of many scattered rays slowly gathering to a focus, or burst like Minerva from the brain of Jupiter, full grown from the clear vision of some pregnant personality, I cannot say. Still, I feel that its day is at hand. As Jesus proclaimed the coming of the kingdom of God, so would I declare that the kingdom of man is at hand.

"But while we wait for this bridegroom of hope and promis, let us not be as the foolish virgins, but as the wise ones, who kept their lamps trimmed and burning.

"Life is health, and beauty is the flower and perfume of health. Let us study and seek for it with all diligence and loyalty. Life is thought, reason, knowledge. Let no day pass that does not enrich our minds with some pure gem of thought, or beauty of fancy. Life is love. Let us seek friends by being friendly; let us win love by making ourselvs lovable. So through these three, the greatest of which is love, we shall grow into such symmetry and fulness of being as shall make the hours fly by on golden wing, each day a romance and each night a dream of joy; so that when death comes with its final summons we can say: I hav proved what life can giv. I hav had joy and sorrow. I hav been intoxicated with health and strength, and experienced all the pleasures of the senses! I hav taken the wings of thought and soared to the hights above, and dived into the depths below! But above all I hav loved and been loved. So that now, O death, whether thou art night or day, the folding or unfolding of wings, or eternal felicity, I giv thee welcome, and sink into thy mysterious arms without regret and without fear."

At Meaford Mr. Chainey's reception was of the same nature, but, owing to the sturdy persistency of an old Scotch Presbyterian, with different results. The Christians of Meaford presented petitions to the mayor making the same request as the Belleville people asked of their mayor. The mayor of Meaford was equally complacent toward the church party, and so far as he was concerned was willing to comply. But the town clerk, who had immediate charge of the edifice, interposed a veto. He was a churchman, he said, and disliked the Freethinkers as much as any man in town, but he had covenanted that Mr. Chainey could hav the hall, and hav it he should. More harm, he thought, would come to Christianity by his telling a lie than by a Freethought lecture. His attitude of stern integrity settled the question of the hall, and the wrangling over it by the churches had been a first-class advertisment for the lecture. But still further publicity was given by a band of salvationists who announced their intention of invading the room on the evening of the lecture and drowning the speaker with their martial music. But again the old Scotchman came out strong. He told the salvationists that if they disturbed the meeting they would all be arrested and locked up. This threat put a quietus upon further hostil demonstrations, and Mr. Chainey lectured in peace to a house filled to its utmost capacity.

We cannot help paying a tribute to the rigid old Presbyterian who fought so nobly for exact justice. No doubt if he had not passed his word that the hall might be used, he would hav been among the first to advocate the expulsion from Meaford of the Infidel speaker. But having made he kept his contract, and is the only Christian in the affair who came out with his honor bright.

Among the Belleville Christians, however, there was none righteous. They were all ready to break a promis given to a Freethinker. The honor of their chief official, of their town, was nothing to them so long as a Freethinker was debarred from speaking his opinions. Intending emigrants to Canada should note that Belleville is a city of liars, who hav, with what Mr. Andrews would call a guided spontaneity, chosen their chief for mayor. If Mr. Watts locates in the province, he will find an immense field for his civilizing efforts, and abundant room for the preaching of moral doctrins.

Prose Poems.

Extracts from Col. Ingersoll's lectures, mutilated almost beyond recognition, hav for several years been hawked about by unscrupulous book pirates, under the name of Prose Poems. The volume now before us is an attempt by the colonel's authorized publisher to rescue the fugitiv pieces from their rags and bad company, and place them before the world in the velvet robes they deserve. To Mr. Peter Eckler a whole-souled Liberal, was intrusted the work of shaping the garments, and he has executed his trust in magnificent style; handsomer volumes it will be difficult to find. This book of Prose Poems is done in quarto size, 9 1-2 by 7 3-4 inches, and contains 248 pages, printed on very heavy and richly tinted paper. It contains also a very fine steel engraving of Mr. Ingersoll, with autograph fac simile. "The work," Mr. Farrell says, "is designed for and will be accepted by admiring friends as a rare personal souvenir." The story is related that on the center table of the author of these prose poems is an elaborately finished copy of Shakspere's works, on the cover of which, in golden letters, are the words, "The Inspired Volume." We cannot but imagin that many copies of this book will be cherished in the same way.

The Decoration Day oration is now published for the first time in a finished shape. No newspaper report can do justice to Mr. Ingersoll's sentences. They come in such a torrent that no stenographer can follow him accurately, and anything that the reporter may supply fits as ill as a square peg in a round hole. The famous tributes are also brought together in this work, along with the most eloquent paragraphs from the published lectures. There is no doubt that Mr. Ingersoll is the greatest living orator. Those interested in what he says are therefore sure of its being said in the best possible way. Among the subjects treated in this work are tributes to some of the greatest men who hav ever lived—Lincoln, Voltaire, Paine, Bruno, Spinoza, Humboldt, Comte—and thrillingly beautiful apotheoses of Liberty and Love. In all some sixty-five long selections are made, with many shorter ones. The difficulty, the compiler says, where there is so much to choose from, has been to exclude. We wish Mr. Farrell had made the volume larger, but, like him, are content for the present, and cordially recommend the collection to the "real friends of intellectual freedom"—the Freethinkers of the world.

A Memorial to Congress.

Mr. T. W. Curtis, of New Haven, Conn., has prepared a petition to Congress, asking for a Constitutional amendment which shall right the wrongs that are suffered by the large portion of our people who are not Christians, and also effectually prevent any state from aiding in the maintenance of religion. The petition will be found on the last page of this paper.

We hav modified the petition as originally sent us by Mr. Curtis. He asks also for "national protection for national citizens," and a "co-operation between the national and state governments" for the maintenance of schools. These are political questions which, it seems to us, it is just as well not to mix up with the demand for state secularization. The great trouble with the League is that it has taken on so many "isms" and "issues" that the original objects are more or less lost sight of. These side issues hav been discussed and worked upon to the exclusion of the main question. We do not want to see the attention of Liberals again distracted until something is accomplished. Let us hammer away at this one thing until the work is done. Then we can turn our attention to other necessary reforms.

Editorial Notes.

"The church," said Mr. Beecher last Sunday, "is not an assembly of saints." If the ministers may be taken as samples, we should say Mr. Beecher is correct. In fact, it is more like an assembly of the other fellows.

The Rev. Mr. Martyn of this city complains of the habit the press hav of chronicling the delinquencies of church people under such headlines as "another misister shown up," and "another deacon in trouble." One way to prevent this disagreeable publicity would be for the pious to become moral.

The pastor of Trinity Church at Oakland, Cal., is preaching a series of ten sermons from Poe's "Raven." A local paper advises him, after completing the course, to run through the "Pickwick Papers," sarcastically adding that "the Bible is exhausted; that is out of the question."

J. P. Montgomery, summoned to serve as juror in St. Louis, handed to Judge Thayer the following communication:

"I respectfully ask you to excuse me from serving on the jury, as I cannot conscientiously take the jurors' oath. I need not tell you that if I were to violate my conscience I would not make a good and true juror. I learn from the word of God that moral, civil government is God's ordinance to man for good. Romans xiii, 4—the negativ of the above declaration of the word of God must be that immoral civil government cannot be the ordinance of God, nor good for man. The civil government of the United States does not acknowledge any authority higher than 'We, the people.' which source of authority is immoral and corrupt; therefore I cannot swear to support any such immoral institution of civil government, or put myself in the position of a juror to help execute the laws of such an institution, without violating my conscience. I therefore humbly pay thee to excuse me."

Mr. Montgomery is right. A consistent Bible Christian can take no part in a secular government. He must either hold himself aloof or strive, as do the Catholics and the God-in-the-Constitutionists, to make this nation a hierarchy. That is why Christianity is such a dangerous force. Only inconsistent and careless Christians can be good citizens.

By a resolution adopted April 13th at the meeting of the auxiliary Liberal League of Portland, Oregon, M. S. Wahrhaftig, assistant secretary of the League, was authorized to correspond with Liberal Leagues, societies, and individuals for the purpose of organizing an Oregon state Liberal League, similar in character and scope to the New York State Freethinkers' Association. In the circular sent out in accordance with this resolution Mr. Warhaftig says: "The necessity of a state League is well known to every Liberal who loves freedom. The intention of the Portland League, therefore, should be sustained by every citizen of this state. I invite you, dear sir or madam, to show this letter to your friends and urge them to join us in our work for accomplishing the intention of the founders of our republic to make it a home for free human beings by giving equal rights to every citizen by birth or naturalization, regardless of his or her belief or disbelief—an intention which cannot be accomplished, since orthodox churches are sustained by law, and their members, opposed to freedom as they are, hav more rights than our other citizens. The objects of the State Liberal League will be to stimulate Freethought and spread Liberalism and Radicalism and bring them into contact with our social life."

The Rev. R. R. Howison is a mildly heretical Presbyterian, and has written a book called "God and Creation." At a meeting of the Presbytery held in Richmond, Va., on the 18th ult., a committee was appointed to sit upon Mr. Howison and his book. The committee found that the work "teaches doctrins irreconcilably at variance with the scriptures as interpreted in the Confession of Faith and the larger and shorter catechism of the Westminster Assembly, notably on such points af the eternity of matter, the federal headship of Adam, and the human nature of Christ. The Presbytery does therefore emphatically condemn the book as heretical in its teachings and calculated to lead its readers astray on points of grave importance." But as Mr. Howison expressed a willingness, in deference to the judgment of the Presbytery, to giv no further circulation to his book, "God and Creation," and to carefully abstain from preaching or teaching in any forms doctrins at variance with the Confession of Faith, the committee charitably recommended that he be allowed to liv, and that the Presbytery take no further action in the matter. The similarity of this course with that adopted toward Galileo will not fail to strike the reader. But if we recollect rightly it is recorded that Galileo's opinion that the earth moves was not changed. Neither is it likely that Mr. Howison's views of the "federal headship of Adam" will be modified by the action of the Presbytery.

Lectures and Meetings.

W. F. Jamieson has just finished courses of four lectures each in Rock Elm and Spring Valley, Wis. He will shortly visit Elkton, Dakota. His post-office is Pipestone City, Minn.

C. B. Reynolds lectured twice in Pittsburgh last Sunday—before the League in the afternoon, and for the Turner's Society, by unanimous request, in the evening. May 6th and 7th he will be at Altoona, Pa., returning to Pittsburgh on the 11th. Monday and Tuesday, May 12th and 13th, he will visit Waynesburg, N. Y. Judging from his efforts in Pittsburgh, where he has become quite a favorit, Mr Reynolds is one of the best men in the field to arouse the people. His permanent address is Box 104, North Parma, New York.

Dr. J. L. York, the noted Liberal orator of the West, will leave his home in San Jose about the 10th of May for an extended lecture tour through Nevada, Utah, Idaho and Montana. He will speak at Eureka, in Nevada, and SaltLake City during May, and visit the towns in Wood river district and Boise City during June. He will deliver the 4th of July oration at Emmettville, Idaho, after which he will canvass Montana, speaking at Butte City, Bozeman, and other prominent points in the territory. Liberals on the line of this route, don't fail to hear this magnetic cyclone of the Pacific coast, and help him to open the way to scatter the seed-thoughts of mental freedom. His topics cover the entire realm of physical, social, and moral science, and reports tell us that his audiences do not sleep, but always increase in number and interest; and seldom do any leave the hall while the doctor is speaking, even though the lecture be two hours in duration. He has logic for the logical, humor for the fun-loving, and a tongue of fire for the sacred lies and bloated shams of church and state. Do not miss the rare treat of hearing the Ingersoll of the Pacific coast, who will also, as heretofore, present the claims of The Truth Seeker and Boston Investigator to his audiences, taking subscriptions for the same, and will organize Liberal Leagues and Progressiv Lyceum Schools for old and young, wherever desired, upon terms to liv and let liv.

To Correspondents.

W. S. Wood.—Your regularity in sending a long list of subscribers is praiseworthy. Be assured that it is appreciated. Wisconsin ought to be a habitable state after your long residence. Again, thanks.

L. K. Moore.—Isaiah vii, 20, reads, "In the same day shall the Lord shave with a razor that is hired, namely, by them beyond the river, by the king of Assyria, the head, and the hair of the feet: and it shall also consume the beard."

R. E. McKinley.—The Liberals hav a building in Waco, Texas; in Liberal, Mo.; a German-English Teachers' Seminary in Milwaukee, Wis.; a hall in Wolcott, N. Y. (unused at present, we think); a magnificent Paine Memorial building in Boston, and Girard College in Philadelphia (stolen by the Christians, however). No hall has been built in or near New York, and consequently your preacher's account of such a structure being in the hands of the sheriff is a pure fabrication. See also page 66 of The Truth Seeker Annual.

H. Snody.—On page 761 of The Truth Seeker of 1881 there is a letter touching on the death of Voltaire from James Parton, supplementing an editorial on the same subject on pages 728 and 729 of the same year. The editorial is a condensation of the facts of his death as given in Parton's Life of Voltaire, and that with Mr Parton's letter is a complete and truthful answer to all the Christians may say of Voltaire's last hours. The story cannot be told in a few lines, or we would do it here. If you hav not a file of the paper for that year we can supply it.

Ralph Waldo Emerson.

BY W. O. SPENSER.

Within the crucible thou hast been tried;
Thy words been weighed, thy spirit too,
And found like ocean deep and wide,
Touching all shores some pearls to woo;
On Ganges's banks thou saw'st a shrine,
In Egypt found some scripts of lore,
Where God* had wrought, some truth was thine—
Thou walked where sages walked before.
No gentler harp the Hebrews touched in song,
No sweeter visions e'er to mortals came,
Concord's evangel, hater of the wrong,
Imperial now in loftiness of fame.
Swift hater of all creeds, and lover of all love,
A reverent worshiper of truth that's free,
All things were symbols of the God* above,
And all things proved our immortality.

*With me "God" means the forces of nature, and when I hav occasion to say "God" that is what I mean.

Letters from Friends.

PENACOOK, N. H., April 26, 1884.

MR. EDITOR: You will please find inclosed $1.30. I wish to pay one dollar toward the monument, which I see is not quite paid for yet The thirty cents is for the picture of the monument, which you will please send me when ready.

J. E. MARDEN.

SAN FRANCISCO, March 29, 284.

MR. EDITOR: THE TRUTH SEEKER ANNUAL which you sent me is worth twice the price you ask for it.

When I see what a large amount of literature can be obtained for a small sum of money, it reminds me of what the theologians formerly said in relation to the art of printing, viz., that it was the work of the devil. Their minds hav not changed, but they dare not make the assertion now. LYMAN SMITH.

EATON RAPIDS, MICH., April 27, 1884.

MR. EDITOR: As our Liberal friend, Mr. Prichard, of the new mines of Idaho, has kindly consented to giv information in regard to the mines through THE TRUTH SEEKER, I would like to ask him a few questions. A reply may be of some benefit to those wishing to try their luck: 1. What is the nearest railroad station to the mines? 2. What is the mode of conveying supplies? 3. What would be necessary for a man to take, or can all kinds of supplies and tools be got in the mines at reasonable prices? 4. Is it necessary to be well supplied with firearms, and is game plenty? If Mr. Prichard would answer these question and giv such other information as he may think best, he would confer a favor on those contemplating a trip to the mines. A. ATWOOD.

BOURBON, Mo., April 23, 284.

MR. EDITOR: Sir I am overwhelmed with joy and gladness to tell you that the so-called religion of Jesus Christ has sunk to rise no more in Crawford and Franklin counties. Three of the most prominent preachers hav committed the following crimes: 1. Rev. James Harnet committed rape. 2. Henry Galagher stole horses. 3. Joseph Murphy broke into a store They hav gone where the dogs will not bite. We hav got several good Liberals here. Freethought is progressing rapidly as time goes on. I am an Infidel to the center. I am truly happy that I hav not that hateful, tyrannical, religious fever, the most loathsome, accursed disease that humanity is heir to—the Christian religion. Away with it, ye thieving disciples of that lowly savior Jesus Christ.

Departed this life, April 20, 284, Dr. Everard, of Bourbon, Mo. He died as he had lived, a true and a good man of the type of Infidelity. Dr. Everard died perfectly easy. He said he wanted to die; the future was clear before him.

C. B. HUNTER.

COWLESVILLE, N. Y., April 27, 1884.

MR. EDITOR: I will inclose a dollar for four of the TRUTH SEEKER ALMANACS. I like your paper much. I see one of Col. Ingersoll's speeches in the last one. He says he should not know a God if he should see one. I don't think I should; never saw one, nor the priest's right bower, the devil. The first of June my TRUTH SEEKER expires. I take six papers. THE TRUTH SEEKER generally gets read first. This orthodox religion, allopathy practice, is supported by the credulity of the people. Ignorance is no crime. If it was, you and I would hav been in prison long ago. My time is most out for this life. If I liv until the 25th of next May, I shall be seventy-two. I think it is too late now to get the orthodox religion. I am a seeker after the truth. Our early impressions are not always based on science. Why? Because our parents did not possess the right understanding. We partake more or less of the same. How can we help it? It looks like poor business to study where our senses can't reach. They say that religion is obtained without money or price. I say it is a lie on the face of it Did you ever know a minister to preach for nothing? I hav said if they could not draw something from your purse, they would take off a blessing, and try to stamp on a curse. It is sickening to read the "Crimes of Preachers." Where a man gets a reward for hypocrisy, rogues will always fall in. The clergy are well adapted to it. They get paid for it. Well, it is not very safe to trust to any man's advice, where he has any interest, if he says he has religion. JEHIEL BUTTERFIELD, M.D.

WELLAND, ONT., April 21, 284.

MR. EDITOR: Inclosed please find pay for THE TRUTH SEEKER another year. I take several Liberal papers, and send and giv them around. They are good missionaries. The greatest difficulty is to get prejudiced people to read them. But it does sometimes happen that after once reading a good, common sense article their prejudice begins to giv way, and they become more willing and better able to see things as they really are. It is unreasonable to expect a person to rid himself all at once of the creed he had been trained from infancy to believe as true, and which has become, as it were, a part of himself. It is easier to entertain new views than to get rid of old ones. It took me many years before I was able entirely to rid myself of the prejudices in favor of my religious training, and, such being the case, I can hav sympathy and charity for those whose organism and opportunities hav been less favorable. I apprehend it to be the duty of those whose minds hav become more enlightened by a knowledge of nature's laws, as revealed by science and good sense, to do what they are able to to disseminate that light for the benefit of others. The mill of evolution grinds slowly, but it is grinding, and it is for us, the stockholders, to see that the machinery is kept clean and properly oiled, and it will ultimately finish the grist on hand.

There is more of a disposition here on the part of a greater number of people to investigate for themselvs, to know the truth of things. In this small town of a little over two thousand inhabitants, there are eight churches, and as many reverend divines, who are clear-sighted enough to see that their bread and butter is in danger.

George Chainey lectured here on the 17th on the "Church of the Future," which is causing quite a rumpus. They are preaching that Infidels will neither support church nor schools, consequently are a curse to the country. One reverend gentleman (a Disciple minister) wishes to debate the question with us Freethinkers, so if anyone thinks it worth while there is a chance by addressing Rev. Mr. Sherman, Welland, Ontario, Canada. He has given his subjects as, 1. "The nature of the religion of Jesus Christ is such as to produce the highest earthly good in human character, wherever it is honestly lived out." 2. "The religion of Jesus, the Christ, is true in fact." He affirms in both.

JOHN RAY.

PLAINFIELD, N. J., April 27, 1884.

MR. EDITOR: I herein inclose my mite toward the completion of the Bennett monument. It is, indeed, a late day to contribute to that most praiseworthy object; but I learn from the last issue of THE TRUTH SEEKER that a small sum is still needed to cover the expenses of the committee. My delay in contributing to the fund has not been for want of sympathy with the movement. Truly, if any man deserved such a testimonial from his friends, it was D. M. Bennett. My personal acquaintance with Mr. Bennett was limited, but my larger acquaintance with the warm-hearted, truth-loving champion of Freethought through his writings, enrolled me, years ago, among his admirers. He was not only a hater of the cant and hypocrisy of the age, but he had the courage of his convictions. In the years to come, he will hold a high place among those who hav labored to emancipate the race from the thralldom of Christian superstition. Vilified and slandered, persecuted and sentenced to occupy a felon's cell by the sneaking hounds of the Christian church, it is fitting and just that his friends should pay this tribute to his memory.

Mr. Bennett left behind him many monuments in words and deeds. THE TRUTH SEEKER is a monument to his memory to be proud of. His voluminous writings will prove a monument more lasting than marble. For those who knew him well,

He needs no monument of stone,
No temple reared to fame,
For prouder, more enduring far,
Is his immortal name.

But the monument is now un fait accompli, a tribute and a menace, upon which something like the following might with propriety hav been inscribed:

A thousand loving hands and hearts
Hav raised this tribute here,
To him whose name and modest worth
They cherish and revere.

Though bigotry in priestly garb
May often linger near,
And read the words hereon inscribed,
With many a pious sneer;

And slander, with envenomed tongue,
Should often haunt the spot,
And hiss, and fling its vip'rous slime,
Its fangs will harm him not.

Well may his friends this tribute pay
So fitting and so just,
And bid the shaft of granit rise
Above his moldering dust.

Be this its simple epitaph:
"Here lies an honest man,
Who, in the fight for truth and right,
Was always in the van."

MR. EDITOR: There are certainly points concerning which mankind continues to be ignorant—the smartest, wisest, and best educated men of our country positivly ignorant. These points are the beginning and end of our life. Many and varied are the opinions given by men who claim to hav a deeper ken of this perplexing question. To this class especially belong the clergy of all denominations. It is truly astonishing to see them waging war against each other, Catholic against Protestant, Christians against Jews, Jews against all others, each ready, willing, and eager to demolish the rest, and all at once joining hands to pounce upon the Agnostic, their common foe, whose only crime consists in being honest enough to declare that he lacks all information on the subject, which, in the words of Robert Cooper, is "too heavenly to be understood."

The clearest remarks on this point are by a German poet. He says:

"What preceded and what will follow me I look upon as two dark, impenetrable curtains, suspended from each end of our life and as yet unlifted by any living being. Already many hundred generations stand before them, torch in hand, guessing what may be hidden behind. Many see their own shadows, the outlines of their passions. moving in magnified forms upon the surface of the unknown and tremble at their own image. Poets, philosophers, and statesmen hav painted their dreams pleasanter or darker as the sky above them appeared obscurer or brighter, but the vast distance showed them a deceptiv view. Jugglers, too, engage in eager race after the unknowable, but they likewise are permitted only to contemplate in astonishment a 'phantom.' Deep silence reigns beyond this curtain, and no one behind it can send us thence an answer; we simply hear the echo of our question, as though our voices had been directed toward a hollow arch. All hav to retire behind this curtain, which in passing they touch with awe, uncertain who may stand behind to receive them. Skeptics giv us their version thus: Beware! this curtain fools mankind. Did ever voice reach you from beyond? If not, may we not sajely conclude no one is there to speak? But they too are quickly sent thither, as it were, in order to convince them."

From our goodly city of Lancaster I hav nothing to report at present. Christians and Jews continue as heretofore—six days in a week to cut each others' throats, sin and re-sin, and fall heavily in God's debt, and on the seventh day, which happens to be the first day of the week, however, they endeavor to effect a compromise with their creditor by offering him about ten cents on a dollar, for which they giv a promissory note, which, in the absence of good indorsement or other security, is, I suppose, no better than an open account—and woe unto them if their God once falls short of available funds and presses for settlement. SOUTH DARTMOUTH, MASS., April 28, 1884.

MR. EDITOR: Several weeks since a lecture was given at the Opera House in the neighboring city of New Bedford, the object of which was, if possible, to meet and overthrow Col. Ingersoll's arguments against the truth and inspiration of the "holy Bible." The lecture was by Gen. Carey, of Ohio, I think, who remarked at the commencement of his discourse that he had been requested to undertake the overthrow and demolition of Col. R. G. Ingersoll by some of the Methodist clergy out West. But, judging from his lecture in New Bedford, Mr. Carey was by no means successful in the attainment of his object. I will quote a few passages from his lecture. In one place he says: "The Ingersolls of to-day hav made no new discoveries. Their statements are only a stale rehash of the ideas of the professedly wise of other times." This assertion I look upon as not proved. It is by no means improbable or impossible that the concluding proposition of the sentence quoted may apply with much truth to those who are so industriously endeavoring to overthrow Col. Ingersoll and bolster up priestcraft, superstition, et hoc genus omne. Again, Gen. Carey remarks, "We affirm, in its history, its poetry, its morals, it surpasses all other books. It has stood the test of ages." He is here referring to the Christian Bible. No doubt the Mohammedans, Buddhists, and Chinese—not to mention any other "antique people"—entertain the same highly exalted opinion of their Bibles, as respects history, poetry, morals, and "the test of ages." All these Mohammedan, Buddhistic, and Chinese Bibles are old enough, antiquated enough. Some people seem to think that the older, the more antiquated anything is the more likely it is to be true. Reasoning on this ground, Protestantism, which dates back to the days of Luther, Calvin, Melancthon, etc., should yield the palm, on the account of having "stood the test of ages," to the Mohammedans, Buddhists, Chinese, etc. Protestantism is, as we all know, a creature of recent growth in comparison with the Mohammedan and the others just recapitulated. But the natural inference and supposition is that the Protestants will do nothing of the sort. This "test of ages" doctrin they will only apply to their Bible. One more quotation from Gen. Carey's lecture. He says, "Infidelity has never accomplished anything for the good of man."

Now I would inquire if Infidelity, represented by such men as Thomas Paine, the friend of human rights, making the same manifest in "the times which tried men's souls;" Benjamin Franklin, the noted philosopher; Stephen Girard, who founded Girard College in the city of Philadelphia in behalf of education; Peter Cooper, of New York city, the merchant and philanthropist, who founded the Cooper Union and the Cooper Institute; and James Lick, the California millionaire, whose efforts in behalf of Freethought, reform, and human progress are so widely and well known, "has never accomplished anything for the good of man."

I think if it had not been for such men as Paine, Franklin, and the others just mentioned, that the progress of Freethought, education, human rights, progress, and reform would hav been far less than events and circumstances hav unmistakably proved them to be. The cheap, off-hand, flippant talk of those who undertake to prop up the rickety old structure of superstition amounts to but very little. It convinces no one, except the weak-minded dupes of priestcraft, who are so completely under the thumb of designing, ambitious theologians. Those who think and reason for themselvs take no stock in such talk. Very truly yours, EDWIN H. BARTLETT.

SEATTLE, W. T., April 16, 284.

MR. EDITOR: Since my letter from this place appeared in THE TRUTH SEEKER I hav had quite a number of letters from parties in different parts of the country, each one making a great many inquiries with reference to Seattle, and what advantages the place offers for new comers. I would like to ask space in your paper for this letter, so I may answer them all at one time. But before I get to this part of my letter I wish to giv you a report of what we hav been doing here in the interest of Liberalism and Freethought. About two weeks before our Paine celebration Dr. J. L. York, of San Jose, California, came by invitation to spend (as we then calculated) about a month with us, to giv us an oration at our Paine anniversary celebration, and lecture Sunday evenings. The 29th of January, Paine's birthday, was the date on which the annual election of officers for the League should take place, and it was the occasion for a great time, of which you were apprised by Dr. York. Well, about the first work the doctor did was to help the League into better shape for work than it had been. The next thing was to organize a "Young People's Progressiv Lyceum." This is something I hav often talked of as a most important step in the right direction; a something that should be at least attempted in every town and place where there are a few live Liberals to carry on the same. I tell you what it is, Mr. Editor, we may lecture, we may discuss and debate, we may tear to pieces and pull down all we hav a mind to and are able, but until we begin to build, Liberalism is not a fact; and there is nothing so sure in the way of building up as the one of having our own schools, where we can correctly train the minds of our children, unbiased and unwarped by superstition, and giv them a start in the right direction. And here, let me say, if anyone wants to see what a grand thing can be done in this direction, just get Dr. York to work at it, and the results will grandly surpass your most sanguin expectations. Well, our lyceum is in excellent running order, with good, talented help to assist in developing the same. We hav sent for some two dozen copies of "The Youth's Liberal Guide," by Prof. H. M. Kottinger, A.M. I want to say a word about this book. . We got a copy of it, and after giving it a careful perusal we decided it to be the most useful Liberal book we could hav in our school, and the very book we needed, and that is why we hav sent for them—to hav for use in our lyceum. So much for the lyceum; but Dr. York's work did not end even here. The next thing we went at was the organizing of a U. M. L. Literary Club, for Liberal self-culture. Here is our manufactory, where we calculate to develop our thinkers, our talkers, and our lecturers.

Well, Mr. Editor, what do you think of it, as far as I hav gone? But I want to tell you a little more. We needed an organ, and the doctor set about to help us in that. The plan he proposed was to giv a lecture for the purpose, which he did, and the same night we raised over $160, and we hav got our organ paid for. By this time you must think we hav quite a strong Liberal element here, which we hav; their works show it. It is now near three months since Dr. York came here, and we hav kept him lecturing every Sunday evening since he came, and twice on week-nights, all the time to crowded houses, increasing every night. The doctor is sound in logic, strong in magnetism, and talks just what the people need—hot and heavy. Last Sunday night the doctor gave his last lecture of the season to a crowded house, who approved his red-hot shot. It was immense. No lack of audience when the doctor is here. We shall miss him when he is gone, and look very anxiously forward for his visit to us again next fall.

Well, I think I hav sufficiently reported our League and its appendages for the present. Now for some brief answers to correspondents about Seattle, the "pride of the Northwest," by this time. Its situation on the great inland sea of America must be pretty well known. A great many want to know if this is a grain country. No. The best kind of wheat, oats, and barley could be raised here if there was space for them. Clearings are only being made here for the city's growth. This is a great timber country. There are small farms dotting the country here and there, and within the area of fifty to a hundred miles there is considerable farming land. But I will tell you what we do raise hereabouts, and that is an abundance of the finest vegetables I ever set eyes on. Peaches, apricots, and corn do not do well here, but apples, pears, plums, cherries, and the small fruits arrive at perfection. It is said to be the finest country in the world for prune culture. Hops! well, this place beats all for hop-raising.

All agree that we hav the finest, most salubrious, even climate in America. We certainly did not hav more than three weeks hard weather the past winter. Some say the thermometer went down to zero, but I am certain mine did not. It seems to me people are putting in gardens all the time. They hav been at it for several weeks past, and are at it yet. I must mention the flowers. I like flowers. Here they bloom nearly all the year round. For weeks past, as I passed to my work, I hav had the pleasure of looking at the crocuses. daffodils, gillyflowers, daisies, and the beautiful pansies, in full bloom.

The population of this place is about 10,000, but is fast increasing. Of all places, this beats any I hav witnessed for push, spirit, grit, and enterprise. It is true of this place, as of others, winter and spring brought on somewhat of dull times, but in our case it has been owing to an over-rush of new comers rather than from the fact that there was nothing going on. Had there not been such an undue rush for this place late in the fall and during the winter, we should hav decided that business was brisk all the time. But the supply of labor exceeded the demand. However, men are fast finding work, and it can't possibly be long before the cry for more help is heard, especially if the railroads don't go back on us Trades and professions of all kinds are represented here, but that is no proof that they are all well supplied. There is generally room for one more.

I do not think of any more leading questions to answer, but before closing I wish to refer to one other item. Myself. with others who may hav been called to furnish music for our Liberal public meetings and entertainments, are all the time put to our wits' ends to know where to look for anything suitable for the purpose. We hav the "Truth Seeker Collection," and perhaps a few other songs, but the music, the tunes, where were they? Well, the result has been that we hav had to hunt all the gospel hymns and hallelujah books we could lay our hands on, pile them into a wheelbarrow, and haul them down to the hall for the half-dozen tunes we could find in them, crying from the depths of our souls as we went along, Oh, that some one would compile a book! Well, the book is coming. Mrs. Laura Hall, of this place, has bravely undertaken the task, and there will soon be announced a book called the "U. M. L. Song-book," which will be a credit to the compiler, and will well fill the bill. In it there will be songs to suit all—the young and the old, the hard-shell and the Spiritualist, the living and the dead. Oh, that will be joyful! Well, I hav had my say, and I fancy I hear you say, Amen.

Fraternally yours, WALTER WALKER,
Sec. Seattle L. L.

P.S.—In the body of my letter I omitted to mention that at a farewell benefit which was tendered Dr. York last Sunday evening on the occasion of his last lecture this season, the following resolution was voted unanimously, with much enthusiasm:

Resolved, That we, the members and friends of the Seattle Liberal League, recognize Dr. J. L. York as a very able and eloquent defender and exponent of Freethought principles. and vote him our heartfelt thanks for the brave and effectual work he has done while with us, not only in the help rendered the League in making it strong, but in the much more important work of organizing our Young People's Progressiv Lyceum. and the U. M. L. Literary Club, and wish him good speed and equal success wherever his labors may call him.

A mention of thi s is due the doctor. W. W.

THE GOD IDEA AND FREE AGENCY CRITICALLY EXAMINED.

LA CROSSE, WIS., April 23, 1884.

MR. EDITOR: I am now nearly seventy years of age, but, nevertheless, with your permission, I want to do all I can to destroy, to my thinking, the fallacy of the supposed free agency in man that is attached to the monstrous God idea.

In entering upon this subject I shall take the following propositions as the substratum of my argument: First, that which is free must be uncontroled by, and act independently of, any other power, that is to say, where there is dependence there can be no freedom. Secondly, that everything which has been created must be the effect of some antecedent cause. Thirdly, that cause and effect are inseparably connected, that is, causation must imply necessity. These propositions, I presume, the logician will not dispute. For the first, it is quite evident that any power which does not exist and operate altogether independently of any other power, cannot be free. As to the second proposition, it is so plain as scarcely to require a word of explanation. The fact of anything being created must imply a creator or a cause. And as to the third axiom, it is manifest, if cause and effect are not necessarily connected, they must be contingent, and a work of mere chance; and if a work of chance, all moral and physical phenomena are rendered inexplicable—enigma and a chaos. There could be no such a thing as reasoning, no certainty in physical action. Having now established the basis of these propositions of my reasoning, I shall hasten to the subject proposed. First, I hold that the doctrin of free agency is altogether incompatible with orthodoxy or a personal intelligent God. Either free agency must be false, or the existence of the latter is an impossibility. If God be intelligent, he must possess thought; to possess thought, he must be endowed with reflection, and having reflection, he must be governed by cause and effect. Now, I hav shown in the third proposition that where cause and effect exist there must be necessity. To suppose the opposit would be to annihilate the principle of causation. As, then, cause and effect must be necessarily connected; and according to the second proposition, everything which has been produced must be the effect of some prior existence or cause, and, in turn, the cause of some subsequent existence. Now, God must reflect in order to be intelligent, and if reflection can be exerted only upon the principle of cause and effect, and cause and effect can alone take place on the doctrin of necessity, it is clear that the intelligence of God, as the intelligence of any other being, must imply necessity. This is impossible if the doctrin of free agency is correct.

This dogma, therefore, or that of the intelligence of God, must be abandoned. It may be asserted that the intelligence of God is of a peculiar kind—quite different from that which man possesses—is regulated by laws peculiar to itself. Now I deny that we are conscious of two distinct kinds of intelligence. We can conceive of no intelligence but that which comes from perception and reflection. We know, however, of degrees of intelligence, as, for instance, that of the horse and that of man, and the only difference that can exist between the intelligence of God and that of man must be similar in degree. This may be infinit—ours finite. But if his intelligence be infinit, his reflection, according to the previous reasoning, must be so also, and, therefore, his causation must be infinit, and consequently the principle of necessity must be so too.

Now, I will prepare another argument for old orthodox's reception. I hold that free agency and divine government of the world are doctrins involving a contradiction. Both cannot be true. It is a moral impossibility for God to be a universal sovereign if man be a free agent. Universal sovereignty must imply universal control. If, therefore, God possesses such power, man, and every other thing, must be subject to his will and must be dependent. Now I hav shown in the first proposition that where there is dependence there cannot be freedom, and consequently, if man be dependent upon God, as the divine sovereignty of the world implies, he cannot possibly be free. For if a man be a free agent he must be endowed with an independent power of himself—a power distinct, uncontroled; then it is as plain as the plainest axiom in Euclid that the whole is greater than its part, that God does not hav universal power, universal control, nor is he universal sovereign; indeed, he cannot be a God at all. One of these doctrins must be given np. Which one I shall not say. The orthodox may consult their convenience on that subject.

It is stated that the divine government of the world is that of omnipotence of God, a popular and convenient doctrin of orthodox; one which they will hav to abandon if they insist upon free agency. The mode of reasoning upon this point is somewhat different. To show the inco sistency of the doctrin of free agency with that of divine omnipotence, I will argue as follows: If God be omnipotent, he must possess all power, and possessing all power, nothing else in existence could hav power but himself—nothing could be free. Now, it is evident, if God possesses all power, that neither man nor any other being could possess power, directly or indirectly free, but God.

Either the doctrin of man's free agency, or the omnipotence of, God must be given up. The orthodox cannot consistently support both.

I will now notice another contradiction between free agency and orthodoxy. It is the inconsistency of that doctrin with the foreknowledge of God. If God possesses foreknowledge; if he can see into futurity; if he can anticipate occurrences to any extent of time, there must be some order and certainty, some process of cause and effect, ad infinitum. If, then, this is a certainty, there must be necessity; and certainty can alone exist but upon necessity. If it is supposed to exist upon chance, is to suppose a palpable contradiction. That which is certain cannot be accidental, and vice versa. If foreknowledge implies a certainty in events, it must imply a necessity; and if necessity exists, free agency is a chimera. To imagin a limitation of divine prescience or foreknowledge is to suppose there is something of which God is ignorant, and thus is his omniscience annihilated so he ceases to know all things.

Man, we are told, was created by God. Now, if he was created, he must, according to my second proposition, be the effect of some antecedent cause; and if so, causation must hav been employed in the creation, and therefore a necessity; as is stated in my third proposition, where there is one there must be the other. To suppose anything else would be a manifest impossibility. Again, if God created man, he must hav endowed him with certain capacities or functions, and according to these functions, and these only, could man act; and if man is thus bound by the nature of the capacities with which he is endowed, where is his freedom? What a flimsy and naked sophism! But the priests inform us, when God created man he made him, at once, a free agent, gave him a free and uncontroled choice as to whether he would be virtuous or vicious. And, at the same time, he manufactured a tree of knowledge, and God strictly prohibited man from partaking of its fruits, under pain of his eternal malediction Now see the inconsistency which here exhibits itself. Man is made a free agent, uncontroled to the selection of good and evil, and still, at the same time, he could not know what good and evil were; and. at the same time, was solemnly forbidden partaking of the means by which he could obtain a knowledge of the subject. A pretty free agent he was, certainly! His freedom would hav as much substance in it as the Irishman's stocking, which was footless and without a leg. It is elaborately stated in the assembly's catechism, "the sinfulness whereinto man fell consisteth in tbe guilt of Adam's first sin, of that righteousness wherein he was created, and the corruption of his nature; he is utterly disabled, and made opposit to all that is spiritually good, and wholly inclined to evil, and that continually." Now, if man is reduced to such wickedness as to be utterly "disabled" from enjoying anything that is good, where is his vaunted freedom? Free to do that which he could not do! I remember once having a dispute with a Christian upon this point some years ago. I put this question to him: "You consider man naturally depraved, do you?" He said, "I do." "You also maintain that he is a free agent?" "Unquestionably, I do," said he. "Well, then, allow me to ask you if you consider man free to be good?" "Free to be good!" he replied. "why, certainly; man is a free agent. be can please himself whether be is good or bad: and if he is good he will be rewarded by the Almighty with everlasting bliss; but if he is bad be will be condemned to eternal damnation." "Indeed!" I replied. "very charitable, truly; but, sir. if that is the case. why is it that man does not select that which is good?" "Oh!" he replied, "because he is naturally bad!" "Then." I said. "man is free to be good. and yet he is obliged to be bad!" He looked unutterable things and. after awhile, said I would find out different when I died; I would twitch up my toes and holler for mercy.

Before I leave this subject. I will make some reference to some passages in the liturgy of the church of England: "Grant us, O Lord. we beseech thee. the spirit to think. and do always such things as be rightful, that we, who cannot do anything that is good without thee. may we be enabled to liv." I think this proves that man is not a free agent. that be has no power of himself to be good. If it does not, I know not what does.

The "Lord's Prayer" is a composition which every infant is taught to lisp almost before it leaves its mother's breast I was taught it myself. "O Lord lead us not into temptation, but deliver us from evil," etc Now, does not this show that man, when exposed to temptation, has no power of resistance? And if so, where is his free agency?

I will now hav a few remarks upon the doctrin of redemption of man. We are told by the orthodox expounders that we cannot enjoy its inestimable blessings except through the instrumentality of divine grace by Christ Jesus This pious privilege depends not upon anything which we possess of ourselvs, but upon something held by another power, over which we hav not the slightest control. Where, then, is man's freedom? If salvation depends upon some other power extraneous to, and independent of, himself, where is bis boasted free agency?

I will now hav a few words upon the doctrin of election. This dogma, like that of divine grace, supersedes all free agency. It makes an individual's destiny depend upon a power independent of man's influence or control. It represents everything as the doings of God. It declares that he has selected a certain number for his especial favor, and that they, and they only, can enjoy the divine blessing If this be true, it is like redemption: it proves the inutility of man's free agency. In proof of this I will quote the following scriptural text: "He will hav mercy on whom he will hav mercy and whom he will, he hardeneth." Now, does not this place all power in God—none in man? Precious doctrin tbis, to be sure!

I will quote one or two more passages from Scripture to prove the falsity of free agency or free will Paul says, in Philip., chapter ii verse 13. "For it is God which worketh in you both to will and to do of his good pleasure." And again, Isaiah xxvi. 12. "Lord, thou wilt ordain peace for us; for thou also hath wrought all our works in us." Now I think it is not necessary to add another word on the subject of free agency or free will in man. I might mention election and prayer, but do not think it is necessary, as they come under the category of the previous questions.

I want to add in conclusion to old orthodox advocates that they must giv up free agency in man or giv up the attributes of God, for they assert that God is omnipotent, omnipresent, and beneficent, and so forth To assert, as is often done, that God would not be invariably regulated by these attributes is to say he is not all-wise, all-powerful, or everywhere present, is to say he is sometimes not God What an idea—a deity being a God and still not a God! That confounds all ideas of order and consistency. Now, I maintain, old orthodox theologians must either giv up free agency or admit Atheism and deny a first cause. On the other hand, if there be a first cause there must be causation, and if causation there must be necessity, and if necessity there can be no free agency. Now which horn of this dilemma will old orthodoxy take? But certain it is, if they insist upon free agency it is they, and not we, who are the Atheists. Again old orthodoxy must either giv up this darling dogma or admit chance, which they themselvs denounce as being as horrible as Atheism. Chance is the opposit to that of necessity. They must therefore admit one or the other. If they admit chance they destroy the doctrin of a first cause, and consequently establish Atheism; and if they admit necessity they explode the dogma of free agency. I hav already shown that where chance exists there cannot be causation, and vice versa. I hav also shown that where causation exists there must be necessity, and consequently no freedom. Old theologians will hav only this alternativ either to concede that free agency is a phantom, or admit chance. Now I hav shown in this letter that churchmen must either abandon free agency or repudiate the doctrin of a personal intelligent deity, day of judgment, divine government of the world, omnipotence of deity, divine providence, foreknowledge of God, creation, fall, and redemption—yes, and the very existence of God. When they extricate themselvs from these troubles I may return to this subject again. But "sufficient to the day is the evil thereof." Mr. Editor, I am the well-wisher of tbe whole human race. J. PETTEY.

Children's Corner.

Edited by Miss Susan H. Wixon, Fall River, Mass., to whom all Communications for this Corner should be sent.

"His life is long whose work is well,
And be his station low or high,
He who the most good works can tell,
Livs longest though he soonest die."

The Doctor's Horse.

Once she was young, and cheerful, and gay;
Nimble and prancing was she in her day;
Very fleet of foot, and strong of limb,
Coy as a maiden, and as neat and trim.

Lithe as a bird o'er the road she sped,
Lifting her ears and shaking her head
As she glanced along in careless glee,
In love with life, and content so to be.

Many a mile the doctor she bore,
Where sickness lingered. and hearts were sore;
She trotted along, through snow and rain,
With a cheerful heart that ne'er might complain.

Quick she awoke in the dead of the night,
In the starless storm, or bright moonlight,
When the doctor's voice, in accents clear,
Fell in well-known tones on her listening ear.

Twenty-three years she came at his call,
Day-time and night-time, from fall to fall;
Faithful and true, year out and year in,
Her highest ambition his praise to win.

She heard of the patient's fevered breath,
Of the new birth, and the arrow of death;
And she almost seemed to know each "case"
By the smile or shade on the doctor's face.

So the years crept on, till, by and by,
With plaintiv neigh and pathetic sigh,
She laid her face 'gainst the doctor's cheek,
And looked the words she could not speak.

"I hav served you well," she seemed to say,
"Hav come at your call for many a day;
Your treatment and care hav been the best,
But I'm tired now, and fain would rest.

"Worn out, used up I am," she mutely said,
"And I feel that I shall soon be—dead;
What seemeth best, you must with me do,
For I'm of no further use to you.

"Old beasts, when their pulses are nearly stilled,
As a general rule are led out and killed.
Like cast-off garments, worn and rotten,
All their good service is forgotten"

"O faithful friend, and must we part?"
And the tears welled up from the doctor's heart.
"You hav been so gentle, true, and kind,
That I've not a word of fault to find.

"And now that age has touched your frame,
That you are feeble, weak, and lame,
Do you think that I can cast you by,
And turn you out, all alone to die?

"No! old friend, on this earth you shall stay
Till nature lets you go hence away;
'Mid pastures green, and by mountain stream,
Your days shall pass as a pleasant dream.

"And the kindest care you shall receive.
At morn, and noon, and shadowy eve;
This little, I'm sure, I should do for thee,
In return for your long fidelity."

In tender pity the doctor stood,
And stroked her head in a thoughtful mood,
While the creature looked her glad surprise
From out the depths of her eloquent eyes.

As the doctor goes o'er his usual space,
He will not forget that gentle face;
And the kindness he gave to the creature old,
Will come back to him a thousand fold.

Queen Dido's Dead.

It was a rainy day in April, and they were up in the barn playing, "Queen Dido's dead."

They were Tom and Jenny Brown, cousin Nell Brown and Johnny Dean. The hay in one end of the barn was on a level with the beam on which they sat in a row, with their feet hanging over toward the other end of the barn, where the hay had been taken out, until it was about six feet from the beam to the hay.

When the game reached its climax the players all tumbled off the beam onto the hay below.

On the day in question, after this point in the game had been reached, and they were resting, Johnny Dean, who was of an inquiring mind, remarked, "I wonder if ever there was a Queen Dido."

"Oh, ho!" laughed Tom. "Of course not. It's only a game, and old as the hills, for I've heard grandma tell about playing it when she was a girl."

"Well, I don't know," said Nell, "but if there ever was such a person, she was black, for my Uncle Jack has a pony named Dido, and it is black as night."

"Well, I don't believe there ever was such a person," said Tom, as he turned a handspring.

"We can ask grandma and find out," said Jenny. "Oh, there is Will!" she cried; "he can tell us." They looked and saw a head rising above the beam, and a voice said, "Hello!"

"O Will!" they all cried together. "Who was Queen Dido, and where did she liv?"

"Well, I am not sure that there ever was such a person, but the story goes that she was a princess of Tyre, and her brother, the king, did not treat her well; so she ran away to Africa, and built the city of Carthage. She was to hav as much land to build it on as could be covered with a bull's hide, and in order to get as much as possible she cut the hide in strips and made it cover a large piece of land. After a while she got tired of living, and burnt herself to death. That is all I know about her. I expect she did lively kicking while she was burning, and that is why your game is so lively."

"There," said Johnny, "I thought there must be something to it."

"Oh! well," said Tom, "no one is sure about it now."

"I say," cried Jenny, "let's play it all now. I'll be Queen Dido, and buy the land from you; but what can we hav for the hide."

"Here is my old hat," said Johnny, "it has a hole in it, and isn't much account."

The hat was soon cut into strips, and laid around on the hay with a heap in the center for Carthage. Then came the burning. This was represented by covering Jenny with hay, the dust which would rise representing smoke. This was lively work, as the queen did some vigorous kicking. But at last they had her nicely covered, and were putting on the finishing touches, when there was a swishing sound in the air, accompanied by a scream from Jenny, who struggled to her feet with water running from her hair and face.

"Will Brown, you are the meanest fellow in the world," they all cried.

Will laughed and said he was "just putting out the fire."

This put an end to the fun for that day, as Jenny had to go to the house to get dry. Johnny Dean had to wear Nell's hood home in place of his hat, and had also to go without cake for his supper, as a punishment for destroying his hat. When they played Queen Dido again, it was in the good old way, as they all agreed it was the better of the two.

METAGRAM.

My last three is but one—
A trinitarian pun—
(How lucky for the "orthodox"
Could they so solve their Paradox).
My first before last three,
All vanishes we see.

My first four, having joy,
Beheaded, is a boy;
But my last four, denoting sound,
Transposed a famous School is found.
My middle, for the best of reasons,
Is middle, first, and last of seasons.
In order all my nine appears
As one of England's great premiers.

Correspondence.

I shall try to furnish a short general formula and rule for the solution of all problems like H. Van Pelt's very interesting Numerical Puzzle. In the first place the numbers are to be written down consecutivly, beginning with the first number at A, second at B, etc., in the order of the alphabet in diagram No. 1. If you place 1 as the first number the sum of the columns will be 65. (See No. 1.)

To determin what must be the first number, we giv this rule:

Subtract the sum of the columns when 1 is the first number from the given sum, divide the remainder by the number of columns in one direction (No. squared here, 5), and to the quotient add one. This givs the first or lowest number of the series. Apply the rule to the solution of the given problem (puzzle):

1885—65=1820—5=364 plus 1=365, the first number in the required square, and now proceed by formula No. 1 and we obtain the answer No. 3.

Yours truly, J. R. P. Baker.

Grand Rapids, Mich., April 23, 1884.

Miss Susan H. Wixon: Being much pleased with the article in The Truth Seeker, by J. K. P. Baker, I herewith send something for that scientific department of the paper, entitled, "Even numbered magic squares." The even numbered squares are much harder to fill than odd ones, as the same rules will not work them. Several years ago I was much interested in the subject and with the help of a young man I found and recorded in a book the great number of 6,656 magic squares of 1 to 16, adding up 34 on all the 10 lines. No two squares alike. This is the one we started with. Your young readers can amuse themselvs very much by constructing them.

DETY ANALYZED AND THE DEVIL'S DEFENSE.

By Col. John R. Kelso, A.M.

Not since Hudibras has there been such damaging blows given to these old myths and fables. The colonel has made the sacredness of the scriptnres appear as absurd as Cervantes made that of the knights of the age of chivalry. The singular audacity with which he attack, the foundations of Christianity shows the earnestness of his own convictions in regard to its fabulous origin.—L Hutchison.

FREETHOUGHT WORKS.

For Sale at THE TRUTH SEEKER Office.

Bible Balanced. The Infidel's Text Book; comparing some of the best teachings and sayings of the Bible with those of Sages and Philosophers who lived previous to the Authors of the Bible; also a Partial Exposition of its Errors. By GEO. C. DARLING. Price, 50 cents.

The Figures of Hell; or, The Temples of Bacchus. Dedicated to licensers of beer and whisky. By Mrs. ELIZABETH THOMPSON. A neat little volume of between two and three hundred pages. $1.

Liberty and Morality. A capital full lecture on these important subjects. By W. S. BELL. A pamphlet of thirty-six well-printed pages mailed for 15 cents.

Superstition in All Ages. By JOHN MESLIER, a Roman Catholic priest, who, after a pastorate of thirty years at Etrepigny and But in Champagne, France, wholly abjured religious dogmas, and left as his last will and testament to his parishioners, and to the world, the work entitled "Common Sense." Price, cloth, $1.50; paper, $1.

Marriage and Parentage and The Sanitary and Physical Laws. For The Production of Children of Finer Health and Ability. By a Physician and Sanitarian. "The virtues of men and women as well as their vices may descend to their children." Price, $1.

The Bible—Whence and What? By RICHARD B. WESTBROOK, D.D., LL.B. The questions, Where did the books of the Bible come from? What is their authority? and, What is the real source of dogmatic theology? are treated fearlessly in the light of history, philosophy, and comparativ religions. It is impossible to giv even a condensed statement of what is itself a marvelous condensation. Whole libraries are here concentrated into one little book. Printed in good type and bound in cloth. Price, $1.

The Bible of the Religion of Science. By H. S. BROWN, M.D. "This volume is most respectfully dedicated to those persons who will cordially unite with others to establish the religion of truth and a just government, by the scientific methods of reason, experience, experiments, and observations. For this is the way to wisdom, and to the material, mental, moral, social, and spiritual sciences, that make peace on earth and good will among men." Price, $1.50.

Socialism and Utilitarianism. By JOHN STUART MILL. Price, $1.50.

Specimen Days and Collect. By WALT WHITMAN. Including autobiography, hospital sketches, democratic vistas, etc. Three hundred and seventy-four pages of hearty, wholesome prose and poetry, never before published. Price, $2.

Ingersoll and Jesus. Conversation in verse between the two great reformers. By SAMUEL P. PUTNAM. Price, 10 cents.

The Sabbath. By M. FARRINGTON. A thorough examination and refutation of the claims of Sabbatarians who are trying to foist upon the country their holy day by unconstitutional legal enactments. The author shows by an appeal not only to the facts as they exist in the nature of things, but by reference to the Bible, and the writings of distinguished historians and theologians of past ages, that Sunday is no more a holy day than Saturday. Price, 10 cents.

The Religion of Common Sense. By Prof. LIEBRECHT ULICH, of Germany. Price, 25 cents.

The Sunday Question. A Historical and Critical Review. With replies to an objector. By GEORGE W. BROWN, M.D. Price, 15 cents.

"By their fruits shall ye know them! Do men gather grapes of thorns, or figs of thistles?"

T. C. LELAND, Secretary of the National Liberal League, says of this book: "This is a severely, awfully, infernally cruel work on the priesthood, but it is a bed of infamy they hav made themselvs, and they must lie in it. Send for the book and see what devourers of sheep the shepherds can be."

BIBLE MYTHS

AND THEIR

Parallels in Other Religions.

Being a Comparison of the Old and New Testament Myths and Miracles with those of heathen nations of Antiquity, Considering also their Origin and Meaning. With numerous Illustrations.

The object of the work is to point out the myths with which the Old and New Testaments abound; to show that they were held in common with other nations; and then trace them to their evident origin and explain their meaning.

"It has long been acknowledged by the most eminent biblical students that the Hebrew scriptures contain a large mythical element; but, so far as we know, the present is the first complete and scholarly atttempt to trace these myths to their source, and ascertain their original signification."—Boston Courier.

"Never before has there been given a volume to the reading world that shows the research for the origin of these myths as does this one just published by J. W. Bouton, of New York."—Boston Times.

"It is unquestionably true that the results of a rationalistic study of the Christian scriptures are nowhere else so accessible as they are now made in the work before us.—N. Y. Sun.

Caressing Arms.

THEY ENFOLD US FROM THE CRADLE TO THE GRAVE.

Oh, in childhood's happy hours, when the merry day was done.
And the weary little forms were laid to rest,
Were the fair, caressing arms of our mother fondly twined
Round her darlings, loved in all the world the best!

Oh! in boyhood's careless hours, as a-roving hand in hand,
With a bashful miss o'er meadows green we strayed,
Then her coy, caressing arms we, with failing courage, drew
'Bout our waists, and shyly kissed the blushing maid!

Oh, in manhood's gallant prime, when, in Love's impassioned dream,
Our delicious thoughts were mingled in a sigh,
The divine, caressing arms of the idol we adored,
Swore a passion that we deemed could never die!

When at last, in hoary age, as with palsied step, and slow,
Down the hill of life we journey toward the sea,
Shall the dear, caressing arms of our children's children cling
Round old grandpa's neck, and twine about his knee! —Elliott Preston.

Catholicism Dangerous to the Republic.

Just before Capel's appearance in Pittsburgh, a paper of that town sent its reporters to learn the opinion of some of the clergy upon the two subjects he was announced to lecture upon—Catholic education, and the influence of the confessional. Their opinions are worth noting, being expressed with temperance, yet with force. We may add that the same remarks apply with but slightly diminished force to Protestantism. The two sectarianisms differ in degree, not in kind:

"Catholic education," said Rev. J. F. McCrory, "leaves out the first principle of education; that, is the thinking for himself by an individual who has arrived at an age of discretion. It develops the faculty of faith at the expense of all the other faculties of a man's mind. A Catholic is taught that faith is above reason, and that reason must submit to faith, whether it be contrary to all reason or not. In the second place, Catholic education denies a man the right to become acquainted with the best thoughts of the world, as it limits his reading to a narrow scope defined by the priest. Outside this he may not venture to think. The education of the Romish church in its highest sense does not allow a man to think in an original manner. His sole education is to learn what the rules of the church are, and not to go outside of them in his thinking. A Catholic gentleman who received his education in one of the best Catholic institutions of the country, the college of St. Xavier, near Latrobe, said they take the young men there and treat them as children, repressing every tendency to intelligent thought, and crowding their minds into the small compass of infantile obedience, to a set of uniform rules of faith and narrow church dogmas. That s what they deny them—the privelege of investigating other than what the church prescribes and lays down. With them, man must submit to the orders of the church, because the church sees fit to so order; not that his personal convictions would subscribe to the measures it dictates. With regard to the Catholic education in its bearings upon man in his relations to government, it may be truthfully said that Catholics hav but one idea of political government, and that is a civil system of which the pope is the head. In other words, their idea of a good citizen is that a man should be a good Catholic. Their education unfits them for any free institution, like a republic, where every man is entitled to an independent opinion, and has the right to demand protection in the free expression of it. With them there is but one thought, and that is the will of the pope. It is as Capel himself said in Washington, in speaking of the appropriations for educational purposes, if they do not receive from the government what they consider is their share of this fund, to devote to the education of their people after the methods of their particular teaching, the pope will issue his order which will be as sharp as the snap of a trigger, and the Catholics will withdraw from all American institutions."

Rev. J. M. Atchison remarked: "The Catholic is denied the liberty of being governed by his own conscientious convictions in every case where such convictions might conflict with the will of the pope. His mind is not allowed the vigorous exercise that it should be put to, but instead is narrowed down to the slavish observances of a set of rules created for him by those who are over him in authority, and who know best what rules to establish for the ends they may hav in view. Ecclesiastical government with the Catholics is superior to all civil forms of government, and obedience to church dogmas paramount to all other considerations. Their submission to the civil authorities is merely a policy by which to accomplish the upholding of the ecclesiastical power, and wherever they can, they enforce the submission of the civil government to the church of Rome."

"The education of Catholicism," said Rev. H. T. McClelland, "does not tend to broaden a man's mind, but narrow it into the channels laid out by those who know best how to strengthen the church. Catholics demand that you tie your faith to those utterances of the church which hav come down through all the ages, instead of allowing modern ideas to hav a weight in your judgment. They ask you to giv away blindly to all the church says. In his social relations, a Catholic may not affiliate with his neighbors of an opposit belief, because his education teaches him that all who are not Catholics must be eternally damned. I remember a case where a Catholic, who had been very kind to a neighbor, said to the latter when he was expressing his gratitude, 'If the church demanded your blood, I would take it as readily as I hav bestowed kindness upon you.' In his political education a Catholic is taught to do all that the church demands. With them the church is first; the state second. If the church thinks its subjects should be loyal to a government, they are loyal. When it comes to a question where the church decides for disloyalty, they will destroy such government if possible. With regard to the confessional and its tendency, it is well-known that Catholics claim that the priest forgivs the penitents in the confessional box. But the worst feature of the confessional is the fact that it teaches so much evil. Perhaps you are surprised. I hav it from the lips of a Catholic gentleman of this city, that at the age of fifteen he had learned more of badness in the confessional than he had learned in the outside world. Understand me, I do not mean to say that the priest directly instructs a youth in the way of wrong-doing, but the questions put in the confessional suggest so much of evil, that ideas of wrong are created in the mind where previously no such thoughts of evil existed."

BEES! BEES! BEES!

FROM $2,000 TO $5,000 A YEAR KEEPING HONEY BEES.

The particulars are simply to prevent the great loss that most bee masters have to contend with annually. Then giv the bees a chance to increase and collect surplus honey to their fullest capacity; all of which can be easily accomplished by using the kind of hive described in "Kidder's Secrets of Bee-keeping."

Send for the Book and see how easily it can be done with a few swarms of bees.

THIS BOOK IS A RELIABLE GUIDE

to all persons that keep bees, especially to the novice or new beginner, as it teaches how all of the troubles and disappointments that the bee master is liable to, can be successfully overcome, such as Foul Brood, Dysentery, Bee Robbery, Ravages of Moth Miller, Loss of Queen, loss of bees in Swarming time, by their flight to the forests, also the great loss in winter and early spring management, which is usually more than all other ways combined. This book will also inform the bee master HOW BEES WILL INCREASE AND THROW OFF SWARMS to an enormous extent, all conditions being favorable. The old stocks will frequently swarm three or four times each, and oft times the first swarms thrown off will swarm once or twice each with a good hive and right kind of management. In warmer climates the bees will increase and swarm to a much greater extent.

GREAT YIELD OF SURPLUS HONEY.

This Book will inform the bee master how to get the greatest amount of surplus honey, and at the same time hav it in small packages weighing three-quarters of a pound to two or three pounds, as may be desired, which will command the highest price in market. In a good season the bee keeper may calculate on two or three hundred pounds of surplus honey from each old stock, and from fift to one hundred pounds from the earlier young swarms especially if they do not over-swarm.

NO MORE BEE-STINGS IN MANAGING BEES.

The Book will post the bee-keepers how to manage them when putting them on, or taking off surplus honey boxes and not get stung in the whole operation.

BEE-KEEPING FOR OUR SONS AND DAUGHTERS.

It being the most pleasant, as well as the most profitable busines that young people can engage in, and at the same time remain at home with their parents. The author has known of several young men who commenced the culture of the bee in their teens, and are now making more money than their fathers who run the farm, and doing it easily and with small investments. We must also remember that the women folks often make the best of bee-keepers, and not so liable to neglect them as the men folks.

KIDDER'S BEE BOOK

should be in the hands of all persons who like honey, and take an interest in the little honey bee. It contains more matter than many books that sell for two dollars, and is embellished with numerous cuts and drawings. There is no trouble, loss, or damage that a bee master has to contend with but what the book will giv the proper remedy, by simply referring to the index, and that will point to the page where it is fully explained.

In order to bring this book more prominently before the mass of bee keepers, the Author proposes to giv, as a premium to each purchaser of a book, from this date until July next, the privilege of making his Celebrated Patent Bee Hive, as spoken of in book, for their own use (but not to sell) Free of Charge, otherwise there will be the usual Patent Fee of Five Dollars to each individual that wishes to make and use the hive.

PRICE, BOARD BOUND, CLOTH BACK, 75 CENTS.

N. B. The directions for hive making with cuts, drawings, etc., will be inclosed within each book sold, until Jul, next (not longer). Now is the time for all bee-keepers to avail themselves of this liberal offer, which is simply to buy a book at the Regular Price, before July next

D. M. BENNETT'S LAST WORK.

A TRUTH SEEKER

Around the World.

FOUR LARGE VOLUMES.

With a steel plate engraving of the author in Vol. I. and each volume illustrated with forty-seven cuts.

BY D. M. BENNETT,

Late editor of THE TRUTH SEEKER, author of "A Truth Seeker in Europe," "Gods and Religions of Ancient and Modern Times," "The World's Sages, Thinkers, and Reformers," "Champions of the Church," etc., etc.

Handsomely bound in red cloth, $6.50; in leather, red edges, $9.50; in morocco, gilt edges, $10.50.

Readers of THE TRUTH SEEKER know the circumstances under which this work was written. The last words penned by the great author were for the fourth volume which was nearly completed at his death, and which will now contain an account of his world-lamented death and burial. Mr. Bennett was a very patient and faithful chronicler of the habits and customs of the different peoples of the many places he visited. The every-day life of all nations is laid before the reader by one who has visited them and beheld them with his own eyes. Particular attention is paid to the progress of Freethought in the various countries he visited, and the morality of so-called pagan nations is contrasted with the morality of Christian countries, much to the detriment of the latter. The work is a

Freethinker's History of the World.

This work and "A TRUTH SEEKER IN EUROPE" should be in every Liberal's library Besides its intrinsic worth it is a memento of one of the greatest Freethinkers the world has known—of one who ranks with Voltaire and Paine in the force and clearness of his writings.

ANOTHER NEW BOOK!

New! Eloquent! Elegant! Splendid!

JUST PUBLISHED.

PROSE POEMS

And Selections,

BY

ROBERT G. INGERSOLL.

This new book is a gem. It is a model in every respect. In fact, one of the richest, brightest, best ever issued.

It contains, besides the celebrated "Decoration Day Oration," never before published, and all the famous "tributes" heretofore printed in various shapes, but never brought together till now, many other gems selected from the speeches, arguments, lectures, letters, table-talks, and day-to-day conversations of the author.

The work is designed for, and will be accepted by, admiring friends as a rare personal souvenir. To help it serve this purpose, a fine steel portrait, with autograph fac simile, has been prepared especially for it.

In the more elegant styles of binding, this volume is eminently suited for presentation purposes, for any season or occasion.

In workmanship the volume is a masterpiece. The type is large and beautiful; the paper heavy and richly tinted; the presswork faultless; and the binding, as perfect as the best materials and skill can produce. The book is quarto in size, and contains 248 pages. No item of expense has been spared to make the work worthy of author and public.

Remarkable Cure of Paralysis in One Week.

CINCINNATI, Dec. 19, 1882.

DR. L. TENNEY—Dear Sir: As I feel greatly indebted to you for the benefit I hav received from your treatment, and the use of your Magnetic appliances, I can say without hesitation to those afflicted as I hav been that the effect was simply marvelous. Two weeks ago I was stricken with paralysis in my right arm and could not use it at all, but after wearing a suit of your MAGNETIC CLOTHING for one week, can use it quite as well as ever. I hav also been troubled with Dyspepsia and Kidney Complaint for a number of years, from which I hav suffered intensely, and, although doctoring all the time, never found but temporary relief. Since putting on your appliances I hav experienced great benefit, and if I improve as rapidly as I hav in the past two weeks, will soon be well. I would, therefore, recommend to those suffering as I hav your Magnetic appliances as the only means of effecting a sure cure. Yours respectfully,

WM. H. CLEMMER,
No. 80 Eastern avenue.

Remember that the same appliances which will effect a cure in a case of Paralysis will at the same time eradicate CATARRH or DYSPEPSIA in the same patient. We do not, like the Old School Physician, change medicins every day until, after dosing the patient almost to death, he may possibly strike something (if he is very skilful) that brings relief for the time being.

Neuralgia of the Heart of Six Years Standing Cured in Three Weeks.

SHULLSBURG, WIS., Dec. 11, 1882.

DR. L. TENNEY—Dear Sir: After wearing one of your MAGNETIC VESTS for about three weeks, I was entirely cured of Neuralgia of the Heart and Side, which had been a source of misery to me for the last six years. I had tried numerous remedies before without benefit, but as soon as I put on the MAGNETIC VEST I got relief instantly. With unbounded gratitude, I remain

Yours respectfully,
H. A. BROWN.

Ladies, read the following testimony from a lady who had been under drug treatment for eight years with nervous prostration and female weakness:

OSBORN, O., Dec. 15, 1882.

DR. L. TENNEY: Your letter just received; also the Clothing on Tuesday last. Fitted perfectly. FELT BETTER FROM THE FIRST HOUR I HAD THEM ON. Am not joking, and if I improve as rapidly as I hav since Tuesday, will soon be well. Will report again soon. Respectfully yours, E. J. K.

This lady reports herself entirely cured in less than six weeks after putting on the garments, and, although in bed, unable to get out, when applied, she nevertheless was able to ride twenty miles in two days after the application. The lady's name can be had upon application at this office, by any one desiring to communicate with her.

Ladies, read the following testimony from a lady who had been suffering for two years with an Ovarian Tumor, and who had been told that nothing but the knife would save her life, and the chances were as 9 to 1 against recovery. In four months' time she is perfectly well, and has not taken a dose of medicin since putting on the appliances. Consult us when your physician tells you he can do nothinog for you, it will pay you.

SHULLSBURG, WIS., November 19, 1882.

DR. L. TENNEY, Dear Sir: About two years ago my health began to fail me; I became nervous, lost all desire for food, and, in fact, began to fail rapidly, so that I became alarmed and consulted several physicians of St. Louis, at which place I was then stopping, all of whom declared that I had an Ovarian Tumor, and that the only thing that would save my life would be the knife. About six months ago I grew rapidly worse, and had about made up my mind to take the only course that seemed left to me, and submit to an operation, when my attention was called to the Eureka Magnetic Appliances. As a drowning man will catch at a straw, so did I catch at this faint hope of a cure. Four months ago I purchased a suit of your appliances. From the very first I felt invigorated, the tumor, which had extended entirely across my abdomen, began to decrease, my pains became less from day to day, until now I am as well as I ever was in my life. Since putting on the appliances I hav not taken a single dose of medicin. My bowels, which before were constipated, are now regular. I would therefore cheerfully recommend them to anyone suffering as I hav, believing that they will do all and more than you claim for them. I remain,

Gratefully yours, MRS. MARY J. STEWART.

Remember that these appliances are not worn next the skin, but over the under-garment, and, unlike all other appliances in the market, they impart no shocks and leaves no sores.

PRICE LIST.

Nerve and Lung Invigorators,	$ 6.00
Gentlemen's Belts,	6.00
Ladies' Abdominal Belts,	6.00
Sciatic Appliances, each,	5.00
Leg Belts, each,	4.00
Knee Caps, each,	3.00
Wristlets, each,	1.50
Sleeping Caps,	4.00
Ladies Jacket,	18.00
Gentlemen's Vests,	15.00
Superfine Insoles,	1.00

Children's garments upon application.

Any of the above garments sent to any address upon receipt of price, and we will return the money if they are not as represented in every respect. If you are uncertain as to what would best suit your case send us word stating symptoms, and we will advise you what would be best suited to treat you. While our appliances are offered at less than one-third of what others are selling worthless appliances for, yet we will guarantee that the magnetic quality is a hundred fold superior to any other appliance ever offered the public, and will outlast the garments themselvs. Every magnet is put through a particular process, and hav raised five times their own weight six months after being magnetized, while not a single appliance in the market will attract the smallest particle of iron, the majority of such worthless appliances having so-called magnets made of material no better than hoop-iron, and not capable of retaining magnetism for a moment. All of our garments are made from the very best material for the purpose, and will outlast any and all other garments now before the public. Every magnet is arranged in the garments upon scientific principles, and not haphazard as in all the others. We offer you therefore

The Only Scientific Magnetic Appliance Ever Constructed.

And challenge comparison with any of the so-called magnetic garments now offered under that head. At the same time the application of labor-saving machinery in our manufacture enables us to offer them about

ONE-THIRD THE PRICE HERETOFORE CHARGED,

So that we can say with truth, None are so poor that they cannot procure them, being but a trifle higher than ordinary clothing.

Remember that we are offering you the cheapest and best magnetic appliances in the market, and if upon receiving the garments they do not meet your expectation, return them at our expense and we will refund your money.

Ladies' Abdominal Jackets and Gentlemen's Vests are made to order, and a fit guaranteed.

AGENTS WANTED IN EVERY TOWN IN THE UNITED STATES. LIBERAL COMMISSIONS ALLOWED

Address for further information.

DR. L. TENNEY,
Race Street, cor. 9th Street, Cincinnati, O.

Please cut this petition out, attach it to a blank sheet of paper, sign it, get all your friends and neighbors to sign it, and then send it to this office.

A PETITION FOR STATE SECULARIZATION.

To the Honorable Senators and Members of the House of Representatives of the United States Congress:

A republican form of government being based on liberty, equality, and fraternity, as both means and end, involves the separation of Church and State, whose union is the worst form of class-legislation and the most infallible sign of arbitrary power. A house divided against itself cannot stand. The institutions of this Commonwealth should be made homogeneous throughout. Impartial protection of all citizens in their equal rights and liberties, by encouraging the free movement of mind, promotes the establishment of truth in whatever direction. Any infringement by government of this absolute equality of its citizens is the parent of manifold evil, a national crime committed against that natural "justice" which, as the Constitution declares, this government was founded to "establish."

And yet, though the first amendment to the Constitution of the United States says, "Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion or prohibiting the free exercise thereof," there does exist a union of Church and State, which gives to Christianity moral and material aid, and so proscribes other religions and forms of belief and unbelief, while taxing these also for the support of that special religion.

The ways in which this old alliance between Church and State still survives among us are:

1. Recognition of God and Christianity in State Constitutions.
2. Exemption of Church property from taxation.
3. Appropriations of public money for sectarian purposes.
4. Religious exercises, as the reading of the Bible, etc., in the public schools.
5. Laws enforcing the observance of the Sabbath on the authority of the Bible.
6. Religious test-oaths in courts of justice and on instalment into office.
7. Chaplaincies in the Legislature, the Army, and the Navy.
8. Fast and Thanksgiving Proclamations, which contain theological ideas that may or may not be acceptable to the citizen.

The necessity for this separation of Church and State is more apparent now than ever before, because of the still greater diversity of religious beliefs, the many forms of dissent from the religion which receives State patronage, and the growing signs of sectarian strife and ambition in the arena of politics. And emphasis needs to be given to the fact that the union of Church and State is a great hindrance to the employment of right methods in dealing with many questions of reform now demanding attention. And most essential is it at all times, and especially in the present, in order to secure for the law its due respect and observance, that the people's representatives should exhibit the strictest fidelity to their trusts by following the law in its letter and spirit.

Your petitioners, therefore, pray that immediate action be taken by the law-making power to bring into harmony the theory and practice of our government in making the following principle a part of the fundamental law of the land by amendment to the United States Constitution:

The total separation of Church and State, by prohibiting Congress or any State, County, Municipality, or Township from enacting any law that favors religion in any of the eight ways specified, or in any other way, or prohibits the free exercise thereof.

Odds and Ends.

"WHAT is it that you like about that girl?" asked one young man of another. "My arm," was the brief reply.

A MEMBER of the Salvation Army in the West has been bitten by a dog. His friends are anxiously waiting to see what the effect will be—on the dog.

A CONNECTICUT minister has denounced kissing games at social church gatherings. He is ninety-five years old. The old man evidently wants it in the dark. The giddy old coon!

A VERMONT paper titled the Landmark informs its readers, in a burst of indignant righteousness, that no lady or gentleman, however costly or fashionable their raiment, will sit in a chuch and eat peanuts.

IT is estimated from a statistical point of view that loss of appetite among young people on account of love, annually saves to this country $100,000,000. Perhaps so; but the expense of extra light and fuel and caramels and ice-cream on the same account, it is estimated, more than balances this amount.

"Is it possible!" exclaimed the new chaplain to the worst thief in the penitentiary. "Are you fifty-two years old? My unfortunate friend, you don't look thirty!" "No," replied the thief, humbly. "I don't show my age, but that is because I take things so easy." And the good chaplain told him that was right; that care and worry make men old faster than hard work.

A FARMER who raises a good many hogs attended a state fair in Ohio, and wrote the following letter back to his neighbor: "Dear Friend: Yesterday I inspected the live stock department of the fair. You will be interested to know that the display of hogs was unusually large. Among the hogs I saw some of your breed, and was very much surprised at not seeing you there yourself."

A NEGRO was recently seated on a rail fence in Arkansas intently looking at the telegraph wires. A gentleman passing said, "Watching the wires?" "Yes, sah." "Waiting to see a message go by, hey?" The negro smiled and said, "Yes, sah." The gentleman kindly told him that messages were invisible, and explained the working of the electric current to him at length. Concluding he said, "Now you know something about it." "Yes, sah." "What do you work at?" "I'm a telegraph operator at the Hazel Switch station, sah."

THE greatest show on earth: Remembah that this is the only show having on exhibition the statesman who has gone out of politics, the Ohio man without an office, and the original Garfield man; that we hav here in a glawse case the reformer who is working the reform act without a salary and the private watchman standing wide awake on duty; we hav here a church choir singing and living in perfect harmony, not having quarreled during the past fifteen minutes; here we hav an actress with but one husband, her own and only; also will arrive per next steamer, consigned to this show, an English nobleman who has not proposed to Mary Anderson, the only living specimen on the face of the globe, and all spread out before your wondering eyes for the small sum of a quatovdollar.—Hawkeye.

A NEW YORK drummer the other day ran across a retail grocer in this state who had been in the business, and in the same store for thirty-four continuous years. "And didn't you ever fail?" asked the drummer. "How could I?" "Why, any business man can fail." "Perhaps they can; but when a fellow can't get credit for over seventy-five dollars before they draw on him, I don't see the object in shutting up shop." "And didn't you take advantage of the panic?" "Not a copper; I didn't owe anything, and the only goods which went up were clothespins and codfish, and I was short on both." "Never got burned out?" "Never. Every fire jumps right over me, no freshet comes within ten feet of my walls, and the only cyclone we ever had missed me by forty rods. I tell you, stranger, when I think how honest I've been obliged to be, it makes me shudder."

"WHUR did yer git dat fine piece ob poultry, Brover Johnsing?" inquired Parson Longface, the colored preacher, of Deacon Johnson, with whom he was taking dinner. "Over at Farmer Ploughshar's, sir," replied the dusky deacon, smacking his lips. "I truss' de Lord yer didn't steal it, Brover Johnsing," continued the parson, beginning to feel sick at the stomach at the very thought of eating stolen chicken. "No, no, parson; dat ain't no stolen burd." "Well, I'se glad ter hear it, deacon, but how did yer get it?" "Well, I'se gwine to tell yer, parson. Yer see, las' evenin' I was passin' Farmer Ploughshar's when I seed his chicken-coop door open. I jes' goes to dat coop, an' I shuts der door, and I sez ter myself, 'Johnsing, that's an honest act, an' yer orter be paid for it,' so I takes a plump hen—and 'dat's it what yer jest devoured, parson." After this explanation the preacher's conscience seemed to feel easier, and he looked around inquiringly as though he thought there might be some more fowl in the vicinity.

AN officer patroling Griswold street observed a stranger closely scanning the various buildings, as if measuring their dimensions with his eye, and finally inquired if he was looking for any particular number. "I'm a-looking for a bank," was the reply. "Well, there's half a dozen on the street." "Yes, I see, but I ain't quite satisfied. I've turned over a new leaf, and am going to start a bank account. Here's two dollars I'm going to put in as a nest-egg." "Well, I guess it will be safe with any of them." "Mabbe so, but I'm kinder mixed. If I bank with a four-story building like enough a cyclone will come along and shave off about two stori s. If I bank with any of the two-story fellers mabbe they'll rent the upper floor to somebody who'll dig down into the vaults and gobble my cash." The officer left him in a state of doubt, but two hours later found him in the alley in the rear of the post-office happy drunk. "Hav you got over your doubt?" asked the blue coat as he kindly collared him. "Whaz you mean?" "Why, about the banks?" "Yez, zur—yez, zur, 'stead of taking f-four or two-s-story, bank I split the differenze, and left all my money in a three-story s-saloon. Whoop! Turned over a new leaf, and going to start 'er bank myself!"

A JOURNAL OF FREETHOUGHT AND REFORM.

Vol. 11. No. 20. {PUBLISHED WEEKLY.} New York, Saturday, May 17, 1884. {33 CLINTON PLACE.} $3.00 per year.

Notes and Clippings.

It costs $285,000 annually to supply the English army with spiritual consolation.

Dr. Darnall, the "former beloved" pastor of the Cumberland, Tenn., Presbyterian church, has gone crazy.

The first thing that the Puritans did here was to fall upon their knees; the next was to fall upon the aborigines.

Twenty-one years ago there were twelve women doctors in the United States. Now there are 850 and more coming.

The New York Star announces a Spiritualist temple, to cost $250,000, shortly to be built in the Back Bay region of Boston.

Prohibition certainly prohibits, but it don't prevent. A large distillery is to be established at Dubuque, Iowa. What's the matter with Iowa's prohibition laws?

At Gotha, in Germany, on Easter Day, the corpse of an American lady was cremated, this being the 163d case of the kind since the establishment of the Crematorium there.

The heathen Chinee may be peculiar, but he has his redeeming traits. In San Francisco the Chinese gave $45,000 to aid their countrymen who were sufferers from the recent great floods near Canton. Several Chinese merchants gave $1,000 each.

Rev. W. Venables Williams, J. P., rector of Liandrillo and Colwyn Bay, North Wales, has not only got into trouble with his parishioners and curate, but has also fallen foul of his bishop. He roundly abuses the bishop of St. Asaph, taunts him with unmanliness, and describes him as a "coward."

"The whole western portion of this country seems to be honey-combed with Infidelity," said the Rev. J. Hyatt Smith in the East Congregational church, Brooklyn, last Sunday morning. "Live missionaries must be sent there. It won't do to send fools. I came back after being there three weeks."

Another minister has—not ruined a sister but—had his eyes opened to the shortcomings of the church. "In the struggle of the broken-hearted poor about us," said the Rev. William Smith, of this city, the other day, to the Particular Synod of the Dutch Reformed Church, "the stately church spires only throw a darkening shadow."

A New England deacon called upon a brother deacon with whom he was at variance, and with an air of great solemnity said: "Brother Jones, it is a shame that this quarrel of ours should bring scandal upon the church. I hav prayed earnestly for guidance in the matter, and I hav come to the conclusion that you must giv in, for I cannot."

The United Presbyterian Presbytery of Dumbarton, Scotland, has refused to admit a Mr. Gray to the office of elder because he had taken a walk on a Sabbath afternoon and would not giv a promis to refrain from doing so in future. It is very evident, remarks the Star, that Christ and his twelve disciples would hav failed, had they been now living, to obtain an entrance into this remarkable religious community.

There is a man in Berrien county, Ga., who has not slept in a house since the war. He carries his entire wardrobe with him wherever he goes, as well as his pantry and kitchen utensils, and spends the night wherever darkness may overtake him. He is a veritable curiosity. He never reads newspapers, holding that to read the Bible as it should be read requires all of his time. Several days ago he inquired of the editor of a paper if Germany and France were still at war.

The news from Germany this week is that a committee of the Reichsrath will report favorably a bill for the suppression of Socialistic doctrins. Another bill providing for the imposition of severe penalties against the criminal use of dynamite and other explosiv material has been submitted to a committee of the Bundesrath. The prefect of police has received letters threatening to blow up the Parliament chambers with dynamite upon Prince Bismarck's next appearance there. Germany must be a comfortable country to liv in!

During a meeting at the Methodist church (colored) of Mc Kinney, Tex., the foundations gave away, and the building was thrown violently to the ground. Two lamps exploded, scattering burning oil over the congregation. One colored woman was burnt to death, and another had all her clothing burnt off and will probably die. Several others were badly burnt. The recent rains had undermined the foundations, causing the church to fall. "The Lord cares for his own!"

On the 3d inst, Judge Thayer, of Philadelphia, delivered the opinion of the Court of Common Pleas No. 4 admitting Mrs. Carrie B. Kilgore to practice. Every other Common Pleas Court of the state has refused her admission, although exceptional action was taken some time ago by the Orphans' Court where the lady is a practitioner. Judge Arnold dissents from the opinion of his colleagues, Thayer and Elcock. The court took the ground that its action was sustained by a common law right, which the legislature had not interfered with by statute.

At a meeting of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union in this city, Mrs. E. T. Ellis said: "I hope and pray that we may hav a temperance man and his wife in the White House. We need 'another Mr. Hayes in the White House." Does Mrs. Ellis call a person who is glad to drink at the expense of other people, and is too mean to pay for his own drinks, a temperance person? That is the kind of person Hayes was—stingy, sneaking, and hypocritical in this regard as in every other. The actions of such people as Hayes—if there are any other people who possess all his characteristics—are an injury and not a benefit to temperance.—Sun.

The Christian Messenger is responsible for the story that the ladies of a prominent church in Alleghany recently advertised a Hug and Kiss festival, to raise money for the flood sufferers. Only "very nice persons" were invited. The cards ran: "You are invited to assist in a hug and kiss festival held at the church for the benefit of the flood sufferers. You were highly commended to the committee." The prices were: Ten cents to hug any girl between thirteen and twenty, five cents for girls between twenty and thirty, old maids two for a cent, one dollar to hug another man's wife. Such is the nonsense practiced in some sections in the name of religion.

Professor Virchow said in the course of a recent lecture delivered before the students of Edinburgh University: "The opinions which I expressed hav in some English publications been much misunderstood. I never was hostil to Darwin, never hav said that Darwinism was a scientific impossibility. But when I pronounced my opinion on Darwinism at the Association of German Naturalists at Munich I was convinced, as I still am, that the development which it had taken in Germany was extreme and arbitrary." Professor Virchow will be recognized as the man whom Joseph Cook has held up and pointed at as the deadly enemy and exposer of the theories of Darwin. It is beginning to look as though it were impossible for Cook to make an honest statement.

At the Methodist Conference in Philadelphia last week, one of the delegates said he regretted that the disposition to employ "methods which find favor in political assemblies" was growing so rapidly in the church's election of bishops, and alluded to "combinations" which were disturbing the proceedings of the Conference. He was greeted with a loud chorus of "Amens," and was followed by the Rev. Dr. Hatfield, of Rock River, who created a tremendous commotion by charging that the old Methodist custom of the delegates spending hours upon their knees before voting for a bishop had given place to "caucussing, log-rolling, and wire-pulling." He said that a "delegate could hardly get out of a car before he was button-holed and asked to join a combination," and that there was too much of the "you tickle me and I'll tickle you," and too little of genuin piety in the elections to be good for the church. The Rev. Dr. Hatfield was finally shut off, but no one seems to hav questioned successfully the truth of his charges.

Robert Pyne, of the Hartford Examiner, cannot understand why John Swinton's Paper should urge the working people to press their demands upon Congress, while at the same it tells them that Congress givs no heed to their measures. It is plain enough, answers Mr. Swinton. Congress does not heed their measures, because they hav never yet made their demands in such a way as to compel heed. Congress is run in the interest of capital and monopoly because the horny-handed voters do not bring their power to bear upon Congress, or use the means they possess of controling it. The one side is strong, not because the other is weak, but because it does not use its strength. The assailants carry the day because the defenders are asleep. The Congress which is deaf to whining or groaning would obey a voice of thunder. There is no measure needed for the welfare of this country that the horny-handed voters could not put through Congress within a year from this time. If the present party will not heed, they can elect a body next November that will heed. Robert Pyne, of Hartford, should take a hand in urging the people to make their demands now; and then, if Congress treats them with scorn, they may thus be stirred up to put another Congress there that will not. Let us exhaust every means of gaining the desired end sought by Robert Pyne. All power is with the majority, and they will wield it when they are aroused.

A Boston paper makes these comments upon Mrs. Kilgore's victory: The admission of a woman to the bar in Philadelphia has been put by the judge on broad, scientific and logical grounds that will strengthen with the world's progress in the path it has been pursuing since men lived in caves and reckoned their women as domestic cattle. Three separate courts in Philadelphia hav rejected Mrs. Kilgore's application (in spite of her diploma from the University of Pennsylvania) on the ground that though the statutes say nothing about it, the uniform custom of the world has confined the practice of law to men. Judge Thayer, of the fourth court to which the lady has applied, is unable to see that any custom is established by "mere negation." He "declines to enter into a controversy on the subject of women's rights," and decides the case on the following grounds: First, that "if there is any longer any such thing as what old-fashioned philosophers and essayists used to call the sphere of woman," it must now be admitted to be "a sphere with an infinit and indeterminable radius;" that she is "found in all the pursuits and professions of life;" that persons who talk of her admission to these with apprehension as of "an impending social change," are asleep and ought to "awake from their slumbers" and recognize the fact that "the revolution is over;" and, finally, that it would not be in the line of a "wise judicial discretion" to attempt to "turn backward the wheel of time to convince history that it is all wrong, and to say at this time of day that woman shall not be permitted to pursue the vocation that suits her taste, and for which her studies hav qualified her." We call this a scientific and logical decision because it recognizes the facts, and the necessary deduction from them, however unpalatable those facts and their teachings may be. When women were permitted to learn the alphabet, the business was done for their "sphere." Physical disabilities handicap, but the physical less and less dominates the world. Darwin, in that letter which was received here shortly before his death, but which has never been published, probably because it givs so little aid or comfort to either side of the question, foretells the gradual equalizing of women with men, first in business and the professions, and then in politics and government, but deplores it as certain to be at the cost of the extinction of the "gentler sex" as such.

News of the Week.

A Mormon missionary has been condemned to a month's imprisonment in Vienna.

Monsignor Capel, the Jesuit emissary from Rome, is talked of for an American bishopric.

Schuyler Colfax predicts that the nominee for president will be either Lincoln, Harrison, or Edmunds.

The New York Greenbackers hav invited Gen. B.F. Butler to accept the Greenback nomination for president.

A statue of Chief Justice John Marshall was unveiled at Washington last Saturday. The eulogy was delivered by Chief Justice Waite.

Twenty union stove moulders of Quincy mobbed and fired upon a number of non-union fellow-craftsmen last Saturday. More trouble is anticipated.

A German duke who is the husband of one of Queen Victoria's daughters wishes to marry his wife's sister morganatically, which is a kind of left-handed, high-toned bigamy.

A New York undertaker is advertising his business by obtaining photographs of corpses at the morgue and distributing them with his announcement printed on the back.

Two remarkable "faith" cures are reported from Litchfield, Me. In one case a cancer was removed by prayer and in the other several deaf mutes were made to hear and speak. Every age has its fashionable fraud. The faith cure is in style at present.

"The Life of Queen Victoria," by Sarah Tytler, edited by Lord Ronald Gower, will be issued in June. Several members of the royal family assisted in its preparation. Victoria appears to be attracting a great deal of attention just at present for so inconsequential a personage.

The sparring tour of John L. Sullivan, the pugilist, has netted that eminent slugger more then $100,000 profit according to his own statement. He contemplates a trip to England for the purpose of interviewing, in his striking way, the distinguished members of his profession in that country.

About three acres of ground in Zanesville, O., sank suddenly several feet last Sunday, carrying a number of houses with it. The phenomenon was accompanied by a terrific report, and the belief was prevalent that an earthquake had caused it. The theory is that several deserted coal mines caved in.

The conduct of Father Kuenz, of the St. Stanislaus Bohemian church at Baltimore, so displeased Stephen Norokofski, a member of the church, that, meeting the pastor on the street one day last week, he assaulted him with intent to inflict bodily injury. The interference of a passer by saved the priest from a beating.

Twenty-four colored converts to the Baptist church were baptized in a creek at Elizabeth, N. J., last Sunday, notwithstanding the chilly condition of the water. This was done by an obscure negro preacher. It is not probable that the most distinguished minister in the Baptist church has opened the season with a more promising batch of idiots.

Ruth Lockwood, a young lady of this city, was nearly dying of diphtheria a few days ago when the remedy suggested by Dr. Delthel, of Paris, in a report to the French Academy of Medicin—the smoke of burning tar and turpentine—was tried. It has given her great relief at every application, always sending her off to sleep, and she is apparently getting well.

The Marine National Bank of this city suspended on the 6th. The cause was the failure of the firm of Grant & Ward, Wall street gamblers. The Grants of this firm are ex-President Ulysses S. and his son Jesse. All their property is said to be involved and swallowed up, with the exception of the fund of $250,000 raised for the elder Grant a few years ago, and which is held in trust.

Chapter XXX.

GOLDEN SILENCE.

The officer of the day was making the "grand rounds," and in a moment our little company was surrounded with rebel troops. Their leader dashed forward to see who this unexpected company on the confines of the camp might be.

"It's Harry," said Jones, "and we are his prisoners."

Harry instantly recognized them, and ordered his soldiers to halt while he dismounted and advanced.

"I know you," he cried. "I have been expecting you. I hope you have good news." Turning to his escort he said: "These are scouts. I must see them privately. Remain."

Amy and the rest caught the drift of his words, and helped to carry out the fiction that they were secret scouts of Harry.

He quickly advanced and greeted them.

"I don't know where you came from," he said, "but you must escape from this."

"That's our plan," cried Cupples. "We have just run away, and don't like to be interfered with."

"You shan't, so far as I am concerned," answered Harry, "and whatever may be the laws of war, in this case I shall lend you a hand."

"These are our good friends, General Stubbs and Doctor Dobson," said Cupples. "They belong to this partnership, and must go with us."

"Your friends are my friends," said Harry, "and between us the obligation is supreme. And this lady."

For the first time Harry looked full at Amy. Beautiful and queenly she appeared in the faint effulgence of the night. In a moment the blaze of recognition came, and Harry impetuously leaped to her side, knelt at her feet, and passionately kissed her trembling hand.

"Is this possible?—fool that I have been!" he cried. "Was ever woman so worthy as this?"

Amy was like marble. Love and pride struggled in her bosom.

"Is this my little girl?" he cried, as he flung his arms about Bessie. "What a treasure!"

Bessie stared at him wonderingly, and hardly knew whether to flee away or nestle to his bosom.

"There is no time for this," he said. "We have met like ships at sea—just for a moment in the blinding storm. Danger is all about. I must bid goodbye in my very greeting."

He gave a sharp whistle, and Columbus was at his side.

"This is your guide," he said. "Follow him, and you are safe. He knows the whole country, and just where the Union Army is. I must hurry off, or there will be suspicion."

For an instant Harry seemed entranced, as with intense gaze he looked at his wife and child, so attractive in their natural beauty, children of the soil, akin with the trees and flowers and flowing with their powerful and radiant life, vividly contrasting with the dull mechanic copies of civilized commonplace.

"What have I not sacrificed to the world and custom?" said Harry in his heart. "Fool, fool, fool that I have been. This is nature's wealth, and I have given it up for the counterfeit. Nevertheless it is but a dream now. The reality is war and death."

With a mighty effort he recovered apparent calmness, and rapidly rejoined his escort, and was soon lost in the darkness, and our little company was again as if in the silence of a vast wilderness.

Columbus motioned them to follow, and they quickly obeyed.

With the daring of genius, instead of skirting the camp, he took them right through its center as being the safest way, having himself the countersign, and being thoroughly acquainted with the position of the troops.

In and out the alternate darkness and light they passed from brigade to brigade, and division to division, from one line of camp-fire to another, now through silence, and then the radiance smote by the clash of arms of those preparing for sentinel duty. Boldly advancing when challenged, and then being led by their skilful guide through the fringes of the forest, until ere morning they had passed the outermost limits of the camp, and were swiftly galloping toward the north.

"I do so want to talk with Columbus," said Jones, "but he never wastes his ammunition that way, and what is he not capable of doing?"

"A golden silence indeed," said the doctor. "He utilizes all his force and puts it into act. Oh, what an example for us poor devils who will talk and so lose our virility."

"If there must be talk, I think we'd better do it," said Stubbs. "I should be perfectly miserable if I were deaf and dumb and had to live on my own heart and brain. I'd rather talk like a fool than simply act like a wise man. To blow my own horn is the only luxury I've got. In fact, it's now a necessity."

"There's philosophy and religion in talk, no doubt," said the doctor. "Almost all the world runs that way. Theology is only talk gone to seed, and what would the church do without preaching. People would never go to church to keep silence. The meeting-house is more for the relief of tongue than for the salvation of the soul. They have to sandwich tongue between the services, or the people would never partake of the bread of life."

"Rather far-fetched that, doctor," said Stubbs, "but nevertheless you've hit it. I get my living by talking, and, therefore, I must stick to it. To me silence is not golden. The length of my purse depends upon the length of my tongue. To out-talk people is to outwit people. However, there must be intervals of silence and downright doing. This is the benefit, I suppose, of this tremendous war. Words amount to nothing, and we learn the value of action."

"Words must come to blows occasionally," said the doctor, "in order to vindicate their value. We make a good fight in order to lay the foundation for a good talk. What heaps of oratory there'll be after this war's over. Dear me!"

"I long for the time," said Stubbs. "I'm full of eloquence."

"Keep it bottled up," said Cupples.

"And burst like champagne," said Stubbs. "What a popping there'll be!"

Columbus still pressed on, silent and powerful as the sweep of gravitation. So omnipotent, after a while, became his example that even Stubbs ceased to utter a word, and they all went forward as if alike deaf and dumb. The spell of silence touched them to eager action, and every faculty was strained to make the best of each flying moment.

Columbus was a character of powerful reserve—ready for any emergency—meeting each difficulty without the slightest apparent exertion. He was a born leader, and, in happier circumstances, would have ruled an empire with eclat. He was one, however, who lived a life of unknown wealth and glory, one of those thousand million personalities that really make the world the marvel that it is; who are great in little things because they would be great in great things if the opportunity ever occurred. Greatness, after all, is not relative, it is essential. The relatively great man is very often an essentially small man, and, perhaps, the very smallness of his nature is that which contributes to make him large in the eyes of the world. The very fulness of one's being oftentimes makes him an unrecognized quantity in the outward affairs of men. The simplest action is such a delight that his genius does not seek for a prominent theater. The silentest deed is an all-sufficient reward, because the movement of the spirit is the supreme joy, and not the applause of mankind.

It was a pleasure to watch the quick, strong, ever-varying activity of Columbus. There was in it the intensity of the volcano and the calmness of a summer's sea. His form was like that of a gladiator. His arms and breast were prodigious in their muscular development. His neck was like a tower. His head was like Apollo's carved in ebony, and upon it gleamed the mystery and the majesty of the Sphinx. His eyes were deeply soft and brilliant, yet flashed like the keen rays of the North Star, and there was in them beams of latent fierceness, as if in his blood boiled the wild life of burning Africa; and the lion-nature was still at the basis of what he might have of cultivated manhood.

It was a wonderful fleeting, glittering picture those fugitives made as they went through the forests and over the streams. Columbus in the van, Amy and Bessie close behind, a perfect contrast in grace and dignity, yet blending in marvelous motion and color with his dark and giant form; while, with bold and dashing eagerness, followed Stubbs and Jones, noble specimens of Anglo-Saxon brightness and strength, while after them thundered Cupples, not quite so admirable in his horsemanship, for he would bob up and down occasionally and spread his legs out; but nevertheless, his picturesque riding was a vast improvement upon his original effort when, with Bessie in his arms, he was trying to avoid scraping acquaintance with the hounds. Last, but not least, came the doctor. He did pretty well considering that he had lost one-third of his weight and was not yet accustomed to handling such a diminished frame. It must be admitted that he was awkward. But he knew how to put the spurs in and hang on by the mane if necessary, and so he never allowed the rest to get very far ahead.

Evidently a great battle was going on. The boom of cannon was heard and the earth shook. Clouds of smoke surged up against the horizon. The sun rolled in red splendor through the heavens.

Nearer they dashed and heavier swelled the sounds of battle. They hurry on. The blood sweeps like a fierce fire in their veins.

Suddenly, on the broad brow of a precipitous hill, where rocks towering hundreds of feet high seemed mingled in abysmal conflict, the vast scene opened before them like a panorama, glittering with the awful magnificence of war. For miles and miles the landscape stretched before the eyes; how beautiful when summer's face was over it, shining with wood and stream and fair fields, stretching away to the luminous horizon like a dream of glory, but now it was lurid with the flames of a mighty conflict. Hundreds of thousands of soldiers were meeting in strife. Forth from the wooded hills belched volumes of smoke, rolling and mingling and enshrouding the armies in gloom. Amid the great rifts were seen the wild dash of calvary, the steady advance and tumultuous meeting of bayonets; troops plunging forward and then receding; flames bursting in one long line or flashing from a thousand quivering points, as if the very earth itself was opening and pouring forth is fires. The ghastly sun seemed amazed at the indescribable confusion, while mists gathered here and there and poured a tender baptism upon the bloody fields.

"There is something for all of us to do," cried Amy. "Bessie and I will take care of the wounded, the rest of you must leap to the front."

Quickly, like angels almost from the empyrean hights, the mother and child, in the midst of the terrific slaughter, brought love and blessing to many a perishing soldier.

The rest joined the Union ranks as best they could, grasped musket or sword, and swept along with the changing tides.

They struck the very heart of the battle just when the opposing forces met in supreme endeavor. The Confederate army was being gradually massed against the center of the federal troops, and it was evident that right here the victory for either side would be won. The banner of the North floated from a hill thick with soldiers pouring a deadly fire, and against these the efforts of the enemy were especially directed. Column after column of surging gray attacked the blue, but were driven back. Suddenly there was a fierce alarum, a vast battalion of rebel cavalry leap upon the hill and seem to writhe around it like a huge serpent, and flung its glittering fangs right against the heaving and tossing folds of the Union flag. So tremendous was the onset that the hitherto steady array of the blue was broken, and the flag, that had swept the breeze so defiantly, was thrust to the ground, and with a shout that lifted itself almost above the roar of battle, the foremost of the enemy bent to grasp the reeling standard.

It was a critical moment. One backward move and yielding of the northern line, and defeat was inevitable. Apparently it must be so. With such fury did the foe thunder upon the banner that it almost kissed the dust, when lo! like a flash of bewildering light it lifted itself again amid the clouds, and flung its blazing stars against the foe. The strong arm of Columbus held that standard now high over the clashing hosts, and summoned to its aid the almost defeated ranks. They close again, and press about the staff, forming line on line with the giant and unswerving form of the negro. It was a wonderful sight, as if for a moment all the downtrodden life of his race was exalted, as if from centuries of slavery the hidden power burst forth and flamed for liberty. High in one hand he held that flag, and with the other urged his way forward at the point of the bayonet. Step by step he pushed, while round about clung the concentrating bands of soldiers, until with almost irresistible force they break the lines of the gray, and press it tumultuously back. Slowly, however, the seething mass recoils. Inch by inch is contested. As if by some vast instinct, however, the Union troops throng about the central figure, Columbus. The other side is equally supported, and saber and bayonet mingle in the turmoil, and flash, and hiss, and sing, and sparkle with crimson drops as the bright blood leaps to the air, the jewel of many a vanishing life. The flag held aloft by Columbus tosses like a feather, yet not for a moment do its brilliant colors trail to the earth. The rout begins. At this and that point the phalanx breaks. The breach widens, confusion grows; the victorious leader plunges on with terrific blows. The Confederate forces scatter in every direction. Flaming in the van, Columbus receives his death wound. At the glowing moment of triumph the silence of his life falls into the eternal silence of death. The fruit, the flower has come. His life has rounded to a star, radiant in the heavens of fame. He falls, but the starry folds wreathe themselves about his black and sacred form, as if to enshrine forever that heroic soul in whom was the emblem of an eventful race, in whose agony a million homes were blended, and for whose redemption the fairest faces bowed to the earth. Mingling in death they were, the child of oppression and the flag of liberty, a blessed atonement and a glorious prophecy. Silently he had borne the burden, faithful he had been; with the beautiful affection of his race, he had died for the flag which for long years had refused justice and protection. Yet in that flag, stained as it was, he saw the promise of the coming world, the clearest symbol of the universal republic of man.

How beautifully the day dawned over the bloody field, seeking to drive away the fiends that haunted it, the sorrow and the terror! Busy hands were at work with tender ministrations to repair the dreadful ruin. The sweetness and grace of woman touched the departing clouds of war with infinite pity and sublimity, soothing the pain, kindling the eyes with new hope, flashing upon the dying gaze the glory of human fellowship and its heart of love.

On the third day the vast procession was formed, and the body of Columbus was borne to its resting-place in the solemn shadows of a beauteous grove. Long lines of glittering soldiers followed the dead hero. Solemn music filled the air. Countless heads were bowed as the funeral pageantry passed by. It was a heartfelt tribute to him who had so courageously turned the tide of mighty war. Slowly amid the gorgeous drapery of flags the cortege advanced to the leafy temple of nature, about to be consecrated with the living spirit of humanity and become a spell in the advancing life of man, to be clothed with immortality, to be a perpetual influence and joy because haunted by the memory of one who had died for others.

The earth received the noble freightage, and over it the flowers were laid, and the enshrouding dust; and then from the solemn music burst forth quick and martial strains. With jubilant notes the triumphant army returned again to its accustomed avocations. Far away gleam the white tents. The ranks are broken, and over the fields are seen the glistening bands of soldiers. Suddenly a shout comes like the vibration of a mighty sea. A single horseman appears, dashing down the lines, waving a white banner. An earthquake seems to follow. From brigade to brigade, from regiment to regiment, all ears are bent to catch the accents of his voice, as if some marvelous music were in it that the world had never listened to before. It was indeed a mighty song that that impetuous horseman flung upon the air:

"Lee has surrendered. Lee has surrendered."

Were ever words so laden with melody and joy? Lightly they went from lip to lip, but left a new world behind. What entrancing visions flashed in the pathway of that far circling sound. Home was seen again, wife and children, the green fields, the open door, the tree, the flower, the trailing vine, the grove, the pasture, the tumbling brook, the bird in the air, the clear water of the well, the blue of the sky. Sweet winged words pouring from a thousand throats, and reverberating in deep undertones of quivering joy, tones that welled to smiles and tears, that touched the day with new magnificence, and made the stars hang heavily jeweled with promises of richer peace than had ever yet made happy the o'er wearied heart of the world.

What is Going On in the Churches.

EXPELLED.

NEWBURG, April 21st.—The Methodist conference has expelled another minister, the Rev. J. V. Given. The allegation against him was adultery. The committee's report sustained the finding of the board of elders, which body had adjudged him guilty. The alleged offense was committed in this city over a year ago, and since the charges were presented he has not preached. The Rev. G. E. Smith offered the resolution of expulsion, and it was adopted. The venerable Bishop Moore then called the erring brother to the altar, and, as in the case of Dickson [recently found guilty of the same offense], took him by the hand, and counseled him so touchingly that tears came to all eyes. Mr. Given strongly asserted his innocence.

A SIMILAR CASE.

CASSETA, GA., April 11th.—The Rev J. H. Fackler, Baptist, of Lumpkin, Stewart Co., Ga., was excluded lately from the Baptist church for drunkenness, lying, abusing his wife, and bigamy. Under the name of J. H. Price he is now somewhere in the West. He is also advertised in the Christian Index. I know the man well. W. F. MALDEN.

A CHURCH ROW.—ONE BROTHER DENOUNCED AS A HYPOCRIT AND A RASCAL.

ALBANY, April 21st.—There was a sensational scene in the Baptist church of Scotia, a suburb of Schenectady, N. Y., yesterday morning. The pastor, Rev. H. J. Whalen, had, while in Massachusetts, been accused of preaching the sermons of several prominent clergymen as his own productions. He did not deny having used the sermons in part. It became known that he had no license to preach. Messrs. Toll and Marcellus, of the congregation, looked into his record recently and found that the pastor's license had been taken from him in Massachusetts. They also found him involved in certain shortcomings. Yesterday Rev. Mr. Whalen read the thirty-fifth psalm from the pulpit, saying it was directly applicable to his own case. While the congregation were singing a hymn he walked out of the church, but soon after returned. He then said that he understood Brothers Toll and Marcellus had been looking into his history in Massachusetts, and had returned with stories about his conduct. He then denounced Toll as a hypocrit and a rascal. Great excitement ensued. A friend of Toll made a sharp reply, when the pastor excitedly said, "Go and tell Brothers Toll and Marcellus what I say about them." The excitement was increasing when Brother Barker rose, deprecated the difficulty, and said that it should not go on. The pastor then preached a sermon on the tribulations of David, and at its close tendered his resignation.

LUNATICS DEVELOPED WHILE YOU WAIT.

We cut this from the Ponca, Neb., Journal: Two evangelists, Woodward and Brookmiller, hav been holding meetings in Dakota City during the past three or four weeks. The result has been deplorable, at least so far as some of the citizens are concerned, several having become so excited as to become unbalanced mentally. One of them, Mr. Ralph Goodwin, became insane last week, grew rapidly worse, and on Tuesday was taken to the insane hospital at Lincoln. Mr. Goodwin was an estimable citizen and an old resident of Dakota county. His wife and child are thus left alone, and in tears and mourning. The worthy evangelists went away the day before Mr. Goodwin was taken to the hospital. They were requested to leave by a committee of citizens who deemed it their duty to protect their families from undue and unnatural excitement. The evangelists hav gone to some town in Iowa.

A $10,000 APPROPRIATION.

Mr. E. G. Woodward, of Philadelphia, treasurer of the board of trusteees of the general assembly of the Presbyterian church, and treasurer of the church board of education, is a defaulter to the amount of $10,000. He has fled from the city, and his whereabouts are unknown. Mr. Woodward's family are prostrated with grief. His domestic relations were particularly happy, and it was not known that he was in financial difficulty. Mr. Woodward is fifty years of age, and is the father of seven children. He lived in a comfortable home at Ridley Park. He had been connected with the board of trustees for twelve years, and was chosen to the responsible position of treasurer a few years ago. A month ago, it is said, he tendered his resignation, but it was not accepted. There was no suspicion then that anything was wrong. He did not make his appearance at the office on Wednesday nor on the next day. His son, who is a clerk in the office, when questioned by the board declared that he had no knowledge of where his father had gone. When the books were examined it was found that the funds taken belonged to the board of trustees, and amounted to $10,000. He was a man of generous disposition, and when asked for a loan seldom refused. He frequently assisted clergymen. One of his intimate friends said that Mr. Woodward had lost money in this manner because he never asked for collateral, trusting entirely to the borrower's honor. Mr. Woodward was known as an exemplary Christian. He was not given to extravagances nor fast living. His house is comfortably furnished, and his family are thrifty and economical.

IN THE ARMY OF THE LORD.

Mr. and Mrs. John Emmons residing in the northeast part of Ionia, Mich., were on Sunday, April 20th. found to be suffering from a demented condition of the mind, superinduced by religious excitement. The Ionia National says that they were among the first to join the Salvation Army, and hav been regular attendants ever since. When found they were gravely discussing which one of their children should be offered up as a sacrifice to the Lord, and had progressed so far as to hav carving-knives in their hands ready for the bloody work. The children were immediately removed to a place of safety and the unfortunate couple taken to the jail. Since their incarceration there they hav become imbued with the idea that the new court-house is to be a temple and that the erection is under their personal supervision, hence they stand at the window and persistently warn all idlers from interfering with the workmen. On Wednesday Judge Wordworth appointed Drs. Gundrum and Romig to make an examination. They pronounced it a case of acute insanity. The sheriff at once secured a permit from the superintendent of the Kalamazoo asylum for Mrs. Emmons, and afterwards for the man. The boys, says the Ionia Evening Mail, not to speak of the men, had a picnic at the Salvation Army meeting Thursday night. The meeting was held on the streets, and on that night a large crowd was on hand and whenever the Army started a tune the outsiders joined, but sung "John Brown" and similar songs. Between the two, the Army and the hoodlums, a tremendous hubbub was kicked up.

SANCTIFICATION AND INSANITY.

A dispatch dated May 3d, recites: The Rev. C. H. Harris, who was sent to the Buffalo asylum for the insane, is a raving maniac. He was taken to the asylum in irons, and has been violent and noisy ever since. The physicians do not permit any visitors, not even his relativs, to see the demented clergyman. He is greatly excited, and talks about everything and everybody in his incoherent ravings. The Rev. Mr. Harris is fifty-five years old, weighs 185 pounds, and has a good physique, having always enjoyed excellent health. His insanity was caused by his congregation deposing him from the pastorate of the True Wesleyan Methodist church at Belmont, Allegany county, for preaching a sermon in which he gave reasons why the Methodist doctrin of immediate santification was in error.

IRREVERENT DETECTIVS DISTURB A RELIGIOUS MEETING.

"Jim" Depew, a married man, residing in Blenheim, Ont., while attending a revival meeting in the Baptist church on March 6th, had his devotions interrupted by detectivs from Hamilton and Buffalo, who arrested him on charges of robbing at Hamilton, and murder at Buffalo. He was taken to Hamilton.

A SERMONIZER ON THE MOUNT.

Rev. Mr. McDonald preached an eloquent sermon Saturday evening at Auburn, Ill., but was arrested at Springfield the next week on a charge of the theft of a horse and a suit of clothes from a man named Foster, at whose house he went after the religious services for the purpose of spending the night.

AN UNPLEASANT REVIVAL.

A revival had been in progress at the Methodist church at Hillsboro, Ill., for several weeks. Among the converts was one Patrick Henry. A bitter feud had existed between him and Charles Seymour, an old and prominent member of the church. A short time ago they shook hands. But in the midst of the revival, Henry suddenly arose in the audience and began a tirade of abuse against Seymour. Henry rushed to the altar and publicly demanded that his name be erased from the books of the church, giving as his reason for his action that Seymour had called him "a liar and a thief." Henry then left the church.

A REPORT UNAVOIDABLY OMITTED.

We this week omit from our list of religious services under the local heading that of Grace Episcopal church, this village. For some time past there hav not been any services held there by the pastor on account of disagreements, the door of the church edifice being locked against him, it is said by a member of the church. We hav heard that this action was taken because certain other members of the church who are objectionable to the person who did the locking out are allowed to attend service there. Whether this is true or false, we do not know of our own personal knowledge. It is certain, however, that the Episcopal edifice has been closed almost the entire past winter, the lock having been filled with nails inside and fastened by wire to prevent the bolt from being sprung, and the knob taken off, and the handle or stem pushed inside so that the catch bolt could not be moved.—Monroe, N. Y., Herald.

A MINISTER TRIED FOR ASSAULT.

The Rev. Mr. Wardlow, of New Brighton, Staten Island, on Friday, was tried before Justice Casey on a charge of assaulting John M. Wallace, a furniture dealer.

A NEW HAGAR AND A MODERN ABRAHAM.

An examination in the case of Miss Carrie Plunkett, the servant in the household of the Rev. Samuel T. Graham, pastor of the Church of the Messiah, in Newark, and who was arrested on Saturday last, was held in the first precinct police court, Newark, on the 29th ult. Mrs Mattie Graham, wife of the pastor, was the complainant. Mrs. Graham testified that Carrie Plunkett had been a servant for the Rev. Mr. Graham fourteen months, and he had made her the virtual housekeeper. She and her husband did not speak, and had not for several months. She had to wash and iron her own clothes, but Carrie Plunkett washed for everybody else in the house. She said there was no fire or carpet in the basement dining-room where she lived, while her husband, the servant, and the children had comfortable rooms up-stairs. So coolly did her husband treat her that she once proposed that they separate. Her husband ordered all the household necessaries and sent them to the servant, who locked up everything and acted as mistress of the house. "I hav been so mortified and humbled by my husband," said Mrs. Graham, "for this servant, that I blushed in the presence of my children." The Rev. Mr. Graham settled in Newark in 1878, as pastor of the Hill Street Methodist Protestant church. Three years ago the congregation divided on the question of retaining him. It was said his domestic relations were not happy. The fight was carried to the Methodist Protestant National Conference, and the Rev. Mr. Graham's character was passed, but a new pastor was sent to the church. He then withdrew from the Methodist Protestant church and founded a new religion, with the Bible as the sole rule of faith. He holds services in Association Hall, under the name of the Church of the Messiah.

THE REV. MR. DELO'S SINISTER PREDICTION.

The Lutheran congregation of Brunswick, N. Y., told their pastor recently that on account of his attempted interference in school matters his resignation would be accepted. It was also intimated that unless the resignation was forthcoming he would preach to empty pews and receive no salary. Not desiring to preach the gospel under those discouraging circumstances, the Rev. Mr. Delo announced that he would deliver his farewell sermon the next Sunday. There was a large attendance. After reviewing from his standpoint the incidents which had led him to resign, Mr. Delo bitterly assailed the members of the church council, and, in conclusion, said: "I hav nothing to fear. I cannot say as much for others, and I will be preaching the gospel when a majority of this congregation is in hell." The remark created a profound sensation. An old farmer who had listened attentivly said, in a tone which caused not a few to smile, "This may all be so, and perhaps he will be preaching to his old congregation." There is a very bitter feeling against Mr. Delo, and threats are openly made that he will be treated to a coat of tar and feathers. An ex-member of the assembly said, "Giv but the word, and men stand ready to tar and feather him."

"PAINTING THE TOWN RED."

At about 10 o'clock on a recent evening, a Catholic priest entered the saloon at 203 Bowery with two tramps whom he had picked up on the sidewalk. The three drank whisky, and the priest paid for it, and gave the men fifty cents each. He then treated men who were sitting in the saloon, drank whisky himself again, and, becoming talkativ, said he was a Catholic priest from Canada. He left the saloon and stood in the hallway of Samuel H. Hadley's lodging-house at 207 Bowery. Mr. Hadley caught him at the head of the stairs, and with the help of some men he was finally pushed to the street, where he clenched with a man and fell, yelling, "Irishmen, help me! I am a Catholic priest!" He struck on his face, making his nose bleed. He arose, and, covered with blood, staggered to the corner of Delancey street, and there rolled in the gutter. He was lifted to his feet, and tried to board two or three cars, but the conductors would not allow him on board. He blocked the track, and a policeman arrested him and took him to the Eldridge street police station. He was laid on the floor in the back room. A handsome gold watch and chain and a check, No. 29, of Sweeney's Hotel were found on him. He had no money.

A BROTHER ARTIST.

On the returns that were sent to Police Headquarters on the 3d from the seventeenth precinct was recorded the arrest of Stephen O'Donnell, a clergyman, on a charge of intoxication. Policeman Brereton took him to the station-house, where he slept in a cell during the night. James O'Conner was registered as the complainant. Father O'Conner is the editor of the Converted Catholic. He said that O'Donnell is a Catholic priest hailing from Illinois, who visited him to see what the work he was doing amounted to. He caused his arrest when he had been drinking freely, because he feared the priest would lose money that he carried. O'Connor knew nothing of his antecedents.

THE New York State Sunday-school Association is the name of a pretentious organization which sends out missionaries to form Sunday-schools. Its next annual meeting will occur in June, and to raise money the sympathies of the Christian public are being harrowed by statements of the ungodliness of the rural portions of New York. One beggar says: "I hav just been informed of a section of country (in Madison Co.), about twelve miles long and six wide, where there are no Sunday-schools or preaching." He also speaks of a point in the same county where he gathered a roomful of children for the purpose of arranging a Sunday-school, but "there was not a Christian in the place." Of a portion of Lewis county, he says: "Religion is about the last thing spoken of in this part of the state." In Cayuga county he found a woman "who said she had not been in Sunday-school or church for seventeen years, and that she had a grown-up daughter who did not know what Sunday-school meant." At a point in Oneida county he recognized the "greatest religious destitution he ever met, a general condition of depravity and mischief." He traveled eight miles through a thickly settled section of the same county, "with numerous hotels, but no Sunday-schools." In one district of this county, there was "not a praying man or woman." The church recognizes that unless the children are brought up in fear of the ministers, the theological cubs growing up will hav to turn their hands to some honest work. The money spent now is capital invested for the next generation.

The Liberal Club.

Clinton Furbish, a somewhat noted Greenback orator, gave the Liberal Club last Friday evening a piece of his mind, and on the whole a very good piece it was, although it did not contain all of the truth of Universology. His subject was "Pantarchism in Politics." The theme and the man and the "other man," the original pantarch himself, brought together a crowded house, for all expected quite a lively display of wit and wisdom. Mr. Furbish was in favor of a pantarch, but he wanted a practical pantarch, and not an ideal one. He preferred the pantarch who digs to the pantarch who thinks. What is the use, said he, of planning out a railroad in your mind's eye if you don't build, and what is the benefit to a toiling humanity of a palace-car, if it has no place to run, but must lie idle and rot? No doubt Mr. Andrews in his philosophical seclusion has done a great deal of good, but his disciples must not go to dreaming after his fashion, but set themselvs to work, and be of some service in the affairs of to-day.

The Greenback party, said the speaker, is composed mainly of pantarchs. It is devoted to the highest and most progressiv principles. All the other parties are failures, but this is the ideal party; the only practical organization for the true reformer. It was committed not simply to a certain financial policy, but to the universal rights of labor

The lecturer was followed by Mr. Cohen, who as usual gave one of his impetuous discourses, and agreed in the main with what had been advanced.

Dr. Foote, Jr., vindicated the ideal standard of Mr. Andrews as being in the long run the most useful and effectual. Specialists must work in their particular lines, but above all and in all there should be a philosophy of ideas combining specialties so that the common good is reached harmoniously. Dr. Foote dwelt with especial fervor upon the grand idea advanced by Mr. Andrews that intellectual superiority has no more right to get the better of an inferior in its kind of power than physical superiority in its kind. The time was when the strong man physically ruled merely because he was strong. That time has passed. Now the intellectual man, the cunning man, rules simply because he is most cunning, and law and custom back him up. This mere cunning, however, must be stripped of its power, and the keen head shall hav no more power to tyrannize than the strong arm.

Mr. Andrews followed, and with his usual breadth of view admitted all that Mr. Furbish had said, and that from his standpoint he might be more correct than Mr. Andrews himself, for of course the work must be done and there must be men to do it. There must be Realists as well as Idealists. However, the shortest path to great reform lies in absolute devotion to the universally right, and from the higher view the ideal must never be surrendered for any temporary advantage. Its progress might be slow, but at last it advances with geometrical ratio, and accomplishes in a day what special reforms could not accomplish in a century.

Dr. Atkinson poured forth one of his transcendental discourses, full of subtleties of thought and sparks of eloquence. He was in favor of a "conviction of sin" not the old-fashioned conviction, of course—but there must be in man an intense feeling, and he must plunge into reform with his spirit on fire, and realize that there are great wrongs to be remedied, and that one must be tremendously in earnest.

Mr. Freeland showed after all that the Greenback party was not ideally perfect, for it had clashing theories of reform, and one Greenbacker did not agree with another Greenbacker on the money question. Mr. Freeland did not agree with the lecturer, and thought in some respects the doctrins he maintained were injurious to the party. Evidently the money question is a puzzle yet, and there must be a vast amount of thinking done before any political action can be taken. It is easy enough to do a thing when you know what to do, but when you don't know, then the best way is to be a philosopher and do nothing but think.

Mr. Wakeman insisted upon the necessity of the enthusiasm of humanity in order to make any permanent progress. There must be a pantarchism of the heart as well as a pantarchism of the head. Men must learn to work unselfishly in order to accomplish great results. The bottom of every scheme of cooperation will fall out unless it is based upon a thorough altruism.

Mr. Furbish, in closing, claimed that in some respects he had been misunderstood. He believed in the sublime philosophy of Mr. Andrews. It had done him good, and taught him many things; but he wanted some practical outcome; he wanted the fruits of this splendid theory. He wanted Liberals to work together; to be friendly; to lend a hand in the great struggles of the day.

The president of the club spoke a few words in commemoration of Mr. C. G. Mann, a member of the club of long standing, who had recently died. He was an unobtrusiv Liberal, not known to many, but of sterling qualities of character. He was almost constant in his attendance on the meetings of the club, and showed a deep interest in the Liberal movements of the day. His genial presence will be missed by many who perhaps never knew his name. He was a good soldier, and has passed away at an honorable old age, and is worthy of our generous commemoration.

The club adjourned at the usual hour.

California Letter.

DEAR EUGENE: THE TRUTH SEEKER of April 19th seems to me brighter and better than usual, and I can only wish that it might be found, together with the grand old Boston Investigator, on the table of every Liberal in the land. If it were so, my work in driving the plowshare of Freethought would be comparativly easy. Allow me to congratulate you for the many able and happy writers in THE TRUTH SEEKER, who, from time to time, shed light and joy into human hearts all over our dear country. To read Herbert Spencer's "Coming Slavery" as he grapples with the profound problems of Sociology is to be wiser than before. If he does not furnish a full and clear solution of every question involved in the science of human life, he does at least bring to every subject the cultured energies of a great mind; to read after Wakeman is to be swept along with a flood-tide of good things, while the versatil and beautiful composition of S. P. Andrews almost smothers one in rainbow tints and handsome words, pleasant to read if not easy to remember. To read Putnam is to be convinced of the masterly grip he has upon the principles and potencies wrapt up in nature, which, under his hand, find adjustment for the happiness and mental culture of all who grasp the spirit of his well-selected language, and to follow where he leads is like a ride through the beautiful Alameda of San Jose—cool, bright, and restful.

To read Col. Kelso, of California, is to come into contact with a whirlwind of fact and logic, which fasten on to the mind like fish hooks; and his clear and terse criticisms upon gods, devils, and holy virgins come at once to the comprehension of the masses of our people, and his works need only to be read to be appreciated by every lover of the naked truth.

And then, for hammer-and-tongs style, with logic like a dead shot, clear, forcible, and divested from all ambiguities, commend us to John Peck every time.

We can but admire the clear, close reasoning, and the irrepressible spirit of E. C. Walker in maintaining his honest convictions against legal prohibition in matters of food or drink, and, right or wrong, he possesses the elements of mental power in a marked degree.

We are always pleased with the bright and spicy style of Miss Wixon, whose handiwork graces the Children's Corner, a most significant feature in your paper, and I think we may all be proud to call her our sister. And then again, in almost every paper I pick up I see the name of Elmina, which in a few short years has come to be a household word. And her written words carry with them a spirit strong and free, and a mental grasp seldom met among the gentle sex. Her logic, though masculin in point of power, is permeated by an element of motherly affection which must endear her to all lovers of truth and humanity. Yes, Elmina, go and investigate the spirit phenomena for yourself. It is well worthy of your attention; but let me predict that after seeing the pencil write without any visible agency, as I hav seen on several occasions, you will not then believe in life after death. Your organism will not permit it; and whatever you may see, hear, or feel will not convince you of supermundane existence. You are a doubter like myself, and I feel assured that the lady who wrote the open letter to F. D. Lacy will always remain a doubting Thomas. But then an honest doubt is quite as commendable as an honest belief, and will always win the respect of true Liberals. Let us find comfort in honest doubts.

Now of course Ingersoll is one of my gods—not that I worship anything, but I love and admire him as the greatest man on earth to-day; not only great in his intellect but grand in his spirit, manly and pure in his affections, as he is unique and chaste in his style—but we love him most because he has placed himself in the gap as no other can do, and as Thomas Paine did in his day, against the whole world of shams and hypocrits. Somebody must stand at the head and lead the world of Freethought, as Shakspere leads the world of intellect; and we are proud of such a noble spirit as Ingersoll, against whose genius and wit the combined forces of superstition will beat in vain. A few more such men as Ingersoll, Bennett, and Paine; a few more such outspoken and fearless papers as THE TRUTH SEEKER and Investigator, and the world will feel the quickened breath of a higher life and being.

A closing thought and I hav done. In reading THE TRUTH SEEKER I always turn first to the Letters from Friends to see who has been saying something. And if there is one thing more than another which has anchored THE TRUTH SEEKER and our noble cause in the hearts of our people it is this department. We belong to the common people, and our sympathy is with them, and many are the gems of sincere, sparkling thought, full of helpfulness and good will, that crop out in these Letters from Friends. Not always do they bring us joy or pleasure, but sometimes a sorrow is couched in the message they bring. One of this character I note in the last TRUTH SEEKER—a short letter from our friend Henry McElsander, reporting the death of Philip Foster, a time-worn veteran in the cause of Freethought.

Our friend Foster was a great admirer of D. M. Bennett, and THE TRUTH SEEKER was his holiest Bible from its first issue. It was our pleasure to deliver the oration at his place, Eagle Creek, on the Fourth of last July. And although the frosts of eighty winters rested on his brow, yet his mind was clear and step firm, and he enjoyed with great delight my allusion to Thomas Paine as the leading spirit in founding our republic.

So it is our old warriors are passing away one by one to their rest 'neath the sod—the body to mingle again with Mother Earth, and the mind, we trust and hope, to a larger and brighter field of activity. And even should there be no life beyond, the grave has no horrors for me, and I often find myself thinking of it as a final rest, just dropping off to sleep, undisturbed by the cares, sorrows, and friction of life. Only so that we hav said and done something to make our fellow-creatures happy, and the world better for our having lived in it, we need hav no regrets, but sleep 'mid the harmonies of nature—one and united with the grass and flowers which deck the grave, and one with springtime's bursting bud or wintry snow; one with the singing birds or zephyr's gentle breath, in life or death we are not lost. Thus let our old friend Foster rest loved and cherished by those who knew him best.

One other sentence in that brief letter is worthy of attention. Our friend says that there was a large attendance at the funeral of Father Foster, but for the want of a York or an Ingersoll nothing was said. This should not be so; but better thus to be buried in silence than to call in a man of God to rob our dead of the victory over superstition of being buried in the Infidel faith.

When we look at the matter in a proper light but little need be said at a funeral, only let the proper thing be said. The "Truth Seeker Collection" contains appropriate and beautiful forms, which almost any kind neighbor could read on such an occasion. And if we are Liberals let us shun the superstition which offers a willing service to croak like a bird of evil omen over the forms of our loved and dead. And when I die I hope it will be with the harness on, fighting the foe, and my friends will see to it that no sniveling saint shall make any capital out of my extremity. For to what purpose is it that I hav lived a consistent Infidel if then I am to be handed over to my enemies at death? We liv for a principle; let us die by it, and be buried in harmony with the principles we advocated while living. Too often we are pained by the action of weak-minded so-called Liberals, who submit to the service of those who outrage our dead by a Christian burial.

Our Lyceum school in San Jose is going on splendidly, and Freethought is advancing all over the coast.

One thing more. Please find within my dollar to help bring up the deficit in the Monument Fund—the last act of kindness I will ever be able to do for our departed chief, whose memory in loving hearts I trust will outlast the granit and marble. And we hope that a suitable picture of the monument will be made at an early day for the columns of THE TRUTH SEEKER, the founding of which was the great work of his life.

With many kind wishes for you, Eugene, and the continued success of THE TRUTH SEEKER, let me always remain

Your friend and honored worker in the cause of truth, DR. J. L. YORK.

Mr. Kirby Not Satisfied.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE TRUTH SEEKER, Sir: Allow me a review of your note on my article, "Is There a God? A View from Nature's Standpoint," as found in THE TRUTH SEEKER, March 15th.

Thomas Paine, in "Age of Reason," and I, did not appear to find a hearty welcome in your paper, though you are careful not to mention Mr. Paine.

In previous numbers you suggested that I write on the existence of God and on the claims of the Bible. And having delayed my article in your office some two months, you finally publish it, with your note in the same number, condemning it as unworthy a place "in your scientific TRUTH SEEKER." You style it speculations, assumptions, intrusion, "thrusting his creator upon us, ipse dixit;" "we warn him, if Mr. Kirby knows it all, we can point out the way for him to gain more knowledge," etc.

Mr. Editor, you simply condemn the whole, Thomas Paine included; though you are silent as death on Paine and his "Age of Reason." But you must know your note is just as much directed against my quotation from "Age of Reason" as it is against my own matter.

But you condemn both without the least attempt at proof. I ask, Is this Liberalism? Is this investigationism? I answer, No, not in the remotest sense.

I did not expect to do what no one has ever done before me—demonstrate the existence of God beyond the shadow of doubt. I only offered what to me was the highest proof for the existence of God from nature's standpoint. And because I did not, could not, demonstrate each and every step in the argument, we suppose, for this reason, it was counted unworthy your paper. Thomas Paine does not, could not, demonstrate the existence of God in his "Age of Reason." Yet I should suppose my quotations from him might be worthy a place in "a scientific TRUTH SEEKER," and not be condemned as "intruding his creator upon us," ipse dixit, etc. Mr. Editor, such sweeping denunciation in the absence of reason or argument cannot possibly be of credit or honor to a worthy editor of a "scientific TRUTH SEEKER," who claims to be strictly Agnostic—investigativ. And though some of the reasons I hav offered for the existence of God may not be susceptible of demonstration, yet, allow me to say, there is not one of my reasons (or arguments) that can be refuted to a demonstration. The anti-existence of God has never and (I "presume" again) will never be demonstrated. And if nothing is worthy a place in your "scientific TRUTH SEEKER," only demonstrated truth and facts, I think Mr. Bennett should never hav undertaken such, much less yourself endeavor to perpetrate such.

But, Mr. Editor, I put the question to you square, Will you undertake to demonstrate the non-existence of God? Or will you undertake to demonstrate the negativ of any position I hav taken in my article? I ask you to undertake to prove that matter is not eternal, that life is not a law of matter, that life (as a law) is not co-eternal with matter, that there are not invisible beings (spirit beings), or prove that such hav not existed from all eternity; and that there was no prior being acted in the creation or formation of the human family. Mr. Editor, demonstrate, please, the origin of man. And if you are unable, why raise the questions existence of God, or the origin of man, in your "scientific TRUTH SEEKER?"

Please giv us unquestionable proof that there are no marks of design, "threadbare design," intelligent adaptation and construction, in the vegetable and animal kingdoms; and that their relation to what is called the inanimate universe is independent of what Mr. Paine pleases to acknowledge and call God. Mr. Editor, try some of these points. And do not, as editor, dispose of the worthy Thomas Paine so sweepingly, whom you, as Liberals, so unanimously and heartily honor. I respect all men; fear none. I ask you to please publish this in THE TRUTH SEEKER. My next shall be on the existence of God, viewed from the Bible standpoint, should you not object.

Yours, WM. KIRBY.

What Shall We Do with Mormonism and the Mormons?

The above is fast becoming what the English call a "burning" question. If statistics be reliable, in thrift and good morals generally, the two essential characteristics of a body politic called a State, Utah territory, in proportion to its numbers, is ahead of all the other states and territories of the Union. The only fault to be found, therefore, and the one that has hindered for years its admission into the sisterhood of American states, is the opinions of most of its people, and the corresponding practice by some, that polygamy is a lawful institution.

Now, it is well known that when Joseph Smith founded the Mormon sect, he had no idea of introducing among his followers the oriental custom of plural wives; but, as is equally well known, their fellow-citizens stirred up a persecution against the Mormons, killed Joseph Smith, and drove his adherents out of the country into a Mexican wilderness. When Utah came under our flag, as it did by our treaty with Mexico, the Mormons were very weak in numbers; and seeing that polygamy was a Bible institution, and practiced by Jews and gentiles all over the eastern world, they resorted to the system as a politico-economical measure, for the sole purpose of filling up the waste places of their Zion with a population of saints. I do not believe that in a northern climate, where it costs so much to liv and to bring up a family of children, any civilized man or people would prefer polygamy to monogamy. As to the moral character of the custom itself, there is no difference of opinion among the Radicals. They all condemn it because it is a violation of the law of nature as taught in the numerical equality of the sexes, and the obvious inference therefrom, that every man is entitled to hav but one wife. The only question is, How shall we best bring about a homogeneousness on the part of the inhabitants of Utah territory with the rest of the people of the United States on this one subject of marriage? The disgraceful proposal of a raid upon the Mormons under the color of law is headed and tailed by the church people with a brazen-faced inconsistency that would shock the world if history were not full of other similar examples. For polygamy, illustrated in the lives of the Old Testament saints, is indorsed in the New Testament by the "divinely inspired" Apostle Paul, who holds up Abraham, Jacob, David, Solomon, and other polygamists, as models and examples to the Christian church. How can Congress, if its members hav ever read the Bible, and bear in mind that the Protestant churches all consider it an infallible rule of faith and practice—how can they make a secular government like ours a blind tool in the hands of the clergy, to kindle the fires of another persecution against the Mormons, simply and alone because they believe in, and some of them practice, a Bible institution which all western nations hav repudiated?

Mr. Potter, of the Boston Index, in replying lately to Mr. Curtis, says that "the national law declares polygamy to be a crime." But where does Mr. Potter find this declaration? The Congress of 1862 did pass an act "punishing and forbidding polygamy" in any of the territories. Up to that time polygamy was a term unknown in all our national or state legislation. Bigamy, the having two wives, was the only thing in this line forbidden by law. But if a case were appealed to the Supreme Court of the United States, no doubt that court would pronounce the act of 1862 to be unconstitutional and void. Because the law organizing Utah as a territory gave the legislature the power of legislating, just like a state, on all subjects not forbidden by the United States Constitution and laws. By Article X. of the amendments of the Constitution, "the powers not delegated to the United States by the Constitution, nor prohibited by it to the state, are reserved to the state, respectivly, or to the people." Hence, a murder committed in Ohio cannot be punished by the United States law; while counterfeiting the coin cannot be punished by Ohio law, because Ohio, when she adopted the United States Constitution and came into the Union, conceded to the United States all her authority in regard to money, while she reserved the right of trying and punishing murderers. Hence, also, all the states composing the Union reserved to themselvs, respectivly, the right of regulating the relations between the sexes by laws concerning marriage and divorce. This is the true doctrin of state rights. Suppose that the legislature of Massachusetts should pass a law dividing the surplus women of the state among the married men, so that every woman could hav a husband. what provision of the United States Constitution, and what law of the general government under it, would interfere with this arrangement? None. Massachusetts is sovereign over her own territory, and can do as she pleases in legislation, provided she does nothing in violation of the Constitution and laws of the United States. Now, a territory, in our political system, is an inchoate state, having a right, by the act of Congress organizing it. to legislate on all subjects not forbidden by the Constitution; and if there is anything in the spirit of by-laws, the act of Congress of 1862, "forbidding and punishing polygamy," was clearly unconstitutional, since the Utah legislature had not legislated in favor of a thing forbidden by the Constitution. If Massachusetts, a full state, could legalize polygamy by an act of her people represented in her great and general court, why cannot a territory, which is an inchoate state, simply waiting to be admitted into the Union, do the same thing?

But it is alleged that Mormonism is a hierarchy, and that the territorial legislature is made up exclusivly of Mormons. Well, suppose the state of Ohio had been originally settled by the people of a particular sect, say the Baptists; and that they prospered and increased, naturally and by immigration, so fast that they bought up all the lands for themselvs and their co-religionists as they came, till ninety-nine-hundredths of the whole population were at present Baptists. And suppose that they adopted a state constitution, and enacted laws under it, by reading which no one would be able to form an opinion whether the inhabitants of Ohio were Catholics or any sect of Protestants, so secular and unecclesiastical were they both; could anyone reasonably object that ninety-nine out of every hundred of her legislators, and her citizens, were Baptists? This is the very case with the Mormons. Their territorial laws are excellent. As an inchoate state they hav proposed a constitution for themselvs, which is also excellent, and which, if I am correctly informed, says nothing about polygamy. Their only fault consists of three particulars: that a number of the people practice the Bible institution of polygamy; that the whole of them think they hav a right to do so, if they please; and that the legislature is composed of Mormons.

Well, what shall we do with them? Why, in the name of God, let them alone. Every Roman Catholic priest and bishop in the United States has taken a solemn oath of allegiance to the pope of Rome as a temporal prince. They must, therefore, all be traitors to this government. Yet who that is sane proposes to persecute them? That division of the Protestant church represented by the "National Reform Association" propose to put God in the Constitution, which is only another way of proposing to send every heretic and Infidel to jail because he cannot accept their standard of orthodoxy. Who wants, before any overt act, to crush them out by law? None. The Jews in the United States are fast losing their faith in Moses and the prophets, because in this country they are free, and no one has either the despotism or the power to convict them as "murderers of our blessed Lord and Savior." But open a persecution against them, as Russia and Germany hav done, and immediately they would go back to their ancient faith and ceremonies, and die rather than giv them up. So it would be with the Mormons. Therefore do not saw the valleys and mountain-sides of Utah with dragons' teeth. Let the Mormons alone. They hav violated no provision of the United States Constitution in allowing the practice of the Bible institution called polygamy. Congress has no case against them except that they continue to disobey an unconstitutional ex post facto law. No one is compelled to liv in Utah, and become either Mormons or polygamists. Let the people work out the problem of polygamy in a cold climate by themselvs, and without any legal intermeddling on our part. Let reason hav full sway with experience. Let us hav confidence in the safe and conservativ nature of freedom, and my belief is that the year 1900, when it comes, will not find a polygamist in all this country.

But I greatly fear that if this peaceful policy is not adopted, the religious Bourbons—the microcephalous idiots who still stick to the belief that it is the business of political government to legislate piety and good morals into a man, and send him to heaven by act of assembly—will not rest till, by the cowardice of Congress, they transform this government into a beast of prey, and convert Utah territory into a field of blood and fire.

Lectures and Meetings.

MRS. A. E. DE FRIESE will giv a free lecture upon the subject of Religious and Social Intolerance, before the Philosophical Association of Brooklyn, E. D., on Sunday, the 18th.

W. S. BELL lectured in Stoughton, Wis., May 10th, 11th, and 12th, and speaks at Utica, Minn, on the 25th, 26th, and 27th. On June the 1st, 2d, and 3d, he will be at Nashua, Iowa.

THE annual meeting of the Friends of Human Progress will be held in the usual place near Waterloo, N. Y., on the 31st of May and the 1st of June. A number of Freethought speakers will be in attendance.

JOHN E. REMSBURG has been lecturing in Kansas. He spoke in Morril April 26th and 27th: Axtell, 29th and 30th and May 1st; Seneca, 3d and 4th; Randolph, 6th; Leonardville, 7th. He speaks in Davenport, Iowa, May 27th, 28th, and 29th; Mantino, Ill, May 31st and June 1st; Oconomowoc, Wis., June 2d; Wausau, Wis., 3d, 4th, 5th.

C.B. REYNOLDS writes from Altoona, Pa.: "I lectured before the Liberal League of this city on Tuesday and Wednesday evenings, May 6th and 7th. The interest aroused resulted in my complying with a unanimous request to giv an additional lecture on Thursday. The Altoona is a live League, earnest, zealous, agressiv. It is fortunate in having for its officers men of culture, enterprise, and Liberal in every desirable sense of the word. They are among the most successful and highly esteemed business men of the city. The League hav rented for their exclusiv use a very convenient and desirably located hall, and fitted it up neat and tasty; its tables well supplied with the leading Liberal periodicals. They hav the nucleus of a Freethought and scientific library, which affords the best possible opportunity for friends to help in the good work by donating scientific and Liberal books. Any friends desirous to place books where they will do most good can mail them to the painstaking and efficient secretary, John R. Kemp, secretary Liberal League, Altoona, Pa. This League realizes the need of more perfect organization; the establishment of science schools on Sunday. Why hav we no regular science lesson-leaves so that all could be helped and instructed? Here is noble work for some one that will insure gratitude of present and future generations, and do more for the cause than all the conventions ever yet held. Prof. W. Seymour lectured on Sunday, the 11th inst. Altoona League is bound to progress. 'They cannot command success but they do more deserve it.'"

DR. J. L. YORK'S volume of Freethought poems and lectures has passed into its third edition, so popular is the worthy doctor on the Pacific slope. The new edition is just ready, and will be mailed by the author on receipt of a dollar. His address is San Jose, Cal.

WOMAN suffrage was defeated in the assembly of this state last week by a vote of 62 nays to 57 yeas. Thirty republicans and twenty-seven Democrats voted in the affirmativ. The opposition to the bill was rather in criticism of its constitutionality than against the bill of itself. It is probable that not many years will elapse ere woman will be allowed to exercise a right that is as naturally hers as it is man's.

HENRY GEORGE was announced to occupy Heber Newton's pulpit last Sunday, and speak on Moses. But the wardens of the church were afraid of being compromised by his utterances, and requested Mr. Newton to request Mr. George to abandon the project. Probably when some of Mr. George's reforms are accepted, these same wardens will be among the first to claim the credit of them for the Christian church.

"False Claims."—A Discussion of Its Statements.

MR. MAIBEN.

To the Editor of The Truth Seeker, Sir: One of my neighbors showed me a pamphlet that had been issued and published from your house, entitled "False Claims." The same also appeared in The Truth Seeker dated Sept. 15, 1883. Now there are statements in it that seem to me so utterly absurd and false that it is astonishing that any person of a grain of intelligence would be capable of expecting persons to believe it. I will enumerate a few of them.

"Next France. I quote from De Bow's 'Review of the Census.' Roman Catholic, 18,939; Protestants, 598; Jews, 130; Mohammedans, 53; Atheists, 0. . . . Not one Atheist in the prisons of France, yet a single Atheistical society of Paris numbers twenty thousand."

The above is a sample of his first statistics. Not one Atheist in the prisons of France! Either the Atheists of France hav changed since the time of the French Revolution in 1789 under the reign of Danton and Robespierre, or they hav the better art of hiding, as Robert Burns says, for certainly they did acts in that period that bring the blush to any civilized human being.

Now let me cite to you the inevitable logic of Atheism in the language of Michael Bakounine in a speech delivered at Geneva in 1868. I will not quote all the article, for it would occupy too much space in your columns, but a synopsis of its principle as he clearly defines it in unmistakable language:

"Brethren, I come to announce to you a new gospel. This gospel admits of no half measures and hesitation. The old world must be destroyed and replaced by a new one. The lie must be stamped out and giv way to truth. Now the beginning of all these lies which hav ground down the poor world in slavery is God. The second lie is right." After enumerating a list of evils flowing from these two evils, he goes on to giv his cure. Now be careful to note his doctrins, and see if they are not fundamental to all Atheism. "Let your own happiness be your only law." "Our first work must be destruction and annihilation of everything that now exists." "When you once begin your work of destruction, take heed that no ark be allowed to rescue any portion of the old world."

Now compare the action of the French Revolutionistic Atheist in 1789 with the action of the Atheistic Russian Nihilist of 1869, and note their leading principle, "Your own happiness your only law," and tell us that Atheism, pure and simple, does not far exceed in cruelty any Christian act that has ever been recorded; but the absurdity of calling these men incarcerated for crime Christians, no matter what their profession may be, is just as absurd as to say an honest thief or a sober drunkard. Let us define words and use them in accordance with common sense. Christ, the author and founder of Christianity, says, as plain as language can be framed, as follows: "Many will say to me in that day, Lord, Lord, hav we not prophesied in thy name; and in thy name hav cast out devils, and in thy name done many wonderful works?" "And then will I profess unto them, I never knew you; depart from me, ye that work iniquity." Now if it were possible to speak plainer or be more explicit, I fail to comprehend it. Here are men represented as casting out devils, doing many wonderful works, and prophesying, and yet Christ says he does not know them, for they work iniquity. He wants them to leave him on the ground, and yet the writer of this address dares to tell us that the thieves, prostitutes, murderers, and scum of society are Christians, because forsooth they render to the various wardens of the jails of France their sectarian titles. Why, they are not even allowed the title of citizens in any country. They are in this free country disfranchised and not allowed to vote, and yet this writer calls them Christians.

I will now advert to another glaring falsity. It is where he alludes to Frederick Douglass. He claims that the negroes as a class were religious, but the most immoral and ignorant class in the country, while Frederick Douglass is a Freethinker. Now how any man of sound intelligence can call Douglass a Freethinker surprises me. I personally heard him in London in the year 1846. I purchased his published history from his own hand. Again I purchased his history entitled, "My Slavery and My Freedom," when I came to this country. In his speeches in London, which I personally heard, he declared himself to be a Christian, and in his printed works he claimed to be a Baptist. If I had not these facts in reference to Douglass I would be staggered at the many bold statements he makes, such as that the people consider Guiteau and Jesse James Christians, whilst we class Longfellow and Emerson as unbelievers. What monstrous idiocy to use such language!

One more idea I will touch upon and close. It is as follows: "The former were guided by the laws of natural morality, the latter were the legitimate fruits of Christian morality." Emerson was a Unitarian preacher, therefore he must hav studied the character of Christ, not natural morality. Longfellow says in his "Psalm of Life:"

> "Tell me not in mournful numbers
> Life is but an empty dream."

Here surely is no Atheist, nor yet a mere natural philosopher, for in another song he commences with these words:

> "O gift of God! O perfect day!
> Whereon no man should work, but play."

Surely no Atheist ever uttered the first line of this beautiful song.

As to natural morality I must say but little, for certainly I cannot see much. In nature I see nothing lovely. Wolves, bears, tigers, etc.; in the fowls of heaven, the vultures, hawks, owls, cormorants, etc.; in the fish of the sea, shark, sword-fish, octopus, etc.; in the insectorial world, grasshoppers, lice, bugs, etc. —in fact, all nature teems with death and destruction, misery and pain, and mankind has been struggling for age upon age with these hideous forces and trying to hold his own, and even yet Herbert Spencer declares that knowledge never can unveil the mysteries that surround us, and that life is the survival of the fittest—or, in other words, the strongest only will survive, not the fittest.

I must now close. Much more could be said, but as the main ideas hav been broached I need not continue. If Atheism and Freethought can play such fantastic tricks before heaven's high God as the French Revolution and Nihilism in Russia, and yet claim that Christianity is worse, and that the Voltairian morality is ahead of Wesley or Fenelon, surely mankind requires a new mode of conveying ideas.

Atheism may be preferable to cant, hypocrisy, and villainy, but for my part I prefer to take Christ's advice to the lawyer: "This do and thou shalt liv" (Luke x, 28), and leave Atheism, with all its glittering morality based on Michael Bakounine's inevitable logic, "Your own happiness your only law."

Trusting that the writer of the above treatis will take this for his text in his next and explain it, I remain yours, A truth seeker, John S. Maiben.

MR. REMSBURG.

Mr. John S. Maiben has written an article in reply to my Rochester address, the contents of which he requests me to take as a text and explain. The request is made in the same spirit that a giant with his foot upon the neck of a prostrate pigmy orders his victim to arise.

The prison statistics of France, the correctness of which he does not attempt to disprove, are taken as a pretext to assail Atheists, and the French Revolution, which he characterizes as an Atheistic movement. If he has been what he subscribes himself, a truth seeker, I fail to understand how he can honestly repeat these stale clerical slanders. The French Revolution marks the grandest epoch in the world's history. Its excesses we deplore. But it would be as reasonable to condemn the sun because its light is obscured by a few spots, as to assail with sweeping condemnation this glorious struggle for human freedom, because it was attended by some deeds of violence.

This revolution was to a great extent a Freethought movement, but Atheists are entitled to but a portion of its glory, and merit a very inconsiderable share of its shame. The two leading parties that participated in this great drama were the party of the Mountain, led by Robespierre, Marat, and others, and the Girondists who gathered around Roland and the brilliant deputies of the Gironde. In the Assembly the Girondists were in the majority, but in the Convention the Mountain gained the ascendency, and, backed by the rabble of Paris, soon expelled the Girondist minority.

Referring to those parties, Emile Acollas thus truthfully observes: "Robespierre and the Montagnards, disciples of the sentimental Rousseau, were Theists like their master. The Girondins, on the contrary, were frankly Atheistic."

Now, the universal verdict is that the Girondists constituted the real heart and brains of France. They were distinguished for their intellectual attainments, for their eloquence, for their heroism, and for their moderation. If they erred, they erred upon the side of mercy. Nearly all the excesses, nearly all the bloodshed, of the Revolution was the work of the Mountain. Not until this party came into power did the Reign of Terror begin. Thus the cruel acts that mar the French Revolution were committed, not by Atheists, but by those who, like my reviewer, believed in the existence of a God.

Robespierre, the central figure in these bloody scenes, he represents as an Atheist. Let Robespierre himself repel this charge. "How often, alone with my soul, hav I had nought to sustain me save the idea of God!" "If God did not exist, it would be necessary to invent him," said Robespierre. The events of the Revolution he referred to Providence. In the National Convention he moved the following, which was adopted by acclamation: "The French people acknowledge the existence of the Supreme Being, and the immortality of the soul." One of the last acts in his career was to institute a festival in honor of God, at which he officiated as high priest.

So much for "the French Revolutionistic Atheist." It is to be hoped, when this writer next takes up the subject of the French Revolution, that to the virtues of a truth seeker he will unite that of a truth teller. Continuing his assault upon Atheism, he proceeds to Michael Bakounine and his Anarchistic ideas. But by what authority does he make Anarchy and Atheism synonymous? Who authorized him to bring forward Michael Bakounine as the oracle of Atheists? He has no more right to cull out the extreme radical utterances of a Anarchistic agitator and label it "the inevitable logic of Atheism," than I would hav to present the platform of the last political convention as the Christian "Confession of Faith." With much that Bakounine has said and written, all Atheists agree; while respecting many of his views, a great diversity of opinion exists. He quotes from Bakounine as follows: "The old world must be destroyed and replaced by a new one." Well, this old world, to a great extent, will be destroyed. Old institutions must giv place to new. Our social fabric, founded largely upon ignorance and superstition, must be remodeled if not entirely removed. But the instrument employed in this work of demolition, so far as Atheists are concerned, will be the pen rather than the sword. "The lie must be stamped out and giv way to truth." This the writer would doubtless consider a calamity. "Now the beginning of all these lies which hav ground down this poor world in slavery is God." Oh, for a Michael Bakounine to proclaim this truth from every house-top in the land! "Let your own happiness be your only law." With Christians, the dominant spirit of whose creed is selfishness and cruelty, a practical application of this law would not be conduciv to the world's welfare. But with the honest, intelligent Atheist, whose greatest happiness is realized in making those around him happy, the case would be far different. Auguste Comte, one of the earth's noblest minds, a disbeliever in God, formulated this sublime law: "Liv for others"—conscious that in its observance our own happiness would be secured.

Are Atheists the monsters of vice and immorality that Christian bigots represent? Let Theodore Parker, a sincere Theist, say: "They seem to be truth-loving and sincere persons, conscientious, just, humane, philanthropic, and modest men. They are men who mean to be just to their nature, and their whole nature. They are commonly on the side of man, as opposed to the enemies of man; on the side of the people, as opposed to the tyrant. They are, or mean to be, on the side of truth, of justice, and of love." Let the greatest of living preachers answer. Speaking of the Atheists of to-day, Henry Ward Beecher says: "They are not beasts nor malignants; . . . they are not ignorant and vicious, but men of philosophic reputation and great thought, sincere men, and we may as well open our minds to it." Let Prof. Tyndall, an Agnostic, testify: "If I wished to find men who are scrupulous in their adherence to engagements, whose words are their bond, and to whom moral shiftiness of any kind is subjectivly unknown; if I wanted a loving father, a faithful husband, an honorable neighbor, and a just citizen, I would seek him among the band of Atheists to which I refer."

The Nihilists of Russia, too, come in for a share of this critic's wrath. But these Nihilists, or revolutionists, rather, for Nihilism is a thing of the past, are enlisted in the grandest cause in which man ever labored—the enfranchisment and elevation of their fellow-men. The deplorable condition of the French peasant of a century ago is the condition of the Russian peasant of to-day. "His squalid misery, his whole life stands forth full of sorrow, of suffering, of outrage. Look at him, exhausted by hunger, broken down by toil, the eternal slave of the privileged classes, working without pause, without hope of redemption." Then comes this "Atheistic Russian Nihilist." "He tears off the fine clothes that burn into his very flesh; he puts on the rough coat and the wooden shoes of the peasant, and, abandoning the splendid paternal palace, which oppresses him like the reproach of a crime, he goes forth among the people in some remote district, and there, the slender and delicate descendant of a noble race, he does the hard work of the peasant, enduring every privation in order to carry to him the words of redemption, the gospel of our age. What matters to him if the cutthroats of the government lay hands upon him? What to him are exile, Siberia, death? Full of his sublime idea, clear, splendid, vivifying as the midday sun, he defies suffering, and meets death with a glance of enthusiasm and a smile of happiness." True, these revolutionists hav killed a few tyrants, but think of the suffering and death these tyrants caused. Let me instance but one of ten thousand cruel acts committed by that worst of tyrants, Alexander II. When poor Poland made her last struggle for independence, one who took part in that revolution was the Abbe Sierocinski. This patriot was captured and sentenced to labor for life in the mines of Siberia. After years of toil and privation, he resolved with a few companions to escape. The plot was discovered.

From the emperor came this sentence, "Seven thousand lashes each!" The execution of the sentence is thus related: "The culprits were stripped to the waist, and their hands were tied behind to a bayonet. Each one, by turns, walked along the whole of one battalion, every soldier administering to him a blow with his full strength. A thousand blows fell, and then each miserable, torn, bleeding victim was sent back to receive another thousand. On the third journey, all, save Sierocinski, fell dead. Sierocinski had been kept until the last that he might behold the tortures suffered by his friends. He started on his fearful journey singing, 'God be merciful,' and his wild accents were gradually lost in the thud of the sticks striking his bare flesh, and the commands of the general, shouting, 'Strike harder! strike harder!' When he received the first thousand blows he fell fainting, his blood dropping on the snow. He was placed upright on a sledge, and tied so as to expose his back to the full weight of the descending rods. The unhappy man continued to groan until he was dragged four times before the battalion. He then became silent. The last three thousand blows fell on a corpse!"

He protests against calling men incarcerated for crime Christians, which he says "is just as absurd as to say an honest thief or a sober drunkard." But a "Christian thief" and a "Christian drunkard" are not more paradoxical than an "honest Democrat" or a "sober Republican." "Let us define words and use them in accordance with common sense." I use words in accordance with common usage, but in their use this writer manifests an utter disregard both for common usage and for common sense. Christianity is a system of religion, and all who accept the divine origin of that system, all who believe the Bible to be the word and Christ to be the son of God are Christians, regardless of their moral character. A church which places creed above deeds, which makes salvation rest not upon conduct but upon belief, has no right to deny the paternity of her legitimate offspring.

He quotes from Christ, "Many will say to me in that day, Lord, Lord, hav we not prophesied in thy name, and in thy name hav cast out devils, and in thy name done many wonderful works?" These supplicants will not be Freethinkers. "And then will I profess unto them, I never knew you." If Christ be God, and omniscient, then he would profess a lie. "Depart from me, ye that work iniquity." But who are these workers of iniquity? Christ says, and my critic repeats, "Men represented as casting out devils, doing many wonderful works, and prophesying." Not one word about criminals; so that his effort to prove by Christ that criminals cannot be Christians must be pronounced a failure.

"And yet the writer of this address dares to tell us that the thieves, prostitutes, murderers, and scum of society are Christians." And why should they not be? The first man sent to paradise by Christ was a thief, his favorit female companion was a prostitute, while murderers, next to priests and idiots, draw fewer blanks in the celestial lottery than any other class.

"Why, they are not even allowed the title of citizens in any country. They are in this free country disfranchised and not allowed to vote." True, but they hav the consolation of knowing that in the sum total of the church's population to which Christians proudly point as evidence of their strength, each forms as big a unit as this writer who disclaims them.

"How any man of sound intelligence can call (Frederick) Douglass a Freethinker surprises me." How any man of sound intelligence can dispute the fact surprises me. He says that in 1846 he heard Douglass declare himself to be a Christian. His veracity upon this point I do not question. But bear in mind that I was referring not to the Frederick Douglass of 1846, but the Frederick Douglass of to-day. That Douglass was a Christian once is doubtless true. But because the writer stands in the same rut where he stood forty years ago, he should not forget that other men hav advanced.

One of the leading Freethought organizations of this country is the Free Religious Association. In 1874, Mr. W. J. Potter, secretary of this association, sent an invitation to Mr. Douglass to attend the annual meeting of the society for that year. Here is his answer:

"WASHINGTON, D. C., May 15, 1874.

"DEAR MR. POTTER: I hav delayed attention to your kind invitation thus long in hope of being able at last to send you an affirmativ answer, but circumstances are against me. I cannot be present at your Free Religious Convention in Boston. This is, of course, of smaller consequence to others than to myself, for I should come more to hear than be heard. Freedom is a word of charming sound, not only to the tasked and tortured slaves who toil for an earthly master, but for those who would break the galling chains of darkness and superstition. Regarding the Free Religious movement as one for light, love, and liberty, limited only by reason and human welfare, and opposed to the works of those who convert life and death into enemies of human happiness, who people the invisible world with ghastly task-masters, I giv it hearty welcome. Only the truth can make men free, and I trust that your convention will be guided in their utterances by its light and feel its power. I know many of the good men and women who are likely to assemble with you, and I would gladly share with them the burden of reproach which their attacks upon popular error will be sure to bring upon them.

"Very truly yours, FREDERICK DOUGLASS."

To call Guiteau and Jesse James Christians, and Longfellow and Emerson unbelievers, he characterizes as "monstrous idiocy." Then nearly all are idiots, for few, save those who deem it a virtue to lie for Christ's dear sake, will dispute these facts.

So very pious was Guiteau, that he could not bear to hear a profane word; while Jesse James was such a valiant soldier of the cross that he shot a companion for denying the doctrin of endless punishment.

After Longfellow's death, a reader of the New York Sun wrote to the editor asking him whether the poet was a Christian or not. The answer Mr. Dana gave, for he could truthfully giv no other, was, "Longfellow was not a Christian."

His attempt to prove that Longfellow was not an Atheist was uncalled for. No one has asserted that he was.

When Emerson died, the Presbyterian said: "He (Emerson) was an eminent and quite attractiv Pagan, living in the nineteenth century, but living a life wholly apart from Christ." Said the Rev. N. H. Chamberlain, of St. John's Episcopal church, Boston: "Mr. Emerson was not a Christian and did not claim to be a Christian. He definitly rejected, for reasons which he set forth, historical Christianity as a solecism and an error. Some loose talkers hav called him a Christan; but if he is to be admitted to the Christian fold, Christianity might as well commit suicide. If Mr. Emerson can say there is no need of Jesus Christ and still be a Christian, Christianity is logically dead."

"Emerson was a Unitarian preacher." So was Chainey. But Chainey outgrew the Unitarian faith, and so did Emerson. He says that being a Unitarian preacher, "therefore he must hav studied the character of Christ, not natural morality." Unitarian preachers do study natural morality, and recognize Christ as a product as evangelical Christians claim.

"In nature I see nothing lovely—wolves, bears, tigers, etc; in the fowls of heaven, the vulture, hawk, owl, cormorant, etc; in the fish of the sea, shark, sword-fish, etc; in the insectorial world, grasshoppers, lice, bugs, etc; in fact, all nature teems with death and destruction, misery and pain." And all these agents of death and destruction, misery and pain, were designed and created by his God! If such a God existed, in the language of Michael Bakounine, "it would be necessary to abolish him."

The ghosts of the French Revolution and Russian Nihilism seem to haunt this writer continually. With these themes his article begins; with them it ends. Christians hav caused more deaths in a single hour than all the Nihilists hav ever caused, hav slaughtered more in a single day than fell in Paris during the ten years that elapsed from the storming of the Bastile to the accession of Napoleon. Yet all the crimes and cruelties of Christendom receive no word of condemnation from him. He sees a hundred million human beings offered up upon the altar of Christian superstition; he sees earth covered with the yellow bones of murdered heretics and scholars; he sees the butcheries of Constantine, of Theodosius, of Charlemagne, and other early champions of the church; he sees the Crusades, in which more than twenty millions perish; sees the followers of Godfrey in Jerusalem; sees the indiscriminate massacre of men, women, and children; sees the mosques piled seven deep with murdered Saracens; sees the Jews burnt in their synagogs; sees Cœur de Leon butcher in cold blood thousands of defenseless captivs; sees the Franks in Constantinople, plundering, ravishing, murdering; sees an army of children sent forth to die with cold and hunger; sees their bodies scattered among the mountains of Europe and along the shores of the Mediterranean; he witnesses the expulsion of the Moors from Spain, the murder of the Huguenots and Waldenses; sees Smithfield and Bartholomew; the slaughter of German peasants; the desolation of Ireland; Holland covered with blood; he sees Cortez and Pizarro cutting down like grass millions of inoffensiv nativs in North and South America; he sees the Auto-da-fe, where heretics clad in mockery are led to torture and to death; he sees the Inquisition with its countless instruments of fiendish cruelty; he sees men stretched upon the rack, disjointed, and torn limb from limb; sees them flayed alive, their bleeding bodies seared with red-hot irons; sees their eyes bored out with heated augers, their tongues torn out, their bodies pierced with a thousand needles; sees them covered with pitch and oil and set on fire; he sees aged women tied to the heels of fiery steeds and dragged to death; he sees new-born babes flung into the flames to perish with their mothers, or with their mothers sewed in sacks and sunk into the sea; he sees thousands of mothers, wives, and daughters burnt for witchcraft; he sees Christian England in Hindostan sending her nativs to hell from the cannon's mouth; he sees the persecution of Jews in Europe to-day; he sees southern Europe overrun with Christian cutthroats; he sees our prisons filled wish Christian thieves and murderers; he sees hundreds of villains in the pulpit; sees helpless girls outraged and murdered by these godly priests. All this he views with an approving smile, but when the French Revolution and Russian Nihilism meet his gaze, he needs must hang his head and blush. Oh, that a painter were at hand to paint that smile and paint that blush and hang them side by side to show the world what superstition does for men!

He claims to hav "broached" all the leading points in my address. Glance through the work and say if this be true. Here are gathered a thousand damaging facts. But five or six of them has he noticed, and these among the least important ones. My address was directed against the false assumptions of the church. The church claims to be the great conservator of public morals. By the teachings of her leading theologians, by the testimony of impartial historians, by a long array of statistics, I demonstrated the falsity of this claim. How has he answered me? With a tirade against Atheism. The church claims to hav produced our civilization. I showed that the church destroyed the Greek and Roman civilization, and that our present civilization was the work of Rationalism. Has he answered this? The church claims to be the friend of science and learning. I showed that she had ever been the enemy of schools and science, and the persecutor of scholars and scientists. Does he deny it? The church claims that we are indebted to Christianity for our charitable and philanthropical institutions. I proved the falsity of this claim and showed that our noblest philanthropists were Freethinkers. He has not refuted this. The church claims to be the guardian of liberty. I showed that she had been the mortal foe of human liberty. He does not deny it. The church claims credit for the abolition of slavery, for the elevation of woman, for the temperance reform. I showed that these reforms were inaugurated by those whom the church was pleased to denominate Infidels, and that not until they became popular did the church espouse them. The truth of this he has not denied. The church boasts of our "Christian republic." I showed that our republic was established and perpetuated by men who held no allegiance to the church—that Paine, Jefferson, Washington, Franklin, and Lincoln, the men to whom we are most indebted, were Infidels. He has not attempted to refute this.

That "False Claims" is wholly free from errors I am not vain enough to suppose. But whatever errors it contains are not errors of wilfulness or recklessness. I fully realize that I do not stand in the "coward's castle" before a band of credulous followers, where bald assertion counts for argument and falsehoods pass for facts. Before I launched this little craft I took the precaution to protect it with a triple plate of iron facts. For months it has sailed along unharmed, till now this Christian sentinel, with spy-glass, fancies that he sees some specks of rust. He points them out and eagerly expects that it will sink.

JOHN E. REMSBURG.

A New Idea.

It may be presumptuous to call anything new. However, the writer has never seen the following advanced by any other person, and he has practically proved its truth within twenty years past. Students among our truth seekers will do well to note and test it.

If you should, after getting a smattering of any language, Greek, Latin, German, or other, go to work every day and study that language three hours each day for about two months, you would not be much advanced, although you will hav consumed 180 hours.

If, however, after having a little knowledge of the language—knowing its grammar well enough to construe short sentences—you will study five minutes or ten every day for years enough so your few minutes amount to the one hundred and eighty hours, you will become a proficient in the language. Six hours a day for one year will not do for you what ten minutes per day will do in five years. The writer some years ago determined to learn Italian. He took up the grammar and studied absorbingly for a few weeks, construing meanwhile sentences from the reader, for grammar without reading is to choke one with dry bran in a parched desert. After about a month, he resolved to read Italian every day for ten minutes until he mastered it. At the end of three years, never having neglected this task for one day, and confining himself almost strictly to the ten minutes, he could read Italian almost as easily as English. Without dictionary, or stopping to think what words meant, he read most difficult authors, page after page, as understandingly as he could English, his nativ tongue.

When a child, the same person was sent to a grammar school to prepare for college on the English plan. For three years he was confined to Latin and Greek grammar; for two years more to the readers and to Cæsar, Xenophon, etc. After graduating, he undertook to teach a young girl the Greek in the Lancastrian or common sense, anti-how-not-to-do-it method. In six weeks that little girl, who never had seen a Greek letter before, was a better Greek scholar than at least one-half the average sophomoreans of his day.

N. B.—One may be able to read a language as fluently as a nativ, and yet not understand a word in conversation. To learn by the eye is one thing; by the ear another. Words spoken run into each other confusingly. "Come here to me" sounds "kumere tumme," etc.

Mr. Kirby, of Doniphan, Kan., Once More.

On another page is a somewhat violent letter from our western philosophical antagonist. It is not Mr. Kirby's fault that he is not on hand oftener. In the exercise of our duties as editor we are obliged to thwart our inclinations as an individual, and defer his lucubrations till the opportune moment for us to make a note of his points arrives. We hav on hand between three and four hundred communications. In the nature of things a large portion of them can never see the light. But in doing as near justice to all as circumstances permit, it is inevitable that some delay must ensue with individual articles. We trust this explanation will allay our friend's wrath on that score.

If our condemnation of the ipse dixit style of presenting "arguments" seems to include Thomas Paine, we cannot help it. Probably Paine had for a parent the average Englishman, who believed, with Solomon (who, by the way, was a heretic, and not a good orthodox Jew), that to spare the rod was to spoil the child. Such being the case, in Mr. Paine's boyhood days he undoubtedly threw up the breastwork of a lie to shield himself from bodily chastisment. Yet if he did we cannot regard lying as right. And when Mr. Paine grew up beyond the reach of his father's rod he undoubtedly grew also beyond the petty sin of deception. We venerate Thomas Paine for his good labors; we honor him for his humanitarian work, and for the powerful aid he lent to the destruction of superstition. When he writes of the Bible and Christianity, of things tangible, seen, and examinable, he commands respect and compels agreement with him because he demonstrates the truth of what he says. But when it comes to a speculation upon what can never be demonstrated, one man's guess is as authoritativ as another's. Ingersoll said in one of his lectures that a man could lift as much nothing as a God. Talk on the question of "God's" existence is almost wasted words. Nothing but the probabilities can be considered. The arguments, as friend Kirby says, "may not be susceptible of demonstration." Thomas Paine, no more than Mr. Kirby, can perform the impossible.

On this question of the existence of a "God" whole volumes hav been written, the writers taking every possible position, yet never coming to an agreement, nor convincing others than themselvs of the truth of their speculations. It is this waste of words and time we wish to avoid. If Mr. Kirby has some evidence not drawn from his "inner consciousness"—evidence historical, objectiv, real, that can be weighed, summed up, decided upon once for all, and settled to the satisfaction of outsiders, we are willing to consider it. But he says himself that he does "not expect to do what no one has ever done before—demonstrate the existence of God." Then, we ask, why did he propose it? If he merely wants to put his speculations before the world, we answer that hundreds hav done so, yet no good resulted, no demonstration was effected. In this admission Mr. Kirby has conceded the impossibility of performing his self-appointed task, and acknowledged the sophistry of his own arguments; for some of his reasons, he says further, "may not be susceptible of demonstration." Well, we do not want such "reasons." If they are not susceptible of demonstration, why introduce them? Is it his plan to befog the reader and our poor self by multiplicity of words and high-sounding quotations?

And what need is there to "refute to a demonstration" an argument its author admits is not "susceptible of demonstration?" We would not insult the intelligence of the readers of the paper by seriously considering such "arguments." But now, after his fatal admissions, Mr. Kirby asks if we will undertake to demonstrate the non-existence of a God? Bless your heart, Mr. Kirby, what rules of logic can you point us to that require the negativ to be first proven? No, we will not undertake any such absurdity; neither will we undertake to prove that Mars is not peopled by men seven statute miles tall, and four nautical leagues round. If you will undertake to demonstrate the existence of these Martian monstrosities, we will listen respectfully, for there would be novelty in the proposition, a spice which your own wofully lacks. On the question of "God's" existence our position is that of Prof. Huxley—"we know nothing of what may be beyond phenomena." If our honorable opponent knows more he will greatly oblige by making his knowledge public. And as for disputing that matter is eternal, that is the very basis of the Materialistic philosophy, and completely overthrows the Bible story of creation. No, we shall not take the negativ on that. But if Mr. Kirby is a Christian, he will. In the first note we wrote for Mr. Kirby's benefit we pointed out the inconsistency of his adopting the Materialistic philosophy in this, and the Christian theology of the fall of man and his subsequent redemption by Christ. There is no need of going over the ground again. Whether life is co-eternal with matter is a problem we hav no means of solving. Our opinion is that somewhere in the illimitable past the changes and combinations of matter hav evolved what we call life. Its microscopic beginning, however, has not been positivly traced, and at the present incomplete stage of experiments it would be presumption amounting to folly to imagin it can be settled, or that even further light can be thrown upon the subject by a discussion between Mr. Kirby and this editor. Further along will be found the Evolutionists' conclusions upon this point. The physical scientists are the men to look to, and we recommend Mr. Kirby to engage Mr. Bastian in controversy on spontaneous generation.

On the existence of spirits we must again say that we know nothing beyond phenomena. Our opinion will not change the matter one way or the other. During the past few years Spiritualism has been discussed pro and con in our pages by scores of able writers and thinkers, but we hav yet to learn of one of them, or of one reader, who has turned a mental summersault in consequence. With this fact before us, Mr. Kirby must see how futil it would be for him and ourself to add our voices to the general clamor. But the most foolish proposition is that asking proof that spirits hav not existed from all eternity. It is impossible to be patient with such absurd propositions. Until their present existence is demonstrated in a manner which the world cannot resist any more than it can refuse credence to the multiplication table, we shall not take the useless trouble of speculating upon the origin and beginning of spirits.

Mr. Kirby also wishes the affirmativ taken on the statement "that there was no prior being acted in the creation or formation of the human family." The object of Mr. Kirby's whole letter, where he refrains from personal allusions, seems to be to involve us in a maze of speculations as absurd as the messianic idea, and the conclusion to which is as vain to seek as the fabled heaven of the Christians. He puts his "God" in all sorts of guises—as a "God," as a being acting in the formation of the human family. By his asking us to disprove it, we suppose he holds that some being did so act. It remains then for him to demonstrate the fact. The assumption is his; we know of no logical rule obliging us to demolish his fancies. He may present what evidence he has for his theory, and we will consider it.

The gentleman from Kansas says also that if we are unable to demonstrate the origin of man, why question the existence of "God?"—which is about as sensible an observation as to say to a man, If you don't understand Sanskrit, why question the astronomy of Ptolemy. Man knows he is here; the question ever recurs to him, Whence did I come? The Christian says, "God made you." But when we question the Christian closely he says he cannot prove it; his reasons are "not susceptible of demonstration." Now, Mr. Kirby challenges us to demonstrate our hypothesis. His fails him, and he, being an investigator, endeavors to get the truth. We will put our hypothesis, therefore, before him. On the origin of life, we will quote Lester F. Ward. We do not wish Mr. Kirby to believe this because Lester F. Ward says it. We only ask him to accept it as he sees its truth. And if he can he should go to the bottom of these facts for himself. Mr. Ward thus explains the origin of life:

"The complex stage of aggregation of matter exhibiting life is no longer a hypothetical one. The molar aggregate resulting from such a re-compounding of the albuminoids has been discovered. It exists under diverse conditions, and manifests properties fully in keeping with its exalted molecular character. This substance discovered by Oken in 1809, and denominated Urschleim, recognized by Dujardin in 1835, and called sarcode, and thoroughly studied by Mohl in 1846, who named it protoplasm, has now passed unchallenged into the nomenclature of modern organic chemistry under the last-mentioned title.

"Protoplasm is a real substance, found in considerable abundance in nature, not only within the tissues of organized beings, but, as we might almost say, in a mineral state, wholly disconnected from such beings. There is no more doubt that it is elaborated out of the inorganic elements than there is that ammonia or common salt is thus elaborated. It is a true chemical compound, in which the proportions of each element are known. It contains approximately 54 parts of carbon, 21 parts of oxygen, 16 parts of nitrogen, 7 parts of hydrogen, and about one part of sulphur and phosphorus.

"The great truth that now comes squarely home to us is that life is a property of matter. It is simply the result of the movements going on among the molecules composing a mass of protoplasm. It is a phenomenon presented by this most highly complex form of matter, and which is never absent from it. To kill protoplasm is to destroy its composition, to degrade it into a lower order of substance. The activities, powers, functions, and susceptibilities possessed by this substance, whose combined effect we denominate life, are but the relations which the substance sustains by virtue of its constitution to the forms of matter around it. They are its properties, just as astringency, transparency, etc., are the properties of alum.

"In reaching the substance, protoplasm, we hav not only reached the fact of life itself, but in its properties we behold all there is essential to life.

"The moner is Hero's engin, the vertebrate is the modern locomotiv; the power that propels is the same in both. The observed advance is not in the force, but in the organization.

"It was undoubtedly in the sea, that great receptacle for all forms of matter, that the first beginnings of life took place. In the sea there now exist millions of beings of lowly organization whose bodies consist almost exclusivly of protoplasm, either in its undifferentiated state, or but slightly modified into cells and simple aggregate of cells."

Mr. Ward, in his "Haeckel's Genesis of Man," has outlined the evolutionist's conception of the development of man, which has been a descent in a direct line from the lower animals. "Haeckel," whose large volumes Mr. Ward has epitomized, "pursues man's genealogy back through the labyrinth of primordial forms into the cell, and thence still back until he loses it in protoplasm. Standing, as man does, at the head of the animal kingdom, and forming the last and highest stage of development upon the globe, the history of his progress from the lowest form of organic existence must be co-extensiv with that of all other beings. It differs, however, from the history of development in general, in not being concerned with any of the branches that diverge at various points from the main anthropogenetic stem. This becomes obvious when we commence to study phylogeny, but may be noted here as a means of better appreciating the true scope of anthropogeny. A few illustrations will make it clear. Not to speak of the entire vegetable kingdom which is lopped off at the first stroke, we find, as we ascend the scale, that one after another the great branches of the Zoophytes, of the Annelida, of the Mollusca, of the Fishes, of the Reptils, of the Ungulata and Cetacea, of the Carnivora and Rodentia, and of many other less important groups, are successivly passed by and left behind, thus obviating the necessity of following out the special genealogy and development of each of these complicated divisions of natural history. The history of development of man pushes right on, taking such notice only of divergent trunks as is necessary to fix with certainty the position of his line of march."

This line of march is outlined with much technical particularity by Mr. Ward. The primordial ancestor of all organized beings, of course including man, was some form of moner. The direct descendants of the moner "are undoubtedly the various forms of amœba. According to Haeckel, neither the moner nor the amœba can be strictly classed either with animals or with plants." They form, however, the base of the animal scale, and are classed as the first and second terms of the series. The third stage is the animal amœbæ, which at one period of their development formed societies or compound individuals, being from that transformed into a "family of creatures standing at the base of the protozoa, whose bodies consisted of a simple, hollow sphere, the walls of which were formed of a simple layer of cells. These were the Planæada," and formed the fourth stage. Out of the planæada developed the Gastræada, whose bodies consisted of a simple sack, open at one end. They are counted as the fifth stage in the development of organized life. The sixth was a race of extinct worms, which "originated from the gastræada by the formation of an intermediary germinativ layer, from which the two inner secondary layers eventually differentiated. These creatures belonged to the lowest sub-division of the worms, the Accœlomi, which, as their name implies, possess no cavity of the body (cœlom) distinct from the sack-like stomach. They are also without any vascular system, heart, or blood, but manifest the first traces of the formation of a nervous system, the simplest organs of sense, and rudiments of secretiv and reproductiv organs. Out of the Accœlomi were developed the Cœlomati, which, still low in the scale, neve rtheless possess a distinct cœlom. The now extinct race which effected this transition forms the seventh stage of anthropogenetic development. From this point the great articulate branch swung off, and a little higher the important branch of the Mollusks." The eighth stage "originated out of the worms of the seventh stage by the formation of a dorsal nerve-marrow, and by the formation of the spinal rod which lies below it." "The Amphioxus forms the ninth stage in the anthropogenetic line, and furnishes the first link in the vertebrate chain. It is the only known representativ of the once great subdivision of vertebrates called by Haeckel the Acrania, or skulless vertebrates. Of this wholly unique and extremely interesting creature sufficient mention has already been made. The tenth stage arose out of the Acrania through a simple enlargement of the anterior extremity of the spinal nerve and the differentiation of the corresponding part of the chorda dorsalis into a rudimentary cranium. The transition to the eleventh, the Selachian or primordial fish-stage, took place through the formation of a pair of nostrils and a pair of jaws out of the simple, circular mouth-orifice of the Cyclostoma. With the higher fishes human genealogy is not immediately concerned, but only with the lowest sub-class, the Selachii, whose present living representativs are few, and comprise the sharks, rays, etc., but which formed, in the Devonian age, the chief population of the waters of the globe, as their singular heterocercal remains, found in the rocks of that period, abundantly attest. The transition from the Selachians was next to the Dipneusta, which constitute the twelfth stage. It was brought about by the natural adaptation of the organs of the body to a partially terrestrial existence. The swim-bladders were transformed into imperfect lungs, the nasal orifices, which in fishes hav no communication with the interior of the mouth, established such a communication, and the single auricle of the heart divided into two, thus correspondingly improving the circulation of the blood. Gegenbaur has demonstrated that the real character of the fins of fishes is that of many-toed feet. The changes that led from the fish to the Dipneusta seem not to hav affected the number of these toes, although a certain adaptation of the fins to terrestial locomotion was perceptible. The next important transformation was to concern this part of the animal anatomy. The animals nearest related to the Dipneusta are unquestionably the amphibians, with which the former are frequently classed; but they differ from them in the important respect of possessing regular, five-toed feet. But one conclusion can be drawn from this fact, and this is that among the many and varied forms of the once great Dipneusta class, there was one whose locomotiv organs had become transformed through adaptation and natural selection into five-toed feet, and that from this long extinct five-toed progenitor the present amphibians hav descended. The human embryo itself, and that of all the higher vertebrates, pass through an analogous transition. With frogs, toads, and other higher amphibians, as we are most familiar with them, the anthropogenetic line has no direct connection. It constantly hugs the base of the whole group, exhibiting direct relationships only with the sozobranchia, which, therefore, form the thirteenth, and the sozura, which form the fourteenth stage.

"The creature which forms the fifteenth stage of man's genealogy, Haeckel calls the Protamnion. Out of it was developed primarily the great reptilian class, from which proceeded later the birds, with neither of which has man any direct connection. The origin of the mammals, however, must also be sought in the Protamnion stock, from which this class, too, must hav proceeded—perhaps simultaneously with the reptilian branch, though in quite a different direction. A very distinct race, which Haeckel styles the Promammalia, forming the next or sixteenth stage of man's descent, must hav developed out of the Protamnia, and transmitted all these marked peculiarities to the entire mammalian class. Man himself possesses all these special mammalian characteristics, and is therefore a genuin mammal."

The seventeenth stage in the development of the human race are the Marsupialia. "Here the cloaca [the excretory opening at the extremity of the intestinal canal] is divided by a horizontal partition into two distinct orifices, both opening externally; nipples are formed on the mammœ, to which the young attach themselvs, and the clavicles are distinct from the sternum. In these respects, the marsupials agree with all the higher mammals. The lemurs form the eighteenth stage in the anthropogenetic line. They "are harmless and melancholy nocturnal animals of a graceful form, and are chiefly confined to the islands south of Asia and east of Africa, and particularly to Madagascar. Their frequency on the islands of the Indian Ocean led the English naturalist Sclater to name this once continental, but now mostly submerged region, Lemuria, a circumstance to which Haeckel has given special prominence by pointing out the many facts which conspire to justify us in the conjecture that here may hav existed the true 'cradle of the human race.'"

"From the lemurs to the true apes," says Ward, "the transition is comparativly easy. Linnæus, with almost prophetic ken, notwithstanding his dualistic proclivities, classed man with the apes, lemurs, and bats, in his celebrated order, Primates. Blumenbach fancied he saw in the human foot a pretext for rescuing man from this association, and accordingly erected for him a separate order, which he called Bimana (two-handed), distinguishing the apes, etc., as Quadrumana (four-handed). This classification was adopted by Cuvier, and is the one which has generally prevailed among naturalists, down to Huxley and Haeckel. Huxley, however, gave the whole subject a complete re-investigation, and arrived at the conclusion that Blumenbach's order Bimana can not be maintained on anatomical grounds. He shows, in the most convincing manner, that the distinctions alleged to exist between the posterior hands of apes and the feet of man are apparent only, that they were based on physiological and not on morphological considerations. The apes are just as good bimana as men are, and men are just as good quadrumana as the apes." The tailbearing apes, according to Haeckel, are the nineteenth link. The tailless apes are the twentieth. The now extinct man-ape, or missing link, was the twenty-first genealogical stage, the twenty-second being the genus Homo, or man as we find him thousands of years ago.

The foregoing is Haeckel's exposition of the vexed question Mr. Kirby propounds. Mr. Huxley differs with him slightly in the latter stage, but the two are in substantial agreement. Of course we hav only given the general outline. The details are but matters of space. We do not ask our friend to believe it because Huxley and Haeckel say it. But we do ask him to read the records of their experiments and investigations and see just what they hav found out for certain, and also their premises for the conclusions arrived at. We hope no one will ever believe anything not demonstrable to common sense and reason, and certainly shall not urge Mr. Kirby to change his mind because some eminent person has written that his opinion is thus and so. Physical facts are what the evolutionists depend upon. If there were no facts, there would be no evolutionists, but with all the facts now demonstrated beyond cavil there is no other logical or even reasonable conclusion remaining.

We hav gone to such length in this incomplete epitome of man's origin that we hav but little room left in which to grant Mr. Kirby's other request. What he calls "intelligent design" is properly "adaptation." For instance: If Mr. Kirby sees a giraffe reaching for leaves, he would say, "What a blessing it is that God gave the giraffe his long neck!" when the fact is the giraffe has a long neck because, for successiv generations, he has been reaching for leaves, and the longest-necked, or fittest, hav survived and transmitted the distinguishing peculiarity to their offspring. When Mr. Kirby goes fishing and catches a flounder, if he paid any attention to his prey, he would exclaim, "See how intelligent design is manifested in putting both the flounder's eyes on top, so as he moves in the mud on the bottom he can see up!" But the intelligent design disappears upon reflection that the creature's habits hav determined its shape. Did space permit we could go on and giv thousands of such illustrations, proving them in detail by the experiments recorded by naturalists. Can Mr. Kirby quote any naturalist's experiments upon his God? Evolution is proved by objectiv realities. Deity is but a subjectiv speculation. We will leave it to Mr. Kirby's own common sense as to which is the truth.

THE Asbury Methodist church of this city has lost an enthusiastic and responsiv member. His name is Forbes. For ten years he has been a feature at the services of that church, and has kept up a running fire of amens, hallelujahs, praise Gods, and similar outbreaks whenever the oratory of the pulpit aroused him from slumber. But Mr. Forbes neither trumps nor follows suit. As his pastor says, "It is 'Amen!' hit or miss." For instance, when an old and highly respected member of the church lay at the point of death, two years ago, Dr. Ferris, then the pastor of the church, detailed the good man's virtues, and spoke of his unsullied reputation, and his blameless life. "And now," said the minister solemnly, "there is a sad prospect that he will pass away from us soon." Mr. Forbes, roused up from a refreshing doze at this juncture, and not catching the exact spirit of the remark, cried fervently, "Thank the Lord!" which was, to say the least, embarassing to the sick man's relativs. On another occasion, when Dr. Ferris had performed the wedding service over two other highly respected members of the church, and the young people were standing before him, he offered a prayer in which there occurred the sentence: "For in heaven there will be no marrying or giving in marriage." and Mr. Forbes promptly shouted, "Glory to God!" and disconcerted both the minister and newly wedded pair. Members of the church hav intimated to Mr. Forbes that a diminution of his enthusiasm would be appreciated, but Mr. Forbes has declined to accept hints. He has been in the habit of attending the class-meetings, but a short time ago the leader requested him to discontinue his attendance, as he sang so loud that he put all the others out of tune. A week or two ago the pastor of the church discoursed upon a temperance question, and whenever he made a telling point, or denounced any unrighteous practices with particular vigor, Mr. Forbes cried, "That's so!" "That's so!" and a few of the members of the church thought that his remarks were intended to be personal. This, it seems, capped the climax. Several brothers sought Brother Forbes, and requested that he become less vociferous. This the enthusiastic member declined to do, and announced his intention of leaving the Asbury church to join an Episcopal institution, where, like the disaffected darkey, he can "slosh around nachul."

A FEW of the clergy are beginning to see the trend of the times toward reformation in state and church. and are putting a foot over the fence, ready to jump down on the right side and cry that they were there all the time. Rev. Carlos Martyn, in his sermon last Sunday, said: "Grave political and social abuses exist here and abroad. Labor feels that it is hardly dealt with. Capital regards labor as the attempt of a beggar to ride; labor thinks that capital is fraud and tyranny already on horseback. Labor says, 'Get all you can;' capital says, 'Keep all you can.' Abroad things are worse. Grave political and ecclesiastical abuses, grown gray and venerable in iniquity, lie utterly beyond all hope of reform. Feudalism still says the masses are born saddled and bridled to be ridden; priests and kings are born booted and spurred to ride. The Established church in England has no sympathy with the people. There lies the darkened chamber of labor, that rises only to toil and comes home only to sleep If we were in Moscow or St. Petersburg to-night I would be arrested for preaching this sermon, and you would be liable to be arrested and sent to exile before morning; and if your wife or mother ventured to go to the authorities to ask what had become of you she might be stripped and flogged for the impudence of the inquiry and sent to join you in the hell of Siberia. If I were a European I should be a revolutionist. I should hate such a government and despise the European church. When the church forgets that its founder was a carpenter, that its chief apostle was a tent-maker, that its leading spirits in the apostolic day were fishermen, that its adherents were the poor and the miserable, it is time that society should spew it out of its mouth. If the church is to continue to exist it must deserve to exist, and it can only deserve to exist by nesting low down with the people and keeping in sympathy with every humane and generous movement."

WE hav begun in this issue of THE TRUTH SEEKER a new department under the heading "Religious Intelligence," in which will be found a quantity of news not printed in the Advocate or Independent, where it properly belongs. This collection is the result of a casual glance at the daily papers during the past fortnight. How long we shall be able to continue this department depends, of course, on the activity of the Christian community. We shall certainly feel gratified, in the interests of those who love peace, order, and good morals, when material for the department no longer exists; but when clergymen like the eminent Mr. Humphrey catch up with the procession and even bid fair to head the stately column, there seems to be slight room for hope. But the religion of which these misdeeds are the outcome is growing weaker in its influence every day. This sweetly solemn thought comes to us o'er and o'er.

ONE of the best ways to help along the cause of Freethought is to circulate THE TRUTH SEEKER. Trial subscriptions of three months for 50 cents.

Letters from Friends.

PATCH GROVE, April 29, 284.

MR. EDITOR: Inclosed find $3 to continue my subscription for the best, most Liberal, and best conducted Freethought journal that I know anything about. I feel highly gratified that THE TRUTH SEEKER is so ably conducted. Each number does high honor to its illustrious founder's memory, as well as to your reputation. I am also gratified that Mr. Bennett's Greenwood monument is completed in spite of Christian bigotry. But his best monument is THE TRUTH SEEKER—may it long keep his memory green. MARY HUMPHREY.

KEOTA, IOWA, May 1, 284.

MR. EDITOR: For the inlosed fifty cents please send ten TRUTH SEEKERS, No. 17, with the eloquent lecture of Ingersoll. As lightning clears the air of the miasma of the mire, so does his oration clear the swampy brains of the priest-bound hosts of Jehovah. Unresisted, as a snow-plow clears the track, so his lecture clears away the rubbish of superstition to make way for liberty of thought, reason, and common sense. Every sentence is the "word of God," for God is thought. Some of the papers may be burnt; some may fall amongst thistles and thorns, some on bare ground, but some will bear fruit a hundredfold. Let us advance on the whole line.

CHARLES NAUMAN.

LEAVENWORTH, KAN., May 1, 1884.

MR. EDITOR: Being a constant reader of THE TRUTH SEEKER, I wish to tell you how much I like it. Having been brought up a Christian, it seemed quite blasphemous at first, but now that I am used to it I feel as though I could not do without it. I feel as though I was well acquainted with most of its contributors, and so far like their company well; especially Elmina. But after having read Mary V. Carpenter's letter to her (Elmina), and then read Elmina's reply in No. 16, and then re-read both, I must say I think Mary has confuted Elmina most effectually. We thought Elmina almost free from prejudice, but find she is still quite human, else she would not make the assertion that she believes all that do not enjoy life would cease to love it, and many other statements as void of reason. But perhaps she did as well as can be expected on the wrong side. MARY HUTCHESON.

CAWKER CITY, KAN.

MR. EDITOR: I want to talk on paper a little. For many years I hav seen occasionally an article in THE TRUTH SEEKER denouncing the Oneida Community and the polygamy of the Mormons, and just now a Mr. J. Van Denburgh has been slandering the Community by calling their institution a gigantic brothel. I hav been waiting long for some one to support their charges on scientific grounds, and it seems that I shall hav to wait much longer unless I can be successful in calling them to the task.

The Liberals of the country claim for themselvs the preeminence in submitting all things to the standard of science, and consequently it is not fair to denounce the practices of any person or community unless the arguments are supported on scientific grounds. So now I demand of all persons generally, and Mr. Van Denburgh in particular, to giv these people the justice of a fair trial.

The fact is, either monogamy nor polygamy is natural, and the question of which is the bone between us. For this argument I shall call the Community polygamous, as it is simply promiscuous intercourse; and as to whether there has been a formal, legal marriage, I waive the question.

GEORGE W. CHAPMAN, M.D.

WEST UNION, IOWA, April 20, 1884.

MR. EDITOR: My subscription having expired, please find three dollars for renewal. THE TRUTH SEEKER has been a light to me, and light is what I am seeking for. More than sixty-five years I hav been seeking light from that old book of fables called the Bible or God's word, and I hav been in darkness. THE TRUTH SEEKER has proved a light that has lit up the path of life. That story of God's word given to Moses making the world in six days, and resting on the seventh, is darkness to me. Then to cap the climax, making man from dust and woman from a rib. Still worse, letting the devil in the garden, destroying the happiness of the family. This looks like a great failure for a god that had the power to make a world in six days out of nothing But here comes damnation, damning to all eternity the posterity of Adam for what they could not help. Is it any wonder that this book should prove a stumbling-block to man? God and the devil killing Job's children and cattle, and afflicting Job to prove that he was a good man; Joshua stopping the sun to get time to kill his enemies; Jonah taking a sea voyage in a whale's belly, three days and three nights--oh, yes, Mr. Editor, this is beautiful stuff to ask a man to believe in this nineteenth century!

J. S. BREWER.

BURTON, TEXAS, April 21, 1884.

MR. EDITOR: I see in nearly every issue of your valuable journal something about prohibition, and none of its advocates seems to think rationally on this subject. Being a strict abstainer myself, a varied experience in business for nearly thirty years in different countries—a close observer withal—has proved to me most conclusivly that the more laws there are enacted, the higher liquor license is placed, and indeed the more you discuss prohibition and endeavor to force its principles in any manner, the more liquor is used, and deadlier is its effects. High license tariff causes venders to adulterate the stuff, and hence the more and sooner it kills. Stop dram shops, and people will buy it by the gallon or obtain it in some way, and hence more is used. There is but one way to stop its use, and that is to prohibit the manufacture and importation of all kinds of liquors. But can this be done? Clearly, it cannot; there are entirely too many avenues by which it can be introduced, and, too, such a law would savor of despotism rather than a free government that we claim for ours. If every other branch, or spring of water, from Maine to New Mexico was a fountain of pure liquor, pure and undefiled, free to all, I dare say there would be fewer drunkards than are to-day. I scarcely ever saw a boy raised by parents that strictly forbid the use of liquor, but turned out to be a drunkard in the end; whereas, those who were allowed its free use from childhood rarely cared to abuse it in after years. I hav employed clerks who had the name of drunkards, and would indulge to excess whenever liquor could be had, but who abstained entirely when it was handled and become plentiful every day before their eyes. While I admit that it is a great curse, and desire as much as any one to remedy the evil, I am sure these prohibitionists are adding fuel to the flames of this vice by their present course. H. B. JONES.

EXIRA, IOWA, May 1, 1884.

MR. EDITOR: I send you herewith money-order for my delinquency to your paper, also for TRUTH SEEKER ANNUAL. I hav taken THE TRUTH SEEKER since 1877, and hav read it with much pleasure and many curses. I believe that if Liberals would keep their private grievances out of the conventions, and ride their pet hobbies at home, and work together for the secularization of the government, which was the original object of the League, we would hav been sufficiently strong today to force a little favoring of politicians to us for our vote. There are votes enough in the Liberal ranks in the doubtful states to control the elections this fall, or the nominations in June and July to prevent such objectionable men as Edmunds and other sycophants to the church hierarchy from being nominated by either party.

New York and Indiana are very close, and every vote is sought after in those states by both parties. But men get crazy and think that all errors must be corrected in our movement. Hence every Liberal that had a hobby demanded that it be championed by the League. The League has been ruined, and our strength made an object of ridicule by the dissensions prevailing in it, by the wrangles over foreign questions, such as the prohibition and postal laws. Good Liberals honestly differ in opinions on these questions, but can agree on the main question—that of absolute separation of church and state. If the friends of free whisky and free mails wish to organize for the promotion of their respectiv views, let them do so under an appropriate name and calling, and let us hav the League, or a new organization, for the sole purpose of taxing church property, divesting our public schools of religious teachings, and our armies and legislatures of hired chaplains, paid for from the people's money, etc. I hav labored for this for thirty years, and derive much encouragement from the progress of Liberal ideas, but much chagrin from the crazy movements of what seem to me to be wild actions of individual members of what ought to be a united brotherhood.

Yours for union, J. A. HALLOCK.

MONTPELIER, IND., April 28, 1884.

MR. EDITOR: I hav read with care the many articles pro and con on the prohibition of the use of intoxicants, and feel like sending one brief article for publication in your paper.

A few years in the past California was free to all without law or restraint. Anarchy prevailed; the most brutal and the strongest ruled, until the more thoughtful combined and tried the most offensiv characters in their absence and then arrested them and inflicted their penalties even though it were death, and it was thought by many that society was benefited thereby. At the present time California has a code of laws punishing crime, and the standard of morals compares favorably with other states. Every human being should come under government. If he is not a law unto himself he needs outside pressure to control his actions. The same rule applies to intemperance that applies to other crimes. A crime in the true sense is an infringement of personal rights, which certainly is the case with drunkenness, the effect of which is to unfit the parent to provide for his children, to let them want for proper home, food, and clothing, the consequence of which often is premature death—the mother and children driven into the pitiless storm by the drunken maniac father and husband, with all the train of evil consequences that make drinking intoxicants an evil, if we hav any evils, and a crime if any there be. I do not acknowledge the right to do that which insures evil consequences to wife, children, parents, sisters, and brothers, and all the social ties that are most dear to humanity. If intemperance is a case that does not admit of legislation, so is murder and all other crimes. Oh, but you cannot enforce prohibitory laws! Do you always enforce the penalty for murder? yet who thinks of making it respectable by repealing the laws inflicting the penalties for that crime. One of the best remedies for drunkenness is to make it disgraceful and criminal to manufacture, sell, or drink any intoxicating beverage whatever, and a prohibitory law passed with a determination to enforce it will exert such influence. I felt that it was truly humiliating that the National Liberal League should get a majority vote against prohibiting the nefarious traffic and then be rebuked by only a very few individuals. I would propose that the next National Liberal League Congress pass a resolution with a rousing majority declaring drinking intoxicants a crime equal in enormity with murder. WILLIAM ALLEN.

IONIA, MICH., April 27, 1884.

MR. EDITOR: Thinking it might be well to post you a little on this part of God's moral heritage, is my apology for this intrusion (which you are at liberty to publish if you deem it, or any part of it, sufficiently interesting to be worth its space). Ionia is a young city of about seven or eight thousand inhabitants, pleasantly situated on the banks of Grand river, and is a live town; has eight houses for spook worship, costing from one to sixty thousand dollars each (untaxed), and as many expert sky-pilots, besides three or four extras for great occasions when it is necessary to double teams. Thus happily situated, we had come to think ourselvs very fortunate, never having suffered from any great calamity, such as fires, epidemics, hurricanes, cyclones, floods, tornadoes, or earthquakes. We had almost come to the conclusion that we were under the spiritual care of some big spook, when, about two months since, the Salvation Army struck us all unprepared for such a calamity—the first heard of it a man with a red band on his hat bearing the ominous words, "Salvation Army," came vending the War Cry; then came about a dozen more of both sexes, wearing like badges, marching through our streets by night singing loudly (which they are doing now past my door while I write this), "Blood and Fire! Blood and Fire! Hallelujah, we will conquer by the sword!" with a long train of boys and hoodlums in their wake, all joining in the chorus at the top of their voices. It is probably unnecessary to further describe their antics and orgies every day, lasting till nearly midnight every night for the last two months. The rabble, swelled by the more fanatical of the church people and sight-seers, for the fun of it is immense, numbered thousands. Lately the hoodlums drown their singing with their songs and yells, pelting them with beans, rotten lemons and eggs, tin cans, etc. Last night they threw cayenne pepper, and broke up the meeting. I send you, herewith, some clippings from our daily papers showing the work they are doing; several others show nearly the same mental condition, differing only in degree. By the way, has it never occurred to your mind that the Salvation Army was purely a Mormon scheme leaving out the more objectionable features? Surely it is Mormon as far as they go; a military religion, its members sworn in privately, sworn to go wherever their superior officers order them at any time, all under military management and rules; their preaching, if preaching it could be called, is identical with Mormonism as far as it goes. Salvation, salvation, and saints saved, saved, saved; it would not do to preach more of it; the same has been preached by all their missionaries in England, and no polygamy anywhere. Where are the fifteen hundred Mormon missionaries sent out to preach in the United States? Do you hear of them anywhere else? I think they are going about organizing Salvation Army posts. Those who work them after they are organized are paid by the week, or by the month, and they hav plenty of money. These are political times; such thorough organization may be of use to them. Mormonism means more than polygamy, and is not confined to Utah.

Respectfully, S. M. BAYARD, M.D.

SOUTH BEND, IND.

MR. EDITOR: Mr. Andrews, in his analysis of money (in THE TRUTH SEEKER of March 8th) seems to drift into the old orthodox channels—"belief is good as fact; the ideal is as good as the real." When Jehovah sat just above the firmament, his word was law, because it was believed the "cattle on a thousand hills were his;" but when it was learned that the cattle belonged to other parties, and Jehovah himself was not there, and never had been, the wildcat currency depreciated to zero, and there has been a theological panic ever since. The fact is, its promises to pay never had any real value. They represented nothing. Neither does the belief in any promis constitute money. Money is a real, tangible promis to pay.

John buys a wagon of James, for which he pays him one hundred dollars. But, being unable to take the wagon at once, he requires of James a promis to deliver the wagon on demand. This promis reads, "For value received I promis to pay John, or bearer, one wagon, worth one hundred dollars. (Signed) James." On his way home John meets George, and trades the promis of James for a horse. George trades it to Peter, and he goes and gets the wagon, and the promis is redeemed. All the time the promis circulated it was money. Again, as a balance of trade, John holds the promises of James for one thousand dollars, but as he is worth only five hundred dollars John requires that George and Peter sign the promis, whose combined ability to pay is one thousand dollars, and these promises continue to circulate from year to year, and are money. It matters not whether these promises were written on paper, silver, or gold. The fiat of James, George, and Peter constitutes money, just as long as the one thousand dollars stands ready to redeem the promis. The greenback is just such a promis, but in addition to the fiat of James, George, and Peter, the United States, all of us, we, the people of the United States of America, promis to pay, and the promis is good as long as there is a stripe or a star on the American flag. Every wagon, horse, farm, river, mine of gold and silver, stand pledged by the honor of fifty million honest hearts and hands to redeem them on demand.

The unit of value is the day's labor. James mines and coins one hundred pieces of gold in one hundred days. John raises one hundred measures of wheat in the same time. James calls his pieces dollars. John calls his measures bushels, but neither the gold nor wheat is money. Money has no intrinsic value. Intrinsic value means utility. Gold can be utilized, but not so advantageously as iron, wood, wheat, or even as paper.

The fiat of the people represented in Congress is the money of the people, whether it be inscribed on gold, silver, or paper, and every dollar's worth of property stands pledged for its redemption. This is the way it looks at 827 Prairie avenue, South Bend, Ind. J. W. WELLMAN.

WILLIAMSBURG, April 30, 1884.

MR. EDITOR: I really confess I was unaware my sympathies could be so earnestly aroused in behalf of our veteran heroin of the doctrin of Atheism as they hav been in behalf of Elmina. In fact, I was, viewing creation from her standpoint of observation, preparing an article for THE TRUTH SEEKER in justification of suicide.

That this is "a beautiful world," a very beautiful world, to those who from favorable circumstances by nature inherit health of body, health of mind, wealth, and favorable surroundings, there can be but little doubt; but she must also admit beside this truth, very few, comparativly, save in a very limited degree, enjoy this happy condition; but many, very many, pine in untold wretchedness the wide world over. Admitting this fact, as she, I think, certainly would, I based my article on suicide as antidotal to all insupportable misery that

"flesh is heir to." I was arrested in my determination in sending this humane article to your paper by reading the able communications of Mrs. Carpenter, of Mrs. Severance, of Mr. Petty, and Mr. Harvey W. Pinney, lately published in your Liberal journal. My heart failed me. My symyathies were touched in her behalf to behold her literary plumage of a score of past years bedraggled in defense of Atheism—an effete philosophy. I am afraid Elmina left school a great many years ago, and is in a state of Rip VanWinkle bewilderment.

Some kind-hearted, enthusiastic Spiritualists seem willing to pay her expenses to witness some of Dr. Slade's "spirit slate" writing and other spirit manifestations. A betting man might bet high it would be of little use. The old adage comes in here appropriately, "You may bring an ox to the water, but you can't make him drink."

These enthusiastic Spiritualists seem to overlook the existence of the two primary forces ever operating throughout every department of nature. And these forces are known as attraction and repulsion. Define these forces as you will, giv them what titles you may, taste, affinity, like and dislike, rapture or mental disgust, we will find them still operativ—as operativ in the vast planetary system of creation as in the minutest pebble on the ocean's beach.

Now, I think it would be safe to wage that in the matter of "slate writing," as of any other physical phenomena, that such is the repellant fiber of her material mind (for Spiritualism is material or 'tis nothing), that no satisfactory, conclusiv manifestation could be got in her presence. With Elmina it must be a matter of growth.

And again, Mr. Editor, hav you seriously reflected on the disastrous consequences her sudden conversion would hav on the thinking world at large, and THE TRUTH SEEKER in particular? It is absolutely frightful! Let us pray.

DAVID BRUCE.

ERIE, COL., April 28, 1884.

MR. EDITOR: I, with two others, left here directly after Mr. Prichard's letter appeared in THE TRUTH SEEKER last May. We followed the route laid out in his letter via San Francisco, Portland, and N. P. R. R. to Rothdrum, and arrived in the Cœur d' Alene camp. The Montana men, both Liberals and Christians, had been there and failed to find payable gold on Mr. Prichard's claim, and had treated the old man rudely. There were quite a number of Californians, one Black-Hiller, and some seven or eight—one with his wife—from Rathdrum on Prichard and Eagle Creeks when we arrived there. These had been invited in by private letters from Mr. Prichard before ever the letter that appeared in THE TRUTH SEEKER to the Liberal public had left Bozeman, Montana. Mr. Pritchard and the majority of them were members of the Masonic brotherhood, and all but himself were followers of the prophet of Nazareth.

The Californians had divided into three prospecting parties. One party went to work on a tributary gulch on the right and the second party on the left of Prichard's creek. They sluiced for days and only made sixty cents per day per man. The third party was put to work by Mr. Prichard on the very place where he claimed to hav discovered payable gold on the main creek. Results, 25 cents per day per man. Mr. Prichard, thinking that they must be leaving gold in the bed rock, came up, dug bed rock after them, and to his surprise could not get one pay prospect. This was in June, when the water had receded over twenty feet from the discovery spot, notwithstanding Craig's letter vindicating Mr. Prichard at the expense of the Californians. Myself and four others prospected a tributary, got gold in almost every pan, but out of some forty or fifty we tried we only got two payable prospects. One of them was a dollar and ten cents piece, alluded to in Mr. Erwin's letter last October. We also cut across by tunneling under the roots of trees an old channel on Pritchard's claim, the opposit side of the stream from the Californians, with no better results.

The same discouraging reports were received from Eagle creek. Our conclusions were that gold was scattered all over, that there might be spots that would pay, that Mr. Prichard had accidentally gotten on one and had unawares worked it all out. Mr. Prichard told us not to leave until he could return from a prospecting tour, but we and a party from Walla Walla, W. T., and the Californians left in the beginning of July before his return. A letter of his in August informed one of our party that he had found gold in payable quantities. I hav seen mining camps opened up in the wilderness of New Zealand, Australia, the Black Hills of Dakota, and Rocky Mountain countries, but I can only compare the Cœur d' Alene region to what I hav read of the jungles of Africa. I hav lost a good summer and winter's work through being away, and hav just arrived home with an empty purse, found my family had run in debt, and, worst of all, was over six months in arrears for my TRUTH SEEKER. If I am not asking too much, I hope you will keep sending me the weekly messenger until such time as I shall be able to forward you the amount, which I hope won't be long, and accept my thanks for sending it as you hav. Yours for the truth, GRIFF. A. LLOYD.

NEWPORT, ME., April 26, 1884.

MR. EDITOR: Is the "waste basket" full? If not, here is an addition to its contents. I hav just finished reading Herbert Spencer's long article in THE TRUTH SEEKER. It fills me with pain and brings to my mind what Gerritt Smith once said, "Some great men are very little men." Mr. Editor, let me tell you that the world will not be reformed. You are in the largest city in this country; when you see any great reform in that "sink of iniquity," will you please report? London is a much older city than New York, and London is more corrupt to-day than it was a hundred years ago. And New York will be in a worse condition in another hundred years than it is now. Now, Mr. Editor, don't think I am fool enough to think for a moment that any one will be affected or believe what I say. The world is made up of fools and knaves. There are tens of thousands of men and women that crowd into these cities, living miserable lives, some half starved, and are constantly complaining—those who hav their eyes partly opened—of their condition. And while they are dragging out miserable lives, millions of acres of land are waiting for their hands to work it. And there are millions of men and women to-day who, if they were offered a good farm, would not leave their miserable dens in the city, and go in the country, where, with eight hours' labor, they could hav a real haven of happiness.

The blind are leading the blind, and none know the way out of the fearful, terrible condition they are in. A set of fanatical coolies are getting up an insane war for the suppression of intemperance. A large portion of them are out of their proper places, or they would be in an insane asylum. To talk of stopping rum selling while cities exist, and money—an entirely unnatural medium of exchange—is used—the most corrupting power on earth, unless we except the Christian religion—is insanity run mad.

No, no, my good but deluded brothers and sisters, you may set your hearts at rest, the world will not be reformed for one thousand years at least. You can reform yourselvs by leaving these corrupt cities, and go into the country and become producers. Every days' labor done in a city is lost. Cities are vast pauper establishments, hiding-places for criminals and prostitution. A city is no place for a true reformer. A person who livs in a city, year after year, cannot consistently preach reform to others. "Physician, heal thyself," comes home with great force to all dwellers in cities. Cities are unnatural gatherings, and it is impossible to do away with crime and intemperance while they exist.

These words are written by an unpopular man, but they will never be disputed. They may be denied in words, but they will not stay denied. For forty years I hav been trying to solve the question, How shall the fearful evils, the terrible crimes which run riot everywhere, be abolished? If anyone has a remedy to peaceably depopulate these cities, and abolish money as a medium of exchange, he or she is the man or woman that the world wants. War will not save or redeem the world; strikes will not accomplish it; shorter hours is not the remedy for this fearfully sick world. The people are sick, they are sick unto death, and most of them are ignorant of the remedy. That there is a remedy I know, but to a real, true friend they will not listen. They prefer to uphold this system of infernalism, "church and state," the very power that binds them hand and foot and makes them slaves.

Friends, brothers, and sisters, until you learn to be a "law unto yourselvs," make your own laws, become your own masters, leave these corrupt cities, and become producers, do not complain of "hard times," for you yourselvs are the cause of it. Go not to the devil's box, alias the ballot box, which is only a snare for your destruction. Our only safety is in self-government, which needs no implements of death to sustain it. Your friend, SEWARD MITCHELL.

JACKSON, MICH.

MR. EDITOR: Having just finished reading Dr. Foote's article on vivisecti on, in which he makes mention of myself several times, I now wish to write a few words of inquiry and reply. My aim is to be a Liberal and a truth seeker in the highest sense of those noble names, therefore I am always willing to hear all sides of every question. All hail to free discussion in a kindly and Liberal spirit of each and every subject pertaining to the welfare of all living creatures, for it is often the only way to arrive at truth in regard to them. If these terrible statements in regard to vivisection are not true, there is no one who will rejoice more than myself, for I hav been suffering a mental vivisection of the most horrible nature ever since hearing of it, as will be seen by my former letter. If they are true, then I desire to reaffirm more strongly than ever my detestation and horror. If vivisection is all that Dr. Foote represents, why is there so much opposition to it in all countries, especially in England, where anti-vivisection societies number among their members many of the most intelligent and humane people in all ranks of life, scholars, statesmen, etc.? What object hav the opponents of vivisection in making these statements if they are untrue? Surely it is not a pleasant task. As for myself, if it were not for the hope of doing some good I would wish I had never heard of these things. I would never read nor write nor even think of them again if that were possible. These terrible cruelties may occur in Europe, it is admitted, but not in this country. I hope not, but in an article in Scribner's Monthly, published in 1880, we hav the testimony of Dr. A. J. Leffingwell as to the extreme cruelty practiced and permitted in medical colleges in our own country. He says, "I think it may be safely asserted that in the city of New York, in a single medical school, more pain is inflicted upon living animals, as the means of teaching well-known facts, than is permitted to be done for the same purpose in all the medical schools of Great Britain and Ireland." I hope that writer was mistaken, and that Dr. Foote is not, but how long will it be before these things are practiced here, if not already, if public sentiment is not aroused against them and some measures are not taken to prevent their occurrence. How much better to begin now, when this evil is as yet in its first stages and can be easily dealt with, than to wait until it becomes so powerful as to require some desperate measure to eradicate it. If I understand Mr. Preston's position correctly this is what he aims to do. If slavery had never been permitted in this country, how much better it would hav been, how much suffering might hav been spared! But it was allowed to exist; and what it cost to overthrow its power! It is surprising to Dr. Foote that we make so much fuss—as perhaps he would term it—over this subject, when there are so many reforms needing our assistance. I am interested in every reform, in every movement for the benefit of humanity. Would that my cash box was large and full enough; I would pour out its treasures for every good cause. Had I the millions that lie wasted and idle, no woe and want, no injustice and evil that I could relieve or prevent would long curse humanity. So do not shink that we are deaf to other wrongs because we speak so loudly against this. The case is like this: There is a mother with a large family of children, for instance. All of them are in trouble or danger, some from one cause, some from another. But there is one who is in the most imminent peril or agony which far transcends any of the others; which of these children will her mother heart go out to most? Which will she rush to rescue first? While anxious to do all that is possible for the others, that one will claim her first attention. Will it not? How was it in the time of the great antislavery agitation? The slaveholders told the Abolitionists to reform their own evils before they attacked slavery. Those noble reformers well knew that great evils existed in the Northern states, and although condemning wrong and sympathizing with all movements to elevate the race, yet slavery was the greatest curse, and the voice of the enslaved appealed most strongly to their sense of justice. He speaks of human beings burnt to death in tenement houses, theaters, etc. These facts are horrible. But do they affect one as though these people were confined in these places and roasted alive by some religious or scientific society? Deliberate torture and accidental suffering and death are vastly different things. That argument could hav been used in the days of the Inquisition with just as much reason. Why worry about people being burnt at the stake and tortured on the rack when there are so many suffering from other causes? Try to reform other evils and let the Inquisitors alone, for are they not laboring in the cause of religion? It is the same old sophistry, with merely a change of name and victims—science now, instead of religion, and helpless animals instead of human beings. But the principle is the same. A crime is no less a crime because committed in the name of science. It is no evidence of the righteousness of an act because the motiv which prompted it was good. There can be no doubt that Calvin when he burnt Servetus was prompted by what he regarded as a good motiv, and the majority of the people of those times agreed with him that it was their duty to save the souls of the people from hell by giving to the stake and torture those who were teaching doctrins which they regarded as false and misleading.

The legislatures, you say, very properly accept the testimony of medical experts on the subject of vivisection. Ought the world to hav taken the evidence of the slaveholder and Inquisitor as to the right and necessity of bondage and bigotry, regardless of the appeals of their hapless victims?

Much that is now reverenced as science, medical science especially, will as human beings progress in knowledge be found fallacious. The science of this age is not infallible. We should be careful about accepting all that is claimed for it. There is a vast field for the medical profession to explore, but as a rule it is utterly ignored by the profession. Why do they not investigate the faculty of clairvoyance and the laws of magnetic treatment—those powers which enable a person who never received any medical education whatever to examin, to explain the use and condition of every organ of the human body, that enable them to diagnose and successfully treat and cure diseases that hav baffled the skill of regular physicians with all their medical science? If the medical profession are ignorant of these things it is time they were informed, for they are facts, and can be proved by thousands and thousands of witnesses.

When these laws are thoroughly understood and utilized in the treatment of disease the system of torture that has for years been inflicted upon mankind as well as animals will be at an end, and a natural, rational, and humane medical science will take its place. All this will doubtless sound visionary to many, but it is the truth, as time will prove.

I hav no excuses to offer for cruelties of sport, as it is called nor the vanity which prompts some persons to wear the dead and mutilated forms of animals and birds as decorations. These are harbarous instincts which the mass of human beings inherit from a savage ancestry, but the law of evolution which governs the moral as well as the physical nature of the human race will ultimately eliminate these brutal habits and instincts from mankind.

In the mean time all that can be done to prevent the cruelty and abuse of animals, all that can be done to alleviate the mental and physical suffering of humanity, it is our duty to do. Every living creature possesses certain inalienable rights which every human being is under moral obligation to respect. The law of justice demands this. Whosoever violates that law must surely suffer the penalty.

The practice of vivisection should be investigated; if everything is all right and as it should be no harm will ensue, but if the terrible state of things exist of which we are told, either in this or any other country, it should receive the attention and protest of the civilized world. Vivisection without the use of anesthetics or some other means to make the animals unconscious and insensible to pain is a crime which nothing can justify. MRS. MATTIE C. MITCHELL.

Fashionable Charity.

There is not a county in the United States where collections are not raised for foreign missions. In every county there are paupers, and in almost every one there are "poorhouses" or "county infirmaries," where poor or insane need looking after and special attentions. Although many of these public almshouses are well conducted, there are vast numbers of them in which terrible abuses are practiced. So far as we can learn, in no case do these church people who contribute to foreign missions ever think it necessary for them to look after the condition of the unfortunate inmates of these places. Annually millions of dollars are expended by them on foreign missions, not a penny on the poor of these establishments. "The law looks after these," is the cold, heartless remark and excuse. Would it not be better to devote some of the money and attention now expended on foreign missions towards caring for and ameliorating the hard condition of our home poor? The very fact that the churches keep a watch upon the institutions referred to would do much to prevent abuses that will rise from the selfishness and greed of men. I make these remarks in no fault-finding spirit, in the hope that they will attract attention in some quarters and result in good. I am never asked to contribute to a missionary cause, but I regret that a part at least of this money thus given does not go towards caring for our home poor. Fashionable charity is very liberal toward invisible objects.

Children's Corner.

Edited by MISS SUSAN H. WIXON, Fall River, Mass., to whom all Communications for this Corner should be sent.

"His life is long whose work is well,
And be his station low or high,
He who the most good works can tell,
Lives longest though he soonest die."

An Angel's Visit Explained.

"Mamma said: 'Little one, go and see
If grandmother's ready to come to tea.'
I knew I mustn't disturb her, so
I stepped as gently along, tiptoe,
And stood a moment to take a peep—
And there was grandmother fast asleep.

"I knew it was time for her to awake,
I thought I'd giv her a little shake,
Or tap at her door, or softly call;
But I hadn't the heart for that at all—
She looked so sweet and so quiet there,
Lying back in her high arm-chair,
With her dear white hair, and a little smile
That means she's loving you all the while.

"I didn't make a speck of noise;
I knew she was dreaming of little boys
And girls who lived with her long ago.
And then went to heaven—she told me so.

"I went up close, and I didn't speak
One word, but I gave her on her cheek
The softest bit of a little kiss,
Just in a whisper, and then said this:
'Grandmother, dear, it's time for tea.'

"She opened her eyes and looked at me,
And said: 'Why, Pet, I hav just now dreamed
Of a little angel who came and seemed
To kiss me lovingly on my face.'
She pointed right at the very place!

"I never told her 'twas only me;
I took her hand, and we went to tea."—Selected.

Cousin John's Philosophy; or, It Might Hav Been Worse.

"How did it happen?" And an amused smile played on the features of Carrie Howard's cousin John. Carrie was his ward and lived in his house and under his guardianship, her parents being dead. "You look like a little mud turtle," he remarked, as he turned her about and lifted her dripping ringlets. "Only a little while ago you appeared before me in starched white muslin and beautiful red ribbons, and now, here you are, all spattered with clots of muddy water, and your ribbons draggled and defaced. Why, Carrie! But there, there, don't cry; I dare say you couldn't help it."

"Indeed I couldn't, Cousin John," she sobbed. "You know I started for Eva's lawn party, and I just stopped for a minute or two by the pool at the foot of the rock, to see a frog jump into the water. He splashed it as he jumped, and I turned quickly to avoid its getting on my dress, and, in turning, I stubbed my toe, or something, my foot gave a twist, and over I went into the pool—oh dear! oh dear!"

"In company with the frog, eh! A pretty couple you were, I must say.

Miss Carrie and the frog,
Both sat upon a log,
One jumped into the mud,
With a dull splash and thud;
The other, lank and thin,
Just went and tumbled in."

"Oh, don't make rhymes, Cousin John, and please don't laugh. It is too bad! O—o—I can't help crying!"

"But there's no use in boo-hooing like that, my dear."

"Don't you—see—I—can't go to the par-r-ty, now?"

"Oh, yes, you can. Wash your face, wipe up your eyes, put on another dress, and go on. This affair might hav been worse."

"I havn't another clean white dress, and how could this trouble be worse, I should like to know?"

"Why, you might hav been drowned!"

"Drowned in a mud puddle!"

"Well, then, you might hav sprained your ankle; that would hav been worse, surely. But come now, get on that pretty pink Mother Hubbard dress, and run along to the party."

"O Cousin John, you are so easy about everything. You never get ruffled, as I do."

"Ruffles were not intended for men, only for girls and little misses that fall into mud puddles! But come, come, you will be very late to the party unless you hurry."

Carrie soon reappeared in a clean dress, fresh ribbons, and a clean face, and was even prettier than before.

Awhile after, when the woods were beginning to don their autumn garb, and in spots were all aflame and aglow with scarlet, russet, and gold, Carrie went with some companions to gather the lovely leaves and red berries.

Oh, such a gay time as she had! and such a basketful of bright-hued leaves, such masses of maple, sumach, and elder! such sprays of green cedar and "creeping Jenny!" such bits of dark green mosses, with their tiny blossoms! such bright, red berries, such glossy wintergreen, with its blood-red plums! such great bunches of mock golden rod and "life everlasting" all in flower! such mullein leaves and dried grasses, as she gathered in the fields that adjoined the woods! "Oh, how kind is nature!" she thought, "to make so much beauty to adorn the dying year!"

But in a few days following she ceased to sing the praises of the wood, as she made her appearance with a swollen face and one eye closed entirely.

"What's the matter with you?" inquired Cousin John.

"O dear, I don't know. My face burns and itches terribly."

"Poisoned, evidently. I noticed you had some dogwood and ivy with your leaves the other day. But never mind, it might hav been worse."

"Oh, how can you say that, Cousin John? I don't see how it could hav been worse, anyway?"

"Why, my dear, both eyes might hav been closed up tightly. Whereas now you hav one good eye with which to observe the difference between dogwood and sumach. Had you studied your botany a little more you would hav been aware of the difference. I will get you a wash for that face, however, for it detracts, I must confess, considerably from your good looks, and does not tend to make you over and above agreeable."

Lying on the lounge that afternoon bathing her face, Carrie spoke up suddenly:

"Cousin John!"

"Well, my dear."

"How did you come to take everything so easily? Were you born with just that even disposition that can find some good in everything?"

"Well, no. I suppose not. I remember the time when I was fractious and—"

"Cross?"

"Yes, and cross; but, gradually, I learned there was no use in repining and fretting, that being cross and peevish did not help matters one bit."

"And then?"

"Then I reformed."

"Did you drink intoxicating liquors, Cousin John?"

"Oh no; but other people can reform, you know, besides drunkards.

"I resolved to make the best of that which could not be helped, and to think that however bad matters were, they might hav been worse. Being fretful helps nobody, makes yourself unhappy, and others miserable. Cheerfulness is a very desirable quality, and, if we do not possess it by nature, it is well to cultivate it to the greatest extent possible. Do you not think so, my dear?"

"Why, yes, Cousin John; but maybe you never met with many misfortunes to make you feel badly."

"Perhaps not, but I hav met with some trials. I invested, a few years ago, two-thirds of my property in what I supposed was a good paying investment; but it yielded no profit, and finally the concern failed, and I lost all."

"You felt awfully then, didn't you?"

"Well, rather badly for awhile, but I thought it might hav been worse."

"O Cousin John!"

"Yes, for I might hav lost my health. I didn't, and I reckon a man's health is wealth. I was well, and I went to work again. Then, you remember when I was burnt out—our place at Alwell? Everything was consumed in that fire, so that I had not even a pair of shoes to put on my feet, and it was winter weather too. And no insurance on the property; think of that—a total loss."

"And how did you bear that, cousin?"

"I thought it seemed rather hard, but then it might hav been worse."

"I don't see how it could, cousin, in that case."

"Why, don't you see that I might hav been burnt myself? That would hav been worse, sure; so I was thankful that I escaped with my life."

"But everyone cannot feel so in times of trouble, Cousin John."

"No, I suppose not, every clover cannot bear four leaves, but the three-leaved clover is not to be despised. Everybody can cultivate a cheerful disposition, and it will soon come quite natural to the one who really tries to obtain the treasure. Now you try and see what you can do. And in all days of trial and trouble, just think that it might hav been worse, and your burden will instantly begin to be lighter and easier to carry."

Liberty and Morality. A capital full lecture on these important subjects. By W. S. BELL. A pamphlet of thirty-six well-printed pages mailed for 15 cents.

Superstition in All Ages. By JOHN MESLIER, a Roman Catholic priest, who, after a pastorate of thirty years at Etrepigny and But in Champagne, France, wholly abjured religious dogmas, and left as his last will and testament to his parishioners, and to the world, the work entitled "Common Sense." Price, cloth, $1.50; paper, $1.

Marriage and Parentage and The Sanitary and Physical Laws. For The Production of Children of Finer Health and Ability. By a Physician and Sanitarian. "The virtues of men and women as well as their vices may descend to their children." Price, $1.

The Bible—Whence and What? By RICHARD B. WESTBROOK, D.D., LL.B. The questions, Where did the books of the Bible come from? What is their authority? and, What is the real source of dogmatic theology? are treated fearlessly in the light of history, philosophy, and comparativ religions. It is impossible to giv even a condensed statement of what is itself a marvelous condensation. Whole libraries are here concentrated into one little book. Printed in good type and bound in cloth. Price, $1.

The Bible of the Religion of Science. By H. S. BROWN, M.D. "This volume is most respectfully dedicated to those persons who will cordially unite with others to establish the religion of truth and a just government, by the scientific methods of reason, experience, experiments, and observations. For this is the way to wisdom, and to the material, mental, moral, social, and spiritual sciences, that make peace on earth and good will among men." Price, $1.50.

WHAT'S TO BE DONE?

BY

TCHERNYCHEWSKY,

The Great Russian Writer, now Exiled in Siberia.

This remarkable novel, now translated into English for the first time, will appear serially, beginning May 17th, in the fortnightly anarchistic journal,

LIBERTY,

Which, suspended since last December, will appear again May 17th, and fortnightly thereafter, enlarged from four to eight pages. "What's to Be Done?" was written in the cell of a St. Petersburg prison more than twenty years ago and is the last work that the author ever wrote, as he was immediately afterwards exiled to Siberia by the Czar Alexander II., where he is still kept by Alexander III., in obscurity and desolation, his mind and body shattered, despite the petition for his freedom sent lately to the czar by the International Literary Congress held at Vienna. The book is an absorbing, charming, and artistic work of fiction, treating the vital questions of love and marriage from a radical Nihilistic standpoint.

Poetry.

My Religion.

We are lingering by the water-side,
All ready to be ferried o'er;
We wait the serving of the tide
To leave for aye this dusky shore.
'Tis night. Beneath yon spangled blue
A thousand fairy forms unseen,
Too subtilized for mortal view,
Are dancing on the village green.
The brook that wanders through the vale,
The flowers that spring in yonder dell
To listening ears unfold their tale.
The fairies know their language well.
The beauteous rose in full array,
Hath much of heaven in its bloom,
And, like a guide-post by the way,
Points to our home beyond the tomb.
The waves that rush before the blast,
And thunder on yon pebbly shore,
Tell us of other days long past,
Of loving friends we see no more.
Our passions hushed, and without fear
Of aught below or aught above,
Angelic beings hovering near
Imbue us with celestial love.
'Tis not a duty, but a boon,
Which makes immortal pleasures sure.
Sun-light reflected by the moon,
The glorious privilege to be pure.
All cheerful thought is light ahead,
Presaging what shall come at last;
All gloomy thought, remorse, and dread
Are but the debris of the past.
And soon, alas! the bigot flies
From inner light to tales of yore;
A savage faith his loss supplies,
Those angel whispers come no more.
We spurn the lies those pages tell
Of devils black, with hoof and horn,
A canting heaven, a burning hell,
Of sour, dyspeptic stomach born.
No slaves are we to tyrant Gods,
No vassals of another's will;
We bow beneath no chastening rods,
But trust in fate and fear no ill.
Lo! Asia's millions yield their breath
Where meager famin ever lowers;
A God whose creatures starve to death
Can never be a God of ours.
We harbor no sectarian trash
Which Christian seers hav said or sung,
We crouch before no scorpion lash
Of Jesus Christ or Brigham Young.
All natural change is upward flight,
And death the conqueror of despair.
Whate'er our crime, whate'er our plight,
A better world awaits us there.
Through death's dark vale with lofty trust
We march to brighter realms afar.
We leave our failings with our dust,
As from and of the dust they are.
For love is life, and life is love,
And love includeth every bliss;
And happiest in the world above
Are those who were the best in this.

Book Notices.

DYNAMIC SOCIOLOGY. By Lester F. Ward. 2 vols., 8vo. Price $5. For sale at this office.

When France produced Auguste Comte she reached her highest point in the production of humanity, both her best thought and her most unselfish feeling, these two by good fortune being united in the same person. England in producing Herbert Spencer may be said to hav done her best work in the same line. There is no disparagement of what others hav done in thus saying that, all things considered, these two hav done the best, and are the truest representativs, in those countries, of high intellectual development. But America, also, is contributing to scientific thought, and her best production thus far is Mr. Lester F. Ward with his new science of Dynamic Sociology. He, like the other two, is an original thinker, and a summer-up of the results of scientific progress. His work is as yet but little known, and this placing of him in the same list with Comte and Spencer will seem to many people a foolish overestimate. A thorough and careful reading of his book, however, by anyone who can himself think and judge of thought, will confirm what is here said of him. He is not so uniformly solid and free from fault as Mr. Spencer, perhaps, but, on the other hand, he is not so limited by any prepossessions; he is more free, more bold, and consequently has made a farther advance.

Dynamic Sociology, or the Science of Human Progress, which is Mr. Ward's more especial department, is relativly a new science, and in taking it up he has gone into a new field, one apparently considered of little importance by previous thinkers, but which he has found rich in the treasures of knowledge. Static Sociology, or the science of social order, polity, or organization, had been treated by Comte and Spencer; but the dynamic branch has by English scientists been neglected under the impression, as it would seem, that the advancement of society was brought about through natural agencies only, natural selection being the chief influence in determining its intelligence, character, and welfare. Mr. Spencer, in particular, has virtually discountenanced the idea that societies could do much, if anything, for their own progress, the general result of legislation having been so unfortunate, in the absence of sociological knowledge on the part of legislators, as to hav rendered him hopeless of any good by that means. But here is just where Mr Ward disagrees with him, though without being at all disposed to justify or excuse ignorant legislation. As all other sciences, including Social Statics, hav their applied phase, and are made useful to man only by application, so he believes there is a science of Social Dynamics that has applicability, and that by its application, after sufficient knowledge of it has been acquired, the same good effects will appear that hav followed the application of other scientific knowledge. As applied sciences thus become useful arts, so this, when developed and wisely applied, will become a true art of securing social advancement and well being. As natural selection and other natural influences hav brought the individual man from the ignorant, helpless, and miserable condition of the savage up to a degree of intelligence and moral regard, where he becomes free to take control of himself and his circumstances, reacting upon his environment for his own good, so society will by the same natural agencies be raised to a point where it will become conscious of itself and its powers, and by scientific knowledge and use of its forces will be able artificially to make itself what it should be in order to secure the highest well-being of its members, and its own safe perpetuity. In short, society like the individual, will learn how to liv, develop itself, and be happy.

The progress through natural influences is termed by Ward the genetic progress. That which is to come about by design, by artificial method, by intelligent use of means, is called teleological as the most appropriate name, the final cause of it being in society itself. This mode of operation will be characterized by invention, and by the indirect use of contrivances to effect desired results, precisely as in the application of mechanical or other science of a lower order than sociology.

His book is itself an instance of the indirect method. Knowing the necessity of an acquaintance with the prior sciences to a comprehension of sociology, he proceeds to giv an outline of what is known regarding Cosmogeny, Biogeny, Psychogeny, Anthropogeny, and Sociogeny. It amounts to an excellent resume of all the most important scientific results and conclusions; all of which go toward convincing the reader of the need of some different teaching from what we now hav.

When he comes to Dynamic Sociology proper, he lays down a scheme like this, though not wholly in the same words.

Happiness is the ultimate end of all effort.

Progress is the direct means to happiness.

Dynamic action—intelligent, inventiv, or indirect action—is the direct means to progress.

Dynamic opinion—correct views of the relation of man to the universe—is the direct means to dynamic action.

Knowledge—acquaintance with the environment—(scientific) is the direct means to dynamic opinion.

Education—the universal distribution of extant scientific information—is the direct means to knowledge. It is thus the most indirect means to happiness. But it is the initial means to the whole series, and whatever secures education secures knowledge, dynamic opinion and action, progress, and happiness. Hence the propriety of bending all social effort to the securing of universal scientific education, as the most effectiv method for obtaining whatever else may be desirable.

The succeeding chapters are devoted to the above six subjects, the discussion being critical, systematic, and suggestiv, and having the effect to show the extreme faultiness if not uselessness of traditional ideas.

Let us here say that we know of no existing book so well worth reading for what it contains as incidental to its ultimate purpose. The chapter on Biogeny presents a new and striking theory of the origin of life; that on Psychogeny does the same in regard to mind. Anthropogeny givs a full explanation of all man's characteristics without resorting to any but natural causes. Sociogeny analyzes the social forces, and shows the genesis of the more important social institutions, with their defects as at present existing. The author's view of man and nature is profound and clear; his statement of the scientific doctrins concerning the will is a model of lucid explanation. The criticism of ethics and morality is remarkable for its originality and boldness, while the doctrin of the connection between morality and intelligence is new and especially valuable. There is plain speaking, though with scientific coolness, upon industry, trade, government, religion, marriage, and conventionality. A multitude of subjects are touched upon, and the book is as full of original thought as an egg is of nutriment. Its vigor is refreshing. Its author stands in the extreme van of the scientific column. He sees with fully-opened eyes and a broad outlook the dangers and difficulties that beset civilization, and threaten in spite of all the progress yet made to again plunge us into anarchy, subversion, and medieval darkness. He sees no less clearly what society requires to secure its permanence and continue its development to the perfect stage. What this is is pointed out in his last two chapters, those on Knowledge and Education.

The first of these, along with other matter, givs an analysis of knowledge into its different kinds, and the tests by which its comparativ value may be known. The masses of the people are shown to be capable of receiving and understanding much more than they ever possessed. The bad results from unequal possession of it are strongly impressed, and the superlativ need that whatever scientific knowledge we hav should be distributed to the whole population.

But the true genius of the author is seen in his conception of education. This, the initial process, is the functional center for the whole work of social improvement. Yet education has been going on for centuries, without any such marked good effect as it ought to hav, and even sometimes with a bad one. He shows why. He considers the whole subject, and exposes the defects of all present systems. The true secret of strengthening the intellect, and the real cause of brain injury by overwork are brought out in plain relief. The necessity of instruction by the state, as the only way of making education impartial, and communicating it to every human being as a matter of justice, is powerfully enforced. Many other things of importance are crowded into this and the preceding chapter. They are exceedingly rich in thought.

Finally the author brings forward his plan, the peculiarity of which consists mainly in the matter of instruction, the kind of knowledge that is to be imparted. And this is scientific knowledge in its best form, the most general and the most practical truths it has to offer, those which giv the widest comprehension of the universe, including man, and the simplest explanation of all things, along with those of greatest practical value in all the concerns of life. All that is most ennobling and most useful among the treasures of science he would hav conferred upon every child in the nation. To this he would add whatever training in special science might be required to fit the grown-up man or woman for any special occupation to be chosen. He offers the abstract outline of a curriculum, and has fully met the difficulty first to be thought of, that ordinary minds will not be able to take in general, abstract, or comprehensiv ideas.

It is hardly conceivable that any one who has faith in science can read this book with a full grasp of its meaning, and not be convinced that it furnishes the true key to all permanent social improvement; that the initial means is really that through which all the machinery of society is to be operated upon to its greatest advantage—its highest ultimate good. No educator, no statesman, no moralist, no thinker of any kind, can afford to miss the reading of such a work as this. No other one book can be put beside it as its equal in practical value for the present time and the American people. It is the completest outgrowth of the democratic spirit, and proposes the most reliable mode of proceeding to establish democracy and equality firmly and forever on this continent. A better gift to his country could not be made by a patriotic scientist.

Of course Mr. Ward has a sufficient number of faults, and his estimate of religion especially may be fairly open to adverse criticism. But we need not take up this task; it will be well enough done by those who hav a natural antagonism to scientific doctrins. J. L. P.

WE are in receipt from the author, Col. John Kelso, of California, of copies of two of his works, published by the Truth Seeker Company, New York. The largest, containing about 450 pages, is entitled, "Deity Analyzed; in Six Lectures." It is one of the most radical "Freethought" publications that has come under our observation. Col. Kelso is as careless of giving offense, when he combats what he considers error, as Col. Ingersoll; and he writes with remarkable force and energy. Like the great Infidel orator, he resorts to ridicule as well as arguments to convince, but never lacks for facts to down the opposition. We giv the following quotation as an illustration of his style:

"Of necessity the creator must hav had an existence before the creation. But for how long a time? If for a finite period only, then, of necessity, he himself had only a finite existence; and by going back beyond that finite period, we hav space and duration existing without any God at all, unless we assume that there was an older God than the creator. If, on the other hand, the creator existed at an infinit distance in duration beyond the point at which the creation is assumed to hav taken place, then, of necessity, the period which lay between himself and the creativ power was absolutely incapable of ever having an end, or of ever growing any less."

It is difficult to evade the Colonel's conclusions, assuming his premises to be true, and we do not see how the premises are to be evaded, if we recognize a creator of the universe. In a similarly forcible and logical manner he combats the doctrin of atonement and other Christian dogmas. The last two hundred pages are taken up with a humorous piece of rhyme, in which the author's powers of sarcasm are freely displayed, entitled "The Devil's Defense." It assumes that Old Nick is arraigned for "high crimes and misdemeanors," but is allowed to make his own defense, in which he shows from the record that he isn't such a bad fellow after all.

The other book is in pamphlet form, and is entitled "The Real Blasphemers." We havn't the space to giv anything like a synopsis of the contents of these four lectures; suffice it to say that, taking Webster's definition as the standard, not the Infidel but the clergy are the real blasphemers. He supports his position by liberal quotations from both the Old and New Testaments.

If Christians wish to be fortified against the queries of their opponents, they should by all means read Col. Kelso's books, because he is one of the most radical Infidels of the age, and if his arguments can be answered, and his foundation knocked from under him, the privates in the skeptical ranks can be easily routed.

The prices of these books are, respectivly, $1.50 and 50 cents, and can be obtained by addressing THE TRUTH SEEKER, 33 Clinton Place, New York city.—Sunday Gazetteer, Dennison, Texas.

Obituary.

DIED, at her residence in Colen township, St. Joseph Co., Mich., on Monday evening, April 21, 1884, Mrs. Elizabeth Schoch Thurston, aged twenty-seven years and seven months, wife of A. H. Thurston, of Burr Oak Liberal League, No. 167.

Mrs. Thurston was, from her childhood to the time of her marriage in November, 1875, reared and brought up amid church influence and surroundings, but, like so many of the lovers of humanity, reason, and common sense who hav outgrown the errors taught them in early life, she too had discarded all myths and fables of superstition and stood boldly and proudly out upon the platform of nature and reality, and opposed to myths and ideality. She was a member of the Liberal League, and was buried in strict accordance with her views as they had often been expressed by her in life. A brother of the bereaved husband, Mr. S. K. Thurston, officiated, and pronounced one of the grandest and most beautiful discourses ever heard in this vicinity. Most truly was she one of whom it can be said, "None knew her but to love her." Always cheerful and pleasant, a kind word and smiling countenance for all she met, she made of home a heaven bright and happy, around which gleamed perpetual sunshine and joy. She leaves a little boy four years of age, an infant son, a bereaved and heart-broken companion, and a host of sorrowing friends and relativs. Long will it be before the wound which so sorely aflicts to-day will be healed.

"She liveth long who liveth well,
And, be her station low or high,
She who the most kind words doth leave
Livs longest though she soonest die."

M. P. THURSTON.

D. M. BENNETT'S LAST WORK.

A TRUTH SEEKER

Around the World.

FOUR LARGE VOLUMES.

With a steel plate engraving of the author in Vol. I. and each volume illustrated with forty-seven cuts.

BY D. M. BENNETT,

Late editor of THE TRUTH SEEKER, author of "A Truth Seeker in Europe," "Gods and Religions of Ancient and Modern Times," "The World's Sages, Thinkers, and Reformers," "Champions of the Church," etc., etc.

Handsomely bound in red cloth, $6.50; in leather, red edges, $9.50; in morocco, gilt edges, $10.50.

Readers of THE TRUTH SEEKER know the circumstances under which this work was written. The last words penned by the great author were for the fourth volume which was nearly completed at his death, and which will now contain an account of his world-lamented death and burial. Mr. Bennett was a very patient and faithful chronicler of the habits and customs of the different peoples of the many places he visited. The every-day life of all nations is laid before the reader by one who has visited them and beheld them with his own eyes. Particular attention is paid to the progress of Freethought in the various countries he visited, and the morality of so-called pagan nations is contrasted with the morality of Christian countries, much to the detriment of the latter The work is a

Freethinker's History of the World.

This work and "A TRUTH SEEKER IN EUROPE" should be in every Liberal's library Besides its intrinsic worth it is a memento of one of the greatest Freethinkers the world has known—of one who ranks with Voltaire and Paine in the force and clearness of his writings.

TESTIMONIALS:

Read the following testimonials, and be convinced our claims are correct in every particular and that your ailments can be eradicated without the aid of MEDICIN. THESE APPLIANCES ARE THE ACME OF PERFECTION:

Remarkable Cure of Paralysis in One Week.

CINCINNATI, Dec. 19, 1882.

DR. L. TENNEY—Dear Sir: As I feel greatly indebted to you for the benefit I hav received from your treatment, and the use of your Magnetic appliances, I can say without hesitation to those afflicted as I hav been that the effect was simply marvelous. Two weeks ago I was stricken with paralysis in my right arm and could not use it at all, but after wearing a suit of your MAGNETIC CLOTHING for one week, can use it quite as well as ever. I hav also been troubled with Dyspepsia and Kidney Complaint for a number of years, from which I hav suffered intensely, and, although doctoring all the time, never found but temporary relief. Since putting on your appliances I hav experienced great benefit, and if I improve as rapidly as I hav in the past two weeks, will soon be well. I would, therefore, recommend to those suffering as I hav your Magnetic appliances as the only means of effecting a sure cure. Yours respectfully,

WM. H. CLEMMER,
No. 80 Eastern avenue.

Remember that the same appliances which will effect a cure in a case of Paralysis will at the same time eradicate CATARRH or DYSPEPSIA in the same patient. We do not, like the Old School Physician, change medicins every day until, after dosing the patient almost to death, he may possibly strike something (if he is very skilful) that brings relief for the time being.

Neuralgia of the Heart of Six Years Standing Cured in Three Weeks.

SHULLSBURG, WIS., Dec. 11, 1882.

DR. L. TENNEY—Dear Sir: After wearing one of your MAGNETIC VESTS for about three weeks, I was entirely cured of Neuralgia of the Heart and Side, which had been a source of misery to me for the last six years. I had tried numerous remedies before without benefit, but as soon as I put on the MAGNETIC VEST I got relief instantly. With unbounded gratitude, I remain

Yours respectfully,
H. A. BROWN.

Ladies, read the following testimony from a lady who had been under drug treatment for eight years with nervous prostration and female weakness:

OSBORN, O., Dec. 15, 1882.

DR. L. TENNEY: Your letter just received; also the Clothing on Tuesday last. Fitted perfectly. FELT BETTER FROM THE FIRST HOUR I HAD THEM ON. Am not joking, and if I improve as rapidly as I hav since Tuesday, will soon be well. Will report again soon. Respectfully yours, E. J. K.

This lady reports herself entirely cured in less than six weeks after putting on the garments, and, although in bed, unable to get out, when applied, she nevertheless was able to ride twenty miles in two days after the application. The lady's name can be had upon application at this office, by anyone desiring to communicate with her.

Ladies, read the following testimony from a lady who had been suffering for two years with an Ovarian Tumor, and who had been told that nothing but the knife would save her life, and the chances were as 9 to 1 against recovery. In four months' time she is perfectly well, and has not taken a dose of medicin since putting on the appliances. Consult us when your physician tells you he can do nothinog for you; it will pay you.

SHULLSBURG, WIS., November 19, 1882.

DR. L. TENNEY, Dear Sir: About two years ago my health began to fail me; I became nervous, lost all desire for food, and, in fact, began to fail rapidly, so that I became alarmed and consulted several physicians of St. Louis, at which place I was then stopping, all of whom declared that I had an Ovarian Tumor, and that the only thing that would save my life would be the knife. About six months ago I grew rapidly worse, and had about made up my mind to take the only course that seemed left to me, and submit to an operation, when my attention was called to the Eureka Magnetic Appliances. As a drowning man will catch at a straw, so did I catch at this faint hope of a cure. Four months ago I purchased a suit of your appliances. From the very first I felt invigorated, the tumor, which had extended entirely across my abdomen, began to decrease, my pains became less from day to day, until now I am as well as I ever was in my life. Since putting on the appliances I hav not taken a single dose of medicin. My bowels, which before were constipated, are now regular. I would therefore cheerfully recommend them to anyone suffering as I hav, believing that they will do all and more than you claim for them. I remain,

Gratefully yours, MRS. MARY J. STEWART.

Remember that these appliances are not worn next the skin, but over the under-garment, and, unlike all other appliances in the market, they impart no shocks and leaves no sores.

Every magnet is put through a particular process, and hav raised five times their own weight six months after being magnetized, while not a single appliance in the market will attract the smallest particle of iron, the majority of such worthless appliances having so-called magnets made of material no better than hoop-iron, and not capable of retaining magnetism for a moment. All of our garments are made from the very best material for the purpose, and will outlast any and all other garments now before the public. Every magnet is arranged in the garments upon scientific principles, and not haphazard as in all the others. We offer you therefore

The Only Scientific Magnetic Appliance Ever Constructed.

Gems of Thought.

REMEMBER that falsehood always aggravates a fault and makes it more heinous in the eyes of all good people. One who always speaks the truth is deserving of great honor. Always bear in mind that you hav but yourselvs and each other to depend upon, and that you cannot expect aid from supernatural sources, and that you hav no friend above the clouds who will come to your aid when you fail to help yourselvs.—D. M. Bennett.

WE speak of the veil of the future, and wish we could pull up a corner, at least, and look beyond and see what is coming, and yet no supernatural prescience of the future is given to man, and, I believe, never has been given to him. There is only one way of forecasting that which is to come, and that is precisely the way in which we forecast what is to be the future of a seed. If I take a flower in my hand with the bud unopened I can prophesy, the conditions being what they ought, what the flower will be. . . .

. If I know your characters and what your secret hopes and plans of life are, what you are thinking about and what you are planning for, and know something of what human life and experience hav been in the past, I can prophesy into what that kind of soul will develop when it comes to fruitage. But beyond this, which is the purely scientific position in the light of special laws and regular development of particular effects from particular causes, there is no prophecy and there cannot be. The future is dumb. It must still be to all of us a cloud into which we enter seeing only the first step that we take.—M. J. Savage.

IF you can look into the seeds of time,
And say which seeds will grow and which will not,
Speak then to me, who neither beg nor fear
Your favors nor your hate.

—Shakspere's Macbeth.

EVERYTHING harmonizes with me which is harmonious to thee, O Universe! Nothing for me is too early or too late which is in due time for thee. Everything is fruit to me which thy seasons bring. O Nature! from thee are all things, in thee are all things, to thee all things return. The past says, Dear city of Cecrops; and wilt not thou say, Dear city of Zeus?—Antoninus.

THE soul moves about with us, the same as our hands and feet. It belongs to the body. No man ever had a soul or mind until his brain was formed, and when his brain goes his mind cannot remain, because it is simply a quality of his body the same as any other function. If a man's mind existed before his body our mode of reasoning would be wrong; but as it has no existence until after the formation of the body or in connection with it, we conclude that our reason is physiologically right, and that Christians and Spiritualists are in error in talking of "disembodied" souls.—Boston Investigator.

"ARE there any marks of distributiv justice in the world?" If you can answer in the affirmativ, I conclude that, since justice here exerts itself, it is satisfied. If you reply in the negativ, I conclude that you hav then no reason to ascribe justice, in our sense of the word, to the gods. If you hold a medium between affirmation and negation by saying that the justice of the gods at present exerts itself in part, but not in its full extent, I answer that you hav no reason to giv it any particular extent, but only so far as you see it at present exert itself.—Hume's Providence and Future State.

AT the battle of Zutphen Sir Philip Sidney, after having two horses slain under him, was shot in the thigh. He was a mile from the camp, and was obliged to limp in that way to his tent. On reaching the tent, exhausted with the loss of blood, he feebly called for water. It was procured with some difficulty and brought to him. As he was about to put the flagon to his mouth his eye fell upon a poor common soldier lying wounded a few yards off upon the ground, whose piteous eyes were turned toward the refreshing draught. Sidney forgot his own agony, put the cup down untouched, and said: "Giv the water to him; his necessities are greater than mine." Fourteen days after that Sir Philip Sidney died, in the flower of his life, but leaving behind him a name that for inherent gentlemanliness, for manliness, for courage, and delicacy, and self-denial will liv as long as the word gentleman preserves its significance. —O. B. Frothingham's American Gentleman.

THE love and admiration which Sir Philip Sidney won from his contemporaries was mainly a tribute to the singular beauty of his character. His short life was illustrated by no brilliant achievement; and his literary genius, though true and exquisit in its kind, would scarcely of itself hav sufficed to account for the fervor of respect he inspired. But the purity and nobility of his nature and the winning courtesies in which its gentle magnanimity expressed itself took captiv all hearts whilst he lived and hav ever since kept sweet his memory. "Sublimely mild, a spirit without spot," he livs in the history of his country as a rare and distinguished type of English character in which the antique hero of chivalry is seen shading into the graces of the modern gentleman.—Chambers's Encyclopedia.

IN two or three passages Paul makes a marked distinction between what he delivers as his own opinion and what he speaks by authority: "The Lord says, not I;" "I, not the Lord:" "This I giv by permission, not commandment," etc. Here Dr. Arnold infers that we are to consider Paul as speaking from inspiration wherever he does not warn us that "he speaks as a man." But, unfortunately for this argument, the apostle expressly declares himself to be speaking "by the word of the Lord" in at least one case where he is manifestly and admittedly in error, viz., in 1 Thes. iv, 15.—Greg's Creed of Christendom.

A GOOD conscience fears no witnesses, but a guilty conscience is solicitous even in solitude. If we do nothing but what is honest, let all the world know it; but if otherwise, what does it signify to hav nobody else know it, so long as I know it myself? Miserable is he who slights that witness.—Seneca.

A PETITION FOR STATE SECULARIZATION.

To the Honorable Senators and Members of the House of Representatives of the United States Congress:

A republican form of government being based on liberty, equality, and fraternity, as both means and end, involves the separation of Church and State, whose union is the worst form of class-legislation and the most infallible sign of arbitrary power. A house divided against itself cannot stand. The institutions of this Commonwealth should be made homogeneous throughout. Impartial protection of all citizens in their equal rights and liberties, by encouraging the free movement of mind, promotes the establishment of truth in whatever direction. Any infringement by government of this absolute equality of its citizens is the parent of manifold evil, a national crime committed against that natural "justice" which, as the Constitution declares, this government was founded to "establish."

And yet, though the first amendment to the Constitution of the United States says, "Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion or prohibiting the free exercise thereof," there does exist a union of Church and State, which gives to Christianity moral and material aid, and so proscribes other religions and forms of belief and unbelief, while taxing these also for the support of that special religion.

The ways in which this old alliance between Church and State still survives among us are:

1. Recognition of God and Christianity in State Constitutions.
2. Exemption of Church property from taxation.
3. Appropriations of public money for sectarian purposes.
4. Religious exercises, as the reading of the Bible, etc., in the public schools.
5. Laws enforcing the observance of the Sabbath on the authority of the Bible.
6. Religious test-oaths in courts of justice and on instalment into office.
7. Chaplaincies in the Legislature, the Army, and the Navy.
8. Fast and Thanksgiving Proclamations, which contain theological ideas that may or may not be acceptable to the citizen.

The necessity for this separation of Church and State is more apparent now than ever before, because of the still greater diversity of religious beliefs, the many forms of dissent from the religion which receives State patronage, and the growing signs of sectarian strife and ambition in the arena of politics. And emphasis needs to be given to the fact that the union of Church and State is a great hindrance to the employment of right methods in dealing with many questions of reform now demanding attention. And most essential is it at all times, and especially in the present, in order to secure for the law its due respect and observance, that the people's representatives should exhibit the strictest fidelity to their trusts by following the law in its letter and spirit.

Your petitioners, therefore, pray that immediate action be taken by the law-making power to bring into harmony the theory and practice of our government in making the following principle a part of the fundamental law of the land by amendment to the United States Constitution:

The total separation of Church and State, by prohibiting Congress or any State, County, Municipality, or Township from enacting any law that favors religion in any of the eight ways specified, or in any other way, or prohibits the free exercise thereof.

Odds and Ends.

OF two women, choose the one that will hav you.

A CONSERVATIV is a man who will not look at the new moon out of respect for that "ancient institution," the old one.

TEACHER to a small boy: "What does the proverb say about those who liv in glass houses?" Boy: "Pull down the blind."

A NEW YORK clergyman speaks of raffles at church fairs as "the devil's kindling wood." His satanic majesty should not want for fuel.

"MY husband is vicar of St. Boniface—but I don't attend his church." "Indeed! How is that?" "The fact is, I—I don't approve of married clergymen!"

SOME men never lose their presence of mind. A Milwaukee man threw his mother-in-law out of a window in the fifth story of a burning building, and carried a feather-bed down stairs in his arms.

A RHYME OF THE RAIL.

He came on the car with a stumpy cigar,
He speaks with a curious drawl;
She close to him clings, decked with diamonds and rings,
With a puppy-dog wrapped in a shawl.

I hear her repeat, as she flops in a seat,
And playfully toys with his toes,
"Oh, dear little pet! Does I love oo? Oo bet!"
Then she kisses its dirty pug-nose.

The passengers grin as it licks her fair chin;
Her lover sits wistfully by,
And wishes his face in the puppy dog's place,
As he heaves a disconsolate sigh.

He throws up the sash, and quick as a flash,
The puppy-dog lifts his red nose—
It springs to its feet, and leaps from the seat,
And away through that window it goes.

A scream of affright; a disconsolate sight;
A beautiful woman in woe;
Who moans with regret, for her puppy-dog pet
That is left in the river below.

Two lovers that glide o'er the rail, side by side,
The tears are all dry on her face;
His stumpy cigar he has thrown from the car—
He has taken the puppy-dog's place.

A PREACHER not far from Boston found himself at one time in a sad dilemma. He stopped in his sermon and said: "If I speak softly those of you who are in the rear cannot hear me; if I speak loud I shall certainly wake up those who are close to me."

THAT was a sharp minister who stopped in the middle of his sermon and sang a hymn and then explained himself by saying: "If the members of the choir are to do the talking, they certainly will permit me to do the singing." It is said that it was so still in the neighborhood of the choir after that, that the sexton was sent with a search warrant to find the members to sing the last hymn.

AGRICULTURAL.

We'll graft the lobster on the hop,
The oyster bed we'll gayly weed,
The cranberry jelly tree we'll flop,
And save the macaroni seed.

The best root sugar we will get
By tapping of the hickory-tree,
Horse chestnuts in the spring we'll set,
That in the autumn colts will be.

We'll prune the climbing sorghum vine,
We'll dig the ruta baga pear,
The clam shall with the pea entwine,
And both shall, mingling, blossom there.

The Berkshire goat its wool shall shed,
The Bantam cow shall feed on hay,
We'll milk the ducks, all thoroughbred,
That steal the eggs the squirrels lay.

A SCOTCH minister was somewhat given to exaggeration in the pulpit, and wished the clerk, the next time he did it, to giv a cough by way of a hint. Soon after he was describing Samson's tying the foxes' tails together. He said, "The foxes in those days were much larger than ours, and had teels twenty fut long." "Ahem!" came from the clerk's desk. "That is," continued the preacher, "according to their measurement; but according to ours they were only fifteen fut long!" "Ahem!" louder than before. "But as you may think this extravagant, we'll just say that they were ten fut long." "Ahem! ahem!" still more vigorous than ever. The parson leaned over the pulpit, and shaking his finger at the clerk, said: "You may cough there all night, mon; I'll nae tak' off a single fut more. Would ye hae the foxes wi' no teels at all?"

THE WEDDING OF THE POETS.

She.—
In rhythmical frenzy I shiver
On quicksands of soulful suspense,
And watch the rhapsodical river
From my tear-fetching seat on the fence.
Should the thunderbolts lunch on my lifelight
I'll fling thee a basket of stars
That thy brow may effulge in a bright white
Like diadems ripped out of Mars.

He.—
If the gods of all gushing should mate us,
Ere the lip-tingling laughter has fled,
Couldst thou sling in the salt saleratus
And quiver the dough into bread?
Could'st thou blush in the face of a blizzard,
Or sigh o'er a cyclone let loose?
Could'st thou tear from the turkey his gizzard
And quench the last quack of a goose?

She.—
Now pillowed on fern-leaf, the curfew
I hear with my small coral ears;
Methinks that it brings back a beef-stew
From the deep-buried blank of dead years.
Then clutch me a fistful of moonbeams
And wind them around your fair bride,
That the night-hawks may not hear my muse-screams
And dream that to thunder they're tied.

He.—That settles it, we will die together.

Notes and Clippings.

JOHN SWINTON alleges that the monopolists of Fall River are "black-hearted orthodox Christians." Mr. Swinton is probably correct.

A petition, signed by Florence Nightingale, Mrs. Kendal, and many other ladies, has been sent to the English House of Commons asking for the passage of laws for the enfranchisment of women.

THE Duke of Marlborough offers to sell twelve pictures, including the Raphael and Rubens pictures of the "holy family," to the English government. The price asked is $2,000,000.

"You hav heard of the man," said Spurgeon to his congregation the other day, "who diminished his dose of food every day to see on how little he could liv, till he came to half a biscuit and then died; but, I tell you, most of you hav tried on how little religion you could liv, and many of you hav got to the half biscuit dose."

A COLLEGE POINT, L. I., clergyman wants the town authorities to suppress ball playing on Sunday, because his Sunday-school scholars desert the church for the ball-field. Perverse generation, to prefer the grass, and trees, and sunshine, and healthy amusement to a gloomy, ill-aired church, and lessons on total depravity and a sulphurous hereafter!

COLONEL INGERSOLL, who is an intimate friend and admirer of Joe Jefferson, has just been presented by him with two landscape monotypes. They are printed from etched copper plates, and Mr. Jefferson is an adept at producing them. Besides being a genius in the dramatic way, and in the cultivation of sugar cane, Mr. Jefferson is an excellent artist in oil and other lines of art.

THE Rev. Dr. Wright, a distinguished A.M. of Trinity College, Dublin, has created some sensation by an article in which he says that many of the fellows of that university do not believe in divine revelation or the existence of a personal God. Several are, at the best, Agnostics, if not Atheists. There is no way for disciplining either a fellow or professor for erroneous views, and so it is a propaganda of skepticism.—Sun.

MR. RUGG, the colored gentleman who figured prominently in several recent Long Island tragedies, and who is under an engagement with the sheriff to appear shortly at a necktie party, says he trusts in God and hopes to get a new trial. At the same time, two artists visited him and made a plaster cast of his head for exhibition. This leaves room, remarks Life, for doubts whether true greatness is a gift or an achievement.

FROM a French state paper, lately brought to light, it appears that in 1770 the following Parliamentary decree was solemnly passed and duly registered under King Louis XV.: "Whosoever, by means of red or white paint, perfumes, essences, artificial teeth, false hair, cotton, wool, iron corsets, hoops, shoes with high heels, or false hips, shall seek to entice into the bands of marriage any male subject of his majesty, shall be prosecuted for witchcraft, and declared incapable of matrimony."

"GOOD Monday mornin' to ye, Mrs. O'Raherty." "Good mornin', Mrs. O'Flaherty." "I see they tooked up a collection fur the orphants in St. Stephen's church yisterday." "Arrah, God bless thim. An' was Mrs. Malone there wid her little orphant Martin?" "Faith an' I dun know; but I hears that there wus but two little orphant byes on exhibition, an' aich wun of 'em wus led around by the hand through the aisles of the church by its father, who done the collectin', you see."—Kentucky State Journal.

ON Newton's refusal to allow Henry George to occupy his pulpit the Brooklyn Eagle remarks: "All doubt of Mr. Newton's orthodoxy and acquiescence in the powers that be must now be considered at an end. He is not likely to be found in the army of martyrs, but rather in the safe company of the honest Vicar of Bray. His subscription to the Thirty-nine Articles is undoubtedly sincere, especially to the ones that would silence Freethought with the proposition that 'they are not to be heard.'"

THE Independent narrates a sad case, in which it has been appealed to for advice An old clergyman, now a helpless cripple and poor, who cannot walk, stand, dress or undress without help, some years ago lent money to a poor student of one of our largest New England colleges to help him through his course, giving a note signed by the student and a near relativ. The student died, and three years later the relativ paid the interest for three years and a part of the principal, and since then refuses to pay a cent more. He is an eminent Christian in his town, and for many years has professed entire sanctification.

THE past week has proved a disastrous one, says the Mercury, for Parson Newman's congregation. Trustee Grant has been conspicuous as a partner in the colossal Wall street swindle of the day. Deacon Sage is sadly encompassed about by the ungodly, who swear that they hav been taken in by his puts and calls. And finally Judge Sedgwick has decided that the good pastor is only the stated supply of his church and not the settled pastor. If Dr. Newman has been investing in Grant & Ward contracts, as is rumored, his congregation will do a kindly deed by dropping their pocketbooks into the collection baskets.

A NEW YORK grocer said, "Three cents," when he handed a bundle of kindling to a little girl. As the little girl dropped the pennies into his hand he said to a bystander: "That's the largest bundle of kindling in the market. It measures just 190 cubic inches. Wood is cheap in New York, isn't it?" "About how cheap by the cord?" "A cord contains 421,184 cubic inches. So there must be 1,164 bundles to the cord. At three cents a bundle the price is just $34,92 for a cord. Good hemlock like this costs as much as $4 a cord up the country, but wood-dealers, and railroads, and grocerymen hav got to hav a margin to liv on, you know."

THE number of periodicals issued in New York city alone is 625, and that is just the number of periodicals of all sorts published in the czar's empire, from the Baltic to the Pacific, from the Northern Sea down to Turkey and Persia. For the 50,000,000 souls in the United States, there are 12,660 periodicals. For the 101,000,000 souls in Russia there are 625 periodicals. It takes only 4,000 persons in republican America to support one periodical; it takes more than forty times as many of his autocratic majesty's subjects to support a periodical. These solid facts plainly show what a republic means, and what an absolute monarchy means, so far as the press is concerned.

HENRY LABOUCHERE presents these figures for the consideration of English taxpayers: "Our interference in Egypt has cost us in round figures £5,000,000. This invested in consols would giv £150,000 per annum. At one penny per meal this sum would enable 86,666 children to hav a meal on 300 days of each year forever. The royal family costs, all told, about £1,000,000 per annum. This would giv a meal to 600,000 children on 300 days of the year. Heaven forbid that I should say that it would be better that 600,000 children should hav a good meal every day that they attend school than that we should enjoy the blessings of royalty. I am not so lost to all sense of the fitness of things as even to suggest such a heresy. I merely state a statistical fact."

DRAW poker has a great hold on some people. It is their ruling passion—a passion so strong that conversion cannot stand before it. One night this week four Sunday-school teachers and exemplary church-members met together in a certain house on —— street. After comparing experiences and discussing the best methods of instructing the youth how to shoot, one of the brothers proposed a game of religious and sanctified draw poker. It is a very fascinating and strictly moral game. The brethren played all night. Each card has an appropriate Bible text printed upon it. Brother R—— was badly broken up on a flush of "Come unto Me's," and Brother M—— won $3 on a pair of "Seek Me Earlies." Pious poker is destined to be a very fashionable game in Sunday-school circles.—Winnipeg Siftings.

A STRANGE story comes from Paris by way of the National Reformer. A lady, who was an enrolled member of a Freethought Society, died, and was buried civilly. Her husband had cut on her tombstone a heartsease and the word "libre," thus—as the name of the flower is French with the word "thought"—gracefully marking his wife's views. This lady, Mme. Chandelier, left six children, four of them being Freethinkers, and two of them Catholics. The two latter brought an action to compel the father to erase the emblem and the word from their mother's tomb, and succeeded in gaining their point. It seems rather hard that the feelings of two Christians should be accounted more sacred than those of the husband and wife and four children, who were all Freethinkers.

IN the Methodist General Conference now in session, a resolution has been offered severely censuring Sunday newspapers. What are the brethren really aiming at? Is it the reading of news on Sunday? If so, why are the few ministers who do not read the Sunday papers so willing to get the news by word of mouth on Sunday? Do they believe that if the people could not get secular papers on Sunday they would take more interest in the contents of the religious weeklies? Men and women will read the church papers if they like them; if they do not, no lack of other reading matter will force them to peruse what the religious press provides. Is their protest directed against Sunday labor? Nearly all the work for a Sunday paper is done on Saturday night; it is the Monday paper that is made on Sunday. Do not the majority of city preachers ride to their churches in horse cars, which compel man and beast to work? Do they not require good Sunday dinners over which servants must work? Is not the cream for their breakfast coffee taken from milk brought to the city by Sunday morning trains and delivered at the ministers' houses by milkmen who are thus obliged to do as much work on Sunday as on any other day? Unless there are reasons that do not appear on the surface, the protest against the Sunday newspaper is merely a relic of Puritan bigotry.—Herald.

ON the abolition of oaths the American Law Review observes: "The difficulty which surrounds the question lies in the fact that bigotry and intolerance hav excluded from the witness-stand a great many honorable and conscientious men, in whose minds an oath, as administered, amounts to no more than a declaration that the witness will tell the truth; and thereby the cause of justice is deprived of their testimony, and they themselvs are denied the privilege of vindicating their rights by their own testimony, which privilege is accorded to the most superstitious and dishonest believer who is willing to take an oath. Take, for instance, such a state of the law as exists in Pennsylvania, unless it has been recently appealed. A judge in Philadelphia adopted a rule of excluding a witness on the ground of a want of religious belief, which rule would exclude a judge of long service on the Federal bench, whom we happen to know, and admit to the witness-stand the most ignorant and depraved negro that can be found on the deck of a Mississippi steamboat. When Garibaldi died, and his red shirt was taken off, there were found upon his body the scars of thirteen wounds, everyone of which had been received in fighting battles for the rights of man. The laws of England, of Canada, and of Pennsylvania would hav excluded that man from the witness-stand, and would, at the same time, hav admitted to the witness-stand the most depraved scoundrel that had ever been turned out of a penitentiary. Such laws are a reproach to the age in which we liv."

News of the Week.

PRINCE BISMARCK has retired from the presidency of the Prussian cabinet.

NEW YORK Truth, the penny daily, has just been sold to satisfy its creditors.

J. NELSON POOLEY, of Dayton, Ky., lost his speech from excessiv use of liquor.

A COLOSSAL bronze statue of Martin Luther was unveiled at Washington on the 21st.

THE Prince of Wales is in Paris, closely guarded, as it is expected that he is followed by Fenians.

THE Presbyterian General Assembly adopted a resolution denouncing Sunday papers and Sunday trains.

A SPARROW has built a nest in the left hand of the bronze statue of Daniel Webster in Central Park, New York.

THE failure of Grant & Ward in Wall street was followed by several other suspensions, but quiet has since been restored.

SIR JOHN LUBBOCK, the scientist, aged fifty years, has just married Miss Fox Pitt, who is described as young and beautiful.

CHARLES READE, the novelist, died worth $500,000. He did not make it all by writing, but was engaged in various profitable speculations.

U. S. PAYMASTER WHIPPLE was attacked by road agents near Fort Buford, Dak., on the 16th. The mules attached to the ambulance ran away and saved the treasure.

THREE-CARD-MONTE sharpers of Springfield, Mass., swindled Oliver Utley out of $2,000 last Friday. Utley is a rich farmer, seventy-three years of age, living at Southwick.

A BUST of Wendell Phillips by Joseph Millmore is to be presented to the Metropolitan Museum in Central Park, New York, to be placed by the side of Charles Sumner.

GEN. BUTLER recently addressed the Senate Committee on Education and Labor in favor of government employees receiving extra pay for work performed in excess of eight hours a day.

CHARLES O'CONNOR died on the 12th, aged 80 years. He was a lawyer and a pro-slavery advocate, and at many of the Catholic churches last Sunday prayers were requested for the repose of his soul.

THE Rev. Nathan Hubbell, of the Hedding Methodist church of this city, denounces divorce as practical polygamy, and wishes the question of a United States divorce law to be made a plank in some political platform.

THE injunction against Parson Newman, restraining him from acting as pastor of the Madison avenue church, is continued. This will not prevent his extending spiritual consolation to Gen. Grant in that gentleman's hour of trouble.

THE Metropolitan Bank of this city followed suit of the Marine Bank and suspended payment. George I. Seney, the philanthropist who has given so many hundreds of thousands of dollars for charitable and so-called religious purposes, was president of the bank.

HENRY SCHNEIDER, of Cleveland, Ohio, put his hand into his chicken coop several days ago, when a big rooster pecked at it, causing blood to flow. The hand swelled, the swelling spread over the entire body, and at last accounts Mr. Schneider's death was hourly expected.

WHILE a Mormon elder was waiting at the depot at Water Valley, Miss., last Saturday, for several other elders he was assaulted by unknown persons, who emptied a bucket of tar upon his head. He made his escape. It is reported from Calhoun and other counties that the Mormons are making great headway, and these elders were on their way to a great revival meeting to be held fifteen miles from Water Valley.

CHAPTER XXXI.

PRIDE AND LOVE.

Peace is over the land—the white blossoms—the beautiful winds of summer—the blue and the gold. Joy is in a million hearts.

The bloom and the perfume of roses overflow the air. The senses are intoxicated. The sun pours its golden shafts, and the green earth claps its hands with joyous exultation. Yet the passionate human heart is not at rest. It surges still in discord and in harmony.

In a quaintly furnished room brilliant with medieval and modern art, a vivid mingling of the old and the new, the grotesque and graceful, making a soft and enchanting picture, fascinating in its contrasts, Amy and Harry met in stormy and inevitable struggle—the proud and loving woman—the wayward and loving man.

"I waited for you for years," said Amy. "You never came. What woman can forgive such neglect? It pierces; it destroys."

"I was weak and foolish," cried Harry. "I was but a child."

"I grant it, and I was weak too. I have grown to be a woman since, and I have learned that weakness is almost a crime."

"It is a crime, and I despise myself. But the future is before me."

"I know not what that future may be. I cannot trust it. Alas, alas! what is love without faith?"

"Have you no faith in me, not even like a grain of mustard seed, that I may make it grow and be strong?"

"Ah, faith must be supreme when a woman surrenders. She commits herself to no mere guess. It must be an absolute conviction."

"You despise me?"

"I do not. I honor, I respect, but I cannot forget the long long years I waited. They have burned into my soul."

"I have changed."

"Perhaps so, but like the sea, to flow in light, and then in desolation again. Love wants not the sea, but the granit—the immovable."

"Is there no hope?"

"I can give no hope, for I cannot answer for my heart from hour to hour. I am in a whirlwind of doubt."

"Give me a chance to redeem myself."

"Impossible, for I cannot surrender. Only by my surrender can the greatness of your love be proved. I cannot give the condition, therefore I must forever doubt."

"Cruel woman!"

"I am not cruel. I am simply a woman. I have a woman's heart. Love is all in all to us. It is the star of our life, and it must be perfect or it must be nothing. It is our joy or it is our agony; our heaven or hell. O Harry, I could have loved you so—have loved you so! and now I cannot—I cannot!"

Harry sank to her very feet.

"O my queen! I beg of you, I pray you have mercy."

"I will have mercy. I will die for you if need be. But mercy is not love. I wish it were; I could then take you to my very heart."

"You bid me then despair; to have no hope?"

"I am helpless even as you are helpless. It is not my will, it is my feeling that dictates. If my reason only decided, I would cry, Come to my arms; but my instinct is stronger than my reason, and it bids you go. It is simply overwhelming. It is the law of love."

"Strange law, because you love me you bid me go."

"Yes, for love is linked with pride. That is its strength, its honor, and its glory. True love goes not with passion only, but with reverence. The conscience of love is based in pride. It cannot yield to desire. It must flow in honor, in worship, or it becomes darkness and not light."

"Have I no claims?"

"None, for you have deserted them long years past by. We must begin anew, and follow our separate paths."

"Without hope?"

"Without hope, for love seems to me dead and buried, and only a miracle can bring it to glowing life again."

"All things are possible to love."

"Outwardly yes, when love is harmonious within. How fruitfully then it goes forth, the sovereign of the universe, and weaves the brightest things; but if in itself discordant, it must be an eternal wreck. Its very power only makes it more impotent."

"You are like the sphinx, beautiful and terrible. You tempt me to destruction. I cannot solve your riddle."

"Nor I, nor any man or woman. It is beyond reason. It is of the heart. The mind only is a candle; the heart is an ocean boundless and immeasurable. The light dances upon it, but cannot change it. It rolls on from infinite deeps."

Harry did not understand this woman's heart. He thought that all he had to do was to bow at Amy's feet, to say that he was sorry, to sue for forgiveness, and all would be as bright as a summer's cloudless heaven. He had much to learn of a woman's illimitable soul, of its depth, of its hight, of its capacity for pride as well as for sacrifice, for that which makes woman so infinitely sacrificing is that also which makes her infinitely proud. The humility of her devotion is but the reverse of the sovereignty of her desire. She bends, but she will rule even in her bending, and will wear the crown while kissing the feet of her king. Woman is a bundle of contradictions, and in the realm of love she is as variable as the winds of summer, and yet she is obedient to a subtile and supreme law. Her contradictions flow to wondrous concord when the secret of her marvelous passion is touched; but when the order of her being is violated, and the careless mind of man finds not its essential fountain of affection, then woman is a puzzle indeed—a meteor, a will-o'-the-wisp, an iceberg, a thorn—anything but a rose. Fortunate man who catches the grace of woman's love, and avoids its tumultuous reverse. Like a god he then revels in the utmost glory of the universe. All the wisdom, however, of the world cannot make a man thus fortunate. Like a poet to his inspiration, the lover also must be born to this supreme happiness.

Amy was not a toy to be played upon, not a flute or a harp, or a clinging vine. She was an original force, as every true woman is, and acted from her own center. She loved, but she was not a fool in loving. Her intellect was implicated with her wildest emotion; and, more than her intellect, the honor and the integrity of her whole being. The greatest love is always mingled with the greatest pride.

Amy could not yield. She had suffered too much, too deeply, and too long. The slow years had crystallized her pride until it shone in icy glitter above whatever stream of love might be flowing in her innermost nature. She herself could not throw down that barrier. Her instinct was stronger than her will. She could not, without a sort of inward degradation, yield to the passionate appeals of Harry. There was an insulted womanhood. It might forgive, it could not forget. To forget was dishonor.

Harry realized his immense folly; what a miserable creature the world had made of him. It had stripped him of paradise and left him an inward desolation, which no outward rank could make other than a burning hell. What was all that the world could offer compared to this woman's love, so rich, so deep, so powerful, so stimulating, so capable of making every faculty supreme and beneficent. He might have had this ocean, this star, this marvelous music in his life, this perpetual morning, and now the gates were shut against him; the angels glistened, but not for his happiness; the sweet eyes shone, but not to touch his life with glory. He could only see what he had lost—the infinite delight—and over the desert of the world's way he must now travel with no fountains to flow, no flowers to bloom, only an outward splendor that would pierce him with a thousand shafts of disappointment. So much for him who chooses custom to the demands of his essential being.

"Must I go?" said Harry at last, with infinite pain; "must I bid you farewell?"

For a moment Amy covered her face with her hands. Tears streamed from her eyes like glittering stars. Her frame shook with the immeasurable agony of her strife.

"There is a gulf between us," she said. "I cannot cross it. I cannot say come. I must say depart."

"I obey," said Harry. "I will go and bear your image in my heart. Some time, perhaps, this gulf will roll away, and we can clasp hands amid the blending light. I can only work, true to myself, true evermore to my best thought. If the reward comes not I shall at least have the joy of knowing that I have not basely yielded. In my love for you, which over-domes me like the sky, and makes glowing all the horizon of my life, I will achieve something for myself, something for others."

There was silence for awhile. Amy was like impenetrable marble, cold and still, as if helpless in the hands of an o'ermastering fate. Harry took her listless fingers and kissed them tenderly, and turned to go with breaking heart.

He was met by his father, Gen. Bolton, and his factotum, Sandy.

"Why are you here?" he cried. "This is Amy's house."

"Because I knew that you were here," said the elder, "and I wished to see you on important business."

"You can transact that elsewhere."

"Certainly, but it concerns this woman also."

"How? What have you to do with her? She is free from you forever."

"Granted; but not from Sandy, her husband."

"Sandy her husband? This is infamous!"

"Not at all," broke in Sandy. "I married her years ago when she was the slave of Gen. Bolton. I shall insist upon my legal status."

"It is false!" cried Harry. "No such marriage ever took place."

"I can prove it," said Sandy. "And I shall prove it in a court of law. Gen. Bolton has the document, and is a witness. Slave marriages are binding."

"This is astounding," said Harry; "a lie, a fraud, a crime; I shall resist it to the utmost."

"It will be no use," said Gen. Bolton. "She is not your wife, and can't be. She and her daughter belong to Sandy, and to him she must submit. This is the law."

Strange human nature, and strange woman nature, too, the strangest part of it all. The very moment that a woman finds she can't do a thing, that very moment she is bound to do it. The forbidden has for her a wondrous fascination. She will not be compelled. So the very moment it dawned upon Amy's startled and bewildered soul that somehow the meshes of the law were being trained about her, and she was thrust perforce from Harry, she simply resolved that such a thing never should be. Her pride melted at once. The icy barrier vanished, and only the burning streams of love flashed, and her imperial will declared, "This is my husband. All the world cannot separate us." And with a wild leap, with swimming eyes and tumultuous heart, and almost dissolving frame, she sank into the passionate embrace of Harry. Sweet and soft could be heard the wedding-bells in the clinging touch of lip to lip, and the surging of spirit to spirit in impetuous rapture. Once more before all the world heart was joined to heart, stream flowed to stream in infinite fountains of delight.

"She is my wife," cried Harry. "I claim her."

"It's no use," said his father. "Sandy married her on my plantation. I'll swear to it. You might as well surrender."

"Never!" said Harry. "This is too outrageous. Sandy take my wife? Sandy take my child? Is there a law to do this? I will not believe it."

"To-morrow will decide the case," said the general. "Amy is summoned to court with her child."

"We will be there," said Harry. "It is not to be dreamed of that under the Stars and Stripes, the flag of liberty, such a tyranny as this can be upheld."

"Be on hand and you will find out," said the elder, with a sardonic grin, and both he and Sandy with infinite politeness bowed themselves out of the room.

A few precious moments there were for love-making ere the strife began.

"My darling, my darling," said Harry, "my own forever now. The storm drives us together. The earthquake makes us one. Hell has opened at our feet only to make us realize heaven."

From the hights of her womanhood Amy bent low and sweet, infinitely tender, infinitely loving, infinitely beautiful.

"Fate has killed pride. Love is conquered now," she murmured. "My king and my hero, in you is my refuge and my hope."

"Free Rum" and "Free Crime" Exchangeable Terms.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE TRUTH SEEKER, Sir: Few persons familiar with my contributions to THE TRUTH SEEKER will, I think, accuse me of narrow-mindedness or intolerance. Hence I ask from your large body of intelligent subscribers a candid and impartial weighing of the arguments I set forth in this present article, without prejudice from their former or antagonistic views.

I will commence with this incontrovertible axiom: "The good of the one must ever be of lesser importance than the good of the many, and hence must, in justice, ever be subservient to it." To the above axiom might be added another: "All law is, per se, an infringement of the liberty of the individual."

Weighed by the above standards, and in the scales of pure reason, let us see if "the right to get drunk" will stand as "fast colors." It cannot be denied that Liberalism has its extravagant enthusiasts, who are quite as fully off their logical feet as, in the opposit direction, is the Methodist ranter and howler. Extremes meet, and absolutely unrestricted liberty, or Communism, is simply Liberalism run mad. Communism is the return of civilization to barbarism, and the complete overturning of the rights of the pacific many by the mad orgies of the blind and belligerent few.

Most intelligent civil beings admit that civil law, and its enforcement in courts of justice, are absolutely necessary to civilized existence in the present stage of human development. Well and good. It will not suffice, then, to shout "Tyranny! tyranny!" when it is proposed to suppress the sale of spirits, but rather to endeavor to discover, if possible, whether "the greatest good so the greatest number is conserved by their sale, or by their suppression; and also, in case it be adjudged an evil, as to whether said evil is of sufficient importance to render it desirable to take legislativ action in the matter. Few, very few, will claim that the sum of human misery is not enormously augmented by the sale of spirits, and I believe "for the good of the many" that this distribution of "liquid crime" should be forbidden by the law of the land. If the drunkard only injured himself the case would be entirely different, but that is but the beginning of the evil. The vast majority of drinkers are laboring men or mechanics, who, even without drinking, are hardly able—and in many cases absolutely unable—to properly feed and clothe themselvs, their wives and children, let alone education and the gradual bettering of their general condition. What, then, must be the inevitable consequence when liquor is placed within their grasp? One thing only—degradation, want, crime!

I think I clearly demonstrated in my essay entitled, "Destiny; or, The Free Agency of Man," (which was published in THE TRUTH SEEKER of Jan. 5, 1884), the impossibility of "Man's Free Agency," and hence it must be conceded (bearing the non-free agency of man clearly in mind) that no man can resist temptation beyond a certain definit limit, and that it is eminently absurd to claim that "it is a man's own fault if he drinks." This talk is childish nonsense, and should be relegated to the realms of the nursery, where it properly belongs. When more weight is placed in one scale than in the other, the heavier inevitably falls. When more temptation is placed before a man than he possesses strength to withstand, he just as inevitably falls.

Now, millions of men are not possessed of sufficient strength to withstand the temptation of drinking to excess, when the liquor is placed within the reach of their scanty dollars. The consequence is that they squander what is absolutely required to prevent suffering to themselvs and families. Liquor, in excess, unquestionably brutalizes a man, hence another evil is added to the first. The man goes home, reeling, penniless, mad. He beats, kicks, and otherwise abuses (perhaps murders) his helpless and defenseless wife and little children. He eventually becomes a pauper or a criminal, and, after doing much harm, perhaps becomes a permanent curse, burden, and expense to society, and yet you say, "Let him drink," and shout "Tyranny!" when we would protect his defenseless family and ourselvs against his violence. If he "ran amuck" through your street, brandishing a sharp knife, to the imminent peril of your own life, you would say, "Stop him!" Why? Because your life is endangered. But should you not, as a lover of your kind, as a man, prevent him equally from abusing or murdering his unfortunate wife and her innocent babes?

I would advocate, under extremely heavy penalties, including imprisonment, a law forbidding the sale of spirits, except when prescribed by thoroughly reputable and duly authorized physicians, from whom an order for the same should in all cases necessarily be obtained. I think alcohol and alcoholic liquors should still be manufactured, unquestionably, as alcohol has a myriad of uses besides being a beverage, and alcoholic liquors are undoubtedly of great medicinal value in the treatment of numerous diseases. What I object to is the indiscriminate sale of liquors. I would hav them sold under as great, or greater, restrictions as are other poisons, which really work almost infinitly less harm than does liquor. Doubtless under the most stringent law liquor will be drunk, but I believe that fully nine-tenths of the evil wrought by it could be done away with. I would not restrict, but, on the contrary, rather encourage the sale of malt beverages (beer, ale, etc.), as well as light wines, which would soon take the place, to a great extent, of the present "kerosene" and "benzine" whisky, sold over the "five and ten cent bars." In Germany nearly everyone drinks beer, and in France nearly everyone drinks claret. Yet very little drunkenness or crime is caused thereby, as I can attest from residence in those countries. In conclusion, let me add that I am not a teetotaler myself. In France I habitually drank claret, and in Germany beer, and I believe both did me good. I am no fanatic, but a seeker for the light of truth in this, as in all other directions.

I believe that the arguments embodied in this article are sound, and I am willing to oppose them to those of Mr. E. C. Walker—for whom I hav much respect—and others who hold views honestly at variance with my own; and I trust that no friends whom I may hav made by former articles upon other subjects will think less of me for stating the truth as it appears to me with regard to the liquor question.

6 Park Square, Boston, Mass. ELLIOTT PRESTON.

P. S.—It may be objected that a man can spend his money on beer, ale, or wine as easily as for spirits. Such, however, experience in European countries proves is not the practical result. The former beverages do not excite to any such extent as do spirits the desire for continual indulgence; they do not intoxicate anywhere nearly as rapidly as spirits; and the intoxication following their inordinate use is of a comparativly harmless kind, both to the individual and to others with whom he comes in contact while intoxicated.

Let me ask, Why should we draw the line of law in such a way as to allow comparativly "free rum," while at the same time arresting the keepers of opium joints? Rum undoubtedly works annually one hundred times the mischief in the United States that opium does. Is it because of our government's abominable persecution of that most industrious, peaceable, and law-abiding citizen, the Chinaman, that, while pronouncing ex cathedra against the use of opium, it fills our country with rum-besotted beasts called drunkards? If but one of the two, the opium den and the grog shop, must go, by all means let it be the grog shop. I do not wish to be understood as advocating the opium joint, but simply as calling attention to the fact of the very faulty legislation which forbids the lesser but permits the greater of the two evils.

Now a word on another subject. I wish that every subscriber to THE TRUTH SEEKER would make it his or her duty to distribute as widely and wisely as possible each number of the paper after they are through with reading it. I always do, except when the paper contains one of my own articles which I wish to file, and I sincerely hope those who now hav their attention called to the matter will do likewise. The postage required is but one cent per copy. In no way can the advancement of Liberal thought be better conserved than by spreading copies of THE TRUTH SEEKER broadcast throughout the land. If everyone reading this will do as I suggest, without reference to what others do, a great good will be accomplished, and the number of persons who read the paper every week will be doubled, and during the coming year hundreds of new subscribers will probably thereby be obtained. Come, brothers and sisters, all lend a hand for the cause of liberty. E. P.

Jubila, Jubilo, Jubelum!

Isn't it about time this constant wrangle among Liberals and Spiritualists concerning the personality of Jesus Christ and all other gods was settled? There has been enough hair-pulling and hair-splitting, especially among all such as hav escaped the bonds of the Christian iniquity. It is to be expected that a large proportion of Spiritualists should stick to their Jesus and other idols which they hav carried off in their exodus from the Christian church; but that there should be found men (and women too) among Liberal writers whose ideas (with all the means at hand for information) hav not broadened beyond the thought that the Christ of Christianity was a real person of flesh and blood is a matter of surprise.

So, from time to time, we are treated to long, tedious, and unprofitable dissertations on the subject of crucified saviors; a subject which, like the rock of Sisyphus, involves the victim in a never-ending, still-beginning toil.

A number of years ago a mountain labored. The period of gestation was marked by low, portentous rumblings, something like the "Moodus noises" so celebrated here in the Nutmeg state. A book was to be born. Great revelations were to be made, and a great deal kept back which could never be revealed. The day of delivery came. Five hundred copies only! A "great cry and little wool," as the devil said, etc.

> "Greed was brooding and a mouse was born,
> And it was named 'Art Magic.'"

Then came "Isis Unveiled" by Madam Blavatsky, a really interesting and valuable work, yet there remained something back which could not be revealed, probably for the same reason that the authoress of "Art Magic" kept back so much. People with great pretensions always keep back a vast amount of knowledge for the very natural reasons that they can never reveal that which they don't know. At any rate the inference is left upon the mind of the reader of the above-named works that the authoresses had been initiated into some kind of raw-head-and-bloody-bones fraternity, with a throat-cutting, heart-rending ("I will rend the caul of their hearts"), body-slashing, bowel-burning oath.

In the words of Robert Taylor, "He who would be privy to the concealment of anything which concerns another as well as himself to know, is a villain. He who by any sort of ceremonies could be bound by others, or imagin that he had bound himself to keep such a secret, doth write himself a fool."

The key with which to unlock the entire mystery of the crucified gods is to be found to-day inside of every Masonic lodge on the face of the earth, yet Masons themselvs are as ignorant of the possession of that key as ignorance can make men ignorant of anything.

I hav been initiated into three degrees of Freemasonry, in a regularly constituted lodge, and know whereof I speak.

Taylor, in his four lectures on Freemasonry (see "Devil's Pulpit"), brought the entire mystery almost into the light of the present age. Yet, by some strange fatality, the full solution of the riddle escaped his attention; as he failed to note that which it would seem must hav been absolutely self-evident to him in his reflectiv moments.

Rebold, in his "History of Freemasonry in Europe," in a note on "the Hiram of the Freemasons" (he is careful not to say Hiram Abiff), givs his readers a faint view of the same key:

> "O thriftlessness of dream and guess!
> O wisdom which is foolishness;
> Why idly seek from outward things
> The answer inward silence brings?"

It is almost invariably the case that the most puzzling and difficult problems are solved by the simplest means.

Then who were the sixteen crucified saviors? Nobodies. This is fortunate, in view of the fact that they were all gods, for the killing of sixteen would seem to hav nearly exhausted the stock. That may be the reason why there is only one left.

If these sixteen gods, saviors, or what not, were nobodies, then the question arises, What were they? There is but one answer: The personified principle of the highest ideal manhood—the perfection of all human and divine possibilities—the standard of perfection, to which men were symbolically elevated in the initiatory rituals of the mysteries of sixteen different countries.

The grand tragedy of Osiris in the Egyptian mysteries, of Promethus in the Eleusinian, of Atys in the Phrygian, of Mithras in the Persian, of Hiram Abiff in the initiatory ceremonies in the first great college of Builders (Masons) established in Rome 715 years before the Christian era; and finally, to say nothing of the same tragedy in the mysteries of which history givs no account, we hav the grand climax of all human folly in the story of Gethsemane and Calvary.

The whole story is entirely astronomical in its esoteric or hidden sense, and is symbolic of the death and resurrection of the great Astrologue of the ancient skies, in the winter solstice, or sun stop—three days in the grave of the year, and raised the third day. This same astrological character is to be seen in the Old Farmers' Almanac to-day, and it is what givs the prophetic life-lines to every child born into this world, according to the nonsensical vagaries of ancient judicial astrology, of which the modern imitation is a bastard conception.

To elevate a man to the rank and dignity of this god, who ends up his yearly labors on the antumnal cross in the old wine signs, when he sheds his precious blood, which is wine and nothing else, for the benefit of man, the candidate for the high honors of the apotheosis, or deification, was in a theatrical sense slain upon a cross. He was the principal actor in a symbolic tragedy, and the only person in the play that had no knowledge of his part except as it was revealed to him as he went along.

To "die in Christ" and be "raised in Christ" was to be initiated and raised to the rank and dignity of the ideal.

In Masonry, the candidate for the high honor of a Master (or Lord) Mason dies as Hiram Abiff, or, what is better, Abi-Albon, which means "father of the building," the "Great Architect" of the universe.

The reader will now discover that the god was killed every time a candidate for the honors of deification was initiated, and the gods, like the old woman's eels, got used to being skinned. And this reminds me that the first real Taksbury case we hav any account of is referred to in John xix, 23: "Now the coat was without seam, woven from the top throughout." Now, reader, all men were initiated absolutely naked, and what, pray, has a naked man got on but a seamless coat, which is his skin?

But I forbear; the subject is too vast for a simple newspaper article, and with your permission, Mr. Editor, allow me to say: I hav a number of lectures already prepared on the subject of the origin of religious worship. They take in the whole range of the astronomical allegories of the Old and New Testaments, and their parallels in ancient mythology, the virgin idea, and the death and resurrection of the gods; and Freemasonry for the first time will take the witness stand, and be made to swear to what it knows about the hidden things of godliness; and if there are Liberals who are Masons, and object to giving me a hearing, that will be evidence that their Liberalism is but skin deep.

I am open for engagements to lecture before Liberal or Spiritualistic societies, on terms which will be satisfactory. Let the sphinx be dethroned!

Capital's Relation to Labor.

The following is the moral drawn by "F. M. P. C.:" "Labor is capital, as money and property are," on the conclusion of his able article in THE TRUTH SEEKER of May 10th. Now why do so many confuse labor with money, capital, or property, as our friend has just done in the above? Never can the people be made to understand the problem of "labor and capital," the true relation they bear to each other, till we cease confounding labor with money, capital, or property, or something else that may be found claiming priority to labor.

Labor is not capital, but capital is the child of labor, or in other words stored labor; and now call transactions of exchange, trade, commerce, or by any other name that you will, it is, nevertheless, only the exchange of stored labor by labor; and without labor, stored labor or capital has no power to carry on any trade of any kind whatsoever. Thus I trust it can easily be seen that labor not only creates capital or stored labor, but constantly keeps it in exchange.

Right here now is where labor gave birth to money. Labor in making its exchanges found it necessary to create a medium of exchange to meet the differences in exchanges, arising from the many values held on stored labor of exchange. Further than to balance the differences or debt of exchanges, money is powerless. It possesses neither the power of creation nor destruction; and to sustain my assertion I will say I go to the smith and offer him money for an ax to fell some trees, but as he wants bread, the exchange can only be made in wheat, hence my money is powerless; but stored labor combined with labor can accomplish my object, still, it is labor alone that possesses power, as stored labor can only feed labor in carrying out its enterprises.

When you say Capital begot Labor, poor Labor breaks down completely, and sobs under the load of the stigma. But here comes the most trying ordeal, when poor crushed Labor is placed on the same level with money, and now trembling, he awaits to see what possibly may be brought forth next. Perhaps some profound political economist will yet find another aspiring child loudly claiming to be the father of Labor.

RAY D. CHAPMAN.

Editorial Notes.

IN signing the petition for state secularization Liberals should add their addresses, in order that there may be no chance for the church party to cry "irresponsibility," as they would be sure to do should the opportunity present itself.

COMMENTING upon our notorious ex-president's connection with a broken Wall street firm, the Utica Observer ungenerously remarks that "Mr. Hayes will never be charged with having allowed his name to be used by a firm of swindlers. You couldn't get a loan of ten cents on R. B. Hayes's name."

THE authorities of Newark, N. J., are furnishing the Salvationists with free board and lodging. So it seems these itinerants are better off than Christ, who, it will be remembered, complained that the Son of Man had not where to lay his head. A parallel, however, can be drawn between the Newark police and the Roman authorities of Jerusalem.

MR. J. A. RUTHERFORD, of Dowlin, Lamar Co., Texas, was born January 31, 1799. As he is a little proud of his age, he wishes us to say, and also wants other papers to copy, that he will be pleased "to receive a postal-card from every man and woman in the United States born about that time." He wishes to know who, what, and where? He will try to answer.

FRANCES POWER COBBE, "Hon. Sec. and Foundress Victoria Street Society for the Protection of Animals from Vivisection," has appointed Mattie C. Mitchell, our eloquent correspondent from Jackson, the "honorary correspondent from Michigan" of the society. Ernest Von Weber has also written her a letter complimenting her efforts. Elliott Preston is responsible for all this.

IN forwarding notices of his lecturing engagements our jolly friend Bell, who is going up and down the land preaching to all who want to hear him, writes a few commendatory sentences of THE TRUTH SEEKER. "I am," he says, "much pleased with the solid up-to-the-time style of THE TRUTH SEEKER. I think you are improving it all the time. Spencer and Andrews are well worth reading. And the people must come to it sooner or later, that THE TRUTH SEEKER givs them the best mental diet to be had."

AFTER several months' suspension Mr. Benj. R. Tucker's Liberty again appears. It is doubled in size, and will be issued fortnightly. A. P. Kelly is associated with Mr. Tucker in its editing, both gentleman being brilliant professional journalists. We find in the first double issue a criticism upon Mr. Spencer's "Coming Slavery," in which occurs the following: "A very acute criticism of Mr. Spencer's position has been made recently before the Manhattan Liberal Club by Stephen Pearl Andrews. Judging from the report in the New York TRUTH SEEKER, it is the best thing that Mr. Andrews has said in some time, and Liberty extends him her warmest thanks and congratulations. Room must be found for his remarks before long in the these columns. He shows that Mr. Spencer has never once used the word 'justice;' that he is not the radical laissez faire philosopher which he pretends to be; that the only true believers in laissez faire are the Anarchists; that individualism must be supplemented by the doctrins of equity and courtesy; and that, while State Socialism is just as dangerous and tyrannical as Mr. Spencer pictures it, 'there is a higher and nobler form of Socialism which is not only not slavery, but which is our only means of rescue from all sorts and degrees of slavery.' All this is straight to the mark—telling thrusts which Mr. Spencer can never parry."

How "practical" politicians legislate is well illustrated by Mr. Abram Hewitt's new tariff bill. A Washington dispatch to the Sun of the 16th says:

"Mr. Morrison to-day received a letter from H. W. Oliver, Jr., of Pittsburgh, in which, referring to the Hewitt Tariff bill, the writer says: 'The duty on wire is advanced half a cent per pound. The duty on iron rods, in coils or loops, is advanced from six-tenths of a cent to one and two-tenth cents per pound. Steel wire rods, in effect, are made free. Mr. Hewitt, therefore, modifies the duties on metals as follows: First, he increases the duty on wire, of which he is one of the largest manufacturers in the United States, half a cent per pound. Second, he doubles the duty on iron rods, of which he is the largest manufacturer in the country. Third, he places steel rods, of which he is a large consumer, and which he does not manufacture, practically on the free list. With the exception of placing ore and tin plate on the free list, the foregoing are about all the changes Mr. Hewitt makes in the metal schedule. Mr. Oliver suggests that so far as the metal schedule is concerned, the bill might be placed on the private calendar and entitled, 'A bill for the benefit of Cooper, Hewitt & Co.'"

And yet Mr. Hewitt is one of the most patriotic men in Congress.

SECTION 7032 of the Ohio statutes reads:

"Whoever, on the first day of the week, commonly called Sunday, participates in, or exhibits to the public, with or without charge for admittance, in any building, room, ground, garden, or other place in this state, any theatrical or dramatic performance of any kind or description, or equestrian or circus performance of jugglers, acrobats, rope dancing, sparring exhibitions, variety shows, negro minstrelsy, living statuary, ballooning, or any base ball playing, or any ten pins or other games of a similar kind or kinds, or participants in keeping any low or disorderly house of resort, or shall sell, dispose, or giv away any ale, beer, porter, or spirituous liquors in any building appendent or adjacent thereto, where any such show, performance or exhibition is given, or house or place is kept, he or she shall on complaint made within twenty days thereafter be fined in any sum not exceeding $100, or be confined in the county jail, not exceeding six months or both, at the discretion of the court."

Recently the "Exeeutiv Committee of the Cincinnati Evangelical Ministerial Association" called upon the mayor of Cincinnati and asked that the section be enforced. The mayor refused to move, alleging that no jury could be found to convict for "Sabbath" violation. This shows that the people of Cincinnati hav got their eyes open. Whatever is right on Saturday is right on Sunday, and any theatrical performance that is unobjectionable on that night cannot become wrong by the hands of a clock passing a given point.

A MORMON missionary has just been sent to prison in Vienna for preaching his doctrins. Commenting on this fact the Post this morning says: "The Austrian government at least understands how to deal with the Mormon question." Yes, it understands how to do it in the way the Jews delt with Christ and his religion; as the Romans dealt with Ignatius, Polycarp, Justin, and the other early Christian martyrs; as the Spanish Catholics a few centuries since dealt with their Protestant subjects in Spain and the Netherlands; as the Puritans of New England dealt with the unfortunates who happened to hold a different belief from them; as the Russian government, and Austria, too, of to-day permits Jews to be dealt with by its bigoted citizens. That, however, is not the American way of doing things. While we detest polygamy as much, if not more, than the Austrians, we do not believe in throwing a man into prison because he comes into our midst and preaches doctrins we do not agree with. We Americans are not perfect by any means in our spirit of toleration, but we hav, thank providence, a more truly Christian way of dealing with those who differ with us in belief than the Austrians.—Pittsburgh Leader.

We fail to see what grounds the Leader has for claiming toleration to be a Christian virtue. The Post is a Christian paper, yet it applauds the imprisonment of a man who had committed no crime, and only differed with the Austrian government in religious belief. The Leader's memory is also defectiv in historical reminiscences. It forgets the brutal persecutions of the Protestant Sonoy in the Netherlands, the torture inflicted upon the heretics in Geveva, and the infernal treatment of the Catholics in Ireland by the Protestant rulers. Toleration exists among Christians only when they are weak.

PROF. ADLER recently lectured in Chickering Hall, on the past and the future of the Society for Ethical Culture. During the lecture, in which he cited many interesting facts concerning the good work done by the society, the professor suggested that the society should become more republican in its organization. The establishment of a new priesthood was not what was wanted. The members could not approve of keeping up the old relations of priests and people, nor that the cross should be erected to divide these two orders. The priest was, he said, too much of a spiritual teacher, and not enough of an ethical instructor. The society should be divided into various sections, just as the societies for the advancement of science in the United States and England had divided themselvs. The separate sections of such societies met frequently to consider questions connected with their several specialities, and then the whole society came together at stated periods to discuss predetermined questions. He urged the establishment of sections to be known as "The Merchants'," "The Industrial," "The Lawyers'," and "The Mothers'." The members of such sections would best know the crooked paths in their respectiv departments whereby men were seduced from the right, and could therefore best suggest some means for improving public morals. No man could properly be ethical only on Sunday. What was needed more than all was the planting of ethical culture in the down-town offices. When it became known that a member of the ethical society was never guilty of false banking or fraudulent bankruptcy, then, indeed, would the society hav its reward in general appreciation. He thought that there must be among the members, as in the churches, an outer and an inner circle, the one to be composed of the hearers of lectures, and the other of true working members.

PEOPLE passing along Washington street, says a Boston paper, on the evening of Col. Ingersoll's lecture in that city, naturally gathered the idea as they neared the vicinity of the Boston Theater that either a fire was in progress, or a street fight of absorbing interest had just taken place. The stream of humanity which was pouring into the vestibule of the great play-house was insufficient to account for the crowd which had gathered upon both sides of the thoroughfare, blocking the sidewalks and extending out into the street. Investigation showed that the cause of the excitement was a placard printed in large black letters borne by a man who paced conscientiously back and forth just outside the curb-stone in front of the theater entrance. The inscription thereon was after this style:

THE WICKED
SHALL BE TURNED INTO HELL, AND ALL THE NATIONS THAT FORGET GOD.
Psalm ix, 17.

Two men also industriously delivered tracts at the door as long as the supply lasted. It was the occasion of Col. R. G. Ingersoll's lecture on "Orthodoxy," and two opinions prevailed as to the meaning of the tracts and the placard. Some thought that it was mèrely an advertising dodge, the efficacy of which was very apparent, while others asserted that it was a warning sent down by the Young Men's Christian Association. Whatever the purpose of the documents, they certainly did not prevent Mr. Ingersoll from having a tremendous audience. The tickets were at a price which the ordinary lecture attendant would pronounce exorbitant, but, notwithstanding, the great auditorium was packed, even the space railed in for the musicians being taken, and chairs on the stage selling at a premium after the rest of the house was filled. If the Boston people can stand such an insult, certainly Col. Ingersoll has no cause to complain. The solicitude shown by the Y. M. C. A. affords strong proof of the efficacy of his lectures.

THE cowardice and dishonesty of the religious press is generally known, but it has again been shown by the Methodist Christian Advocate, J. M. Buckley editor. Some two years ago, "Chaplain McCabe," chief fugleman of the "Board of Church Extension of the Methodist Episcopal Church," was particularly vehement in his denunciation of Freethinkers. While laboring in the neighborhood of P. B. Reasoner, a stanch Liberal of Adrian, Mich., that gentleman addressed a few plain questions to the valiant author of a "Dream of Ingersollville," touching the Bible and theology, and demanded an answer. Under date of Sept. 16, 1882, Mr. McCabe replied, evading answering the questions, but reeommending Mr. Reasoner to correspond with the editor of the Advocate. The letter reads:

"P. B. REASONER, ESQ., My Dear Sir: Your letter of recent date is before me. I am glad to hear from you. Your questions are reasonable and quite capable of being answered to the satisfaction of anyone sincerely desiring the truth and willing to be convinced. I wish you would write out your questions and send them to Rev. J. M. Buckley, 805 Broadway, New York. He will take great pleasure in replying to them. He has in his paper, the New York Advocate, a question drawer, and he givs time and thought to just such questions as yours. I am, as you may readily believe, the busiest man in the Methodist church. My work takes every moment of my time. For myself, the gospel of Jesus Christ givs me joy unspeakable. You might as well try to convince me there is no light as to try to convince me there is no truth in a gospel that brings pardon and peace to my soul, and lifts for me the curtain of the future and reveals to me my own immortality. God bless you and guide you into all truth. Your questions may not be answered in the paper for some time, owing to the large number always ahead and waiting. But they will be answered in time.

"Yours faithfully, C. C. MCCABE."

Mr. Reasoner then wrote to Mr. Buckley—in fact, he has written him several times, but has received no answer. Again he wrote Mr. McCabe, who again referred him to Buckley, saying:

"I am too busy to discuss matters with you. Please write to Dr. Buckley. I gave him yours about the sons of Saul. Some day he will reply when you least think about it. I wish I could lead you to the truth, which would make you free and giv you rest. God bless you.

"Yours faithfully, C. C. MCCABE."

The Advocate of March 27th, of this year, contained an extract from the Canadian Methodist Magazine, in which a London journal was quoted to the effect of that of twenty former secular lecturers, sixteen had again professed Christianity. We wrote to Buckley, pointing out that in THE TRUTH SEEKER of Oct. 20, 1883, was printed a complete refutation of this preposterous statement, and asked him to tell the truth to his readers. In a day or two Buckley sent one of the assistant editors to this office for a copy of THE TRUTH SEEKER alluded to, which we supplied him gratuitously, though it was nearly the last one on hand, remarking to the gray-haired errand-boy that if Buckley was honest he would print the whole truth about Freethinkers. But not a word has the Advocate contained in retraction of the falsehood, and its thousands of readers are undoubtedly firmly convinced that sixteen leading English Infidels hav joined the church, and will bleat it around their respectiv neighborhoods as a convincing proof of the power of the gospel. After his futil attempts to get answers to his questions, Mr. Reasoner came to the conclusion "that all or nearly all of the Christian clergy are arrant cowards or knaves, or perhaps both," and we are strongly inclined to join him in his opinion.

F. B. LIVEZEY, the interesting crank of Catonsville, Md., professes to be willing to accept the offer of one of our correspondents (printed in THE TRUTH SEEKER of April 26th), and as we now hav the permission of the gentleman to use his name we append the letter in full:

"SQUAW CREEK, IDA. TER., April 6, 1884.

"MR. EDITOR: I received the inclosed [circulars, 'Stake and Gibbet in 1883,' and 'Priest Seaver,'], and not being able to fathom them, inclose the same to you. What kind of an animal is it—bird, beast, or man? If of bird species, is it a bird of paradise, eagle, or vulture, or a fence-bird? If of the beast order, is it hyena, elephant, or lamb? If of the higher grade, is it a Freeman, Guiteau, or a gentleman? When reading his Oregon story, it smelled very bad; also that Infidelity must go, etc. But the conscience of a man who would circulate such stuff (as it looks to me) must be small, or he must hav been born without one; and if one ever sprouted in his body, it never grew to be larger than the little end of nothing whittled down and then ground. I see there are twenty-five silenced men—at least I always took them to be men from reading their writings, for I hav the pleasure of the personal acquaintance of but one—the one smitten in the cheek. Now, if the —well, what is it? (Darwin lies buried in Westminster Abbey—poor man, what enjoyment he may hav lost!) wishes, I will put up two dollars to his one to make his assertion good about Infidel assassins in Oregon, and will giv him one hundred dollars apiece for every Infidel found engaged in any secret plot to persecute any sect or denomination in Oregon. Furthermore, will giv him one hundred dollars for each one found among the twenty-five gentlemen named who uphold such work, for if Infidels are of that class, it is well the world should know it. Perhaps he better purchase Dr. York's poems. There he will find echoes from Infidel hearts from the first to the last verse. See especially p. 70, v. i; p. 71, v. 1; p. 73, v. iii; p. 74, v. ii; p. 75, v. ii and iii; 'Only Waiting,' pp. 76, 77, and 78, especially v. iii, p. 86. How much truth found on pp. 94, 95, 96, and 97 He will learn 'Eternal Justice' on p. 7 (no sleepers). If we knew (p. 18) such literature came from an angel, let him show his wings and warble his voice that we may hear his echoes. For his benefit be it known I hav a share in the memorial to Thomas Paine, and hav had for years; als one in D. M. Bennett's monument; and when others as worthy die, I will, if alive, want the honor of acting in like manner. By the way, if by reading A. Jacobson's book (see paper marked), we can learn to raise spotted calves, why shouldn't E. H. Heywood teach us how to raise unspotted men, so they would not be spotting their fellow-men because they differed on a subject no one knows any more of than my old grandmother did when she told me the spotted calf story?

"Any information through your columns will be thankfully received by me, and perhaps many others. If that fellow is another Guiteau, his friends better put him safely away in Albany.

"Kind regards to yourself and all others who are for justice and right—Christian, Jew, or heathen, for I hav always found a few good Christians, and guess James Vincent found one when he married. A. G. CHURCH."

Now let the Maryland gentleman proceed with his circus.

The Monument Fund.

Four weeks ago the deficiency on the monument was $42.58. Since then donations hav been made as follows:

C. A. Blen,	1 00	D. P. Willcox,	1 00
J. E. Marden,	1 00	W. W. Manderfeld,	70
Dr. J. L. York,	1 00	E. Runnels,	70
C. M. Piper,	55	Mrs. Sarah Clark,	1 00
Nat. Moore,	75	Henry H. Bigelow,	1 00
Franz B. Woelke,	1 00	Wm. Whittick,	70
Leonard Sevalley,	1 00	W. C. Hake,	75
J. T. W.,	25
		Total,	12 40

Leaving still a deficit of $30.18.

The lithograph is being prepared with all possible expedition, and we expect to be able to send it out shortly. Meanwhile orders will be booked for it. The price, it will be remembered, is 30 cents to contributors to the monument; to others, 50 cents.

Lectures and Meetings.

W. S. BELL lectures in Alexandria, Minn., May 25th and 26th; Clear Lake, Wis., May 28th, 29th, and 30th; Arcadia, Wis., June 1st, 2d, and 3d; Nashua, Iowa, June 8th, 9th, and 10th.

THE Wisconsin State Association of Spiritualists will hold a three days' conference meeting in Omro, on June 6th, 7th, and 8th. Judge Holbrook, of Chicago, and Mrs. L. M. Spencer, of Milwaukee, are engaged to speak, and others are expected. Dr. J. C. Phillips is secretary, and intending visitors can learn of reductions made in railroad fares by communicating with him. Reduced hotel rates are advertised.

"SUNDAY, Past, Present, and To Come," is the subject of George Chainey's lecture next Sunday morning at German Masonic Hall, at 11 o'clock. What Sunday has been, almost everybody knows; what it will be, is a very important problem which no doubt Mr. Chainey will discuss with his usual eloquence and skill. Sunday was originally a pagan festival, and it ought in the future to be a Liberal festival. How this will be done our Freethought orator will show, and demonstrate that the future Sunday when observed according to scientific and artistic methods will be of immense service to humanity. It is to be hoped that the Liberals of New York and vicinity will show to what good use they can put the Sunday by coming one and all to this highly interesting and instructiv lecture. It deals with a subject of vital concern to the progress of Liberal ideas and the triumph of secular government. Remember that the seats are free. Come and bring your friends with you, and greet our eloquent advocate with a full house.

The Liberal Club.

It would be unreasonable for the reader to expect as good a report of the 340th meeting of the Manhattan Liberal Club as was given of the 339th, because the last mentioned was reported by a writer of great experience, who has driven the gleaming plowshare of his pen through every field where literary genius is capable of catching on. The present writer confesses, like the editor of the Investigator, to being an amateur.

The hall where the club meets has been furnished with new and elegant chairs, which, while they are not quite as comfortable to sit in as the old ones, are nevertheless a great deal handsomer. Added to this, the janitor, in a passing freak of extravagance, had lighted one or two more burners on the chandeliers than usual, and the scene was quite brilliant. Mr. Sabin Hough was the lecturer of the evening, his subject being "Civil Government." He traced the rise and development of government from its origin in the paternal type to its ultimate, the republic. He believed that this country, considering its youth, was doing very well. But the drift at present was in the wrong direction to insure continued prosperity. A mutually destructiv competition pervading every form of industry, bringing about a survival of the strongest though not the fittest, was the result. Non-producing capitalists on the one hand and tramps on the other were a heavier burden than industry could bear. The one remedy was government ownership and management of the railway and telegraph plant except such portions as bind themselvs to conduct their business as the government may direct. The tariff must also be reduced, and finally swept away entirely. The lecture was able and well written, but not especially enlivening, and a gentleman who sat near Madam Delescluze, dropped asleep early in the evening and snored softly.

Mr. Andrews said the lecture was a good one and remarkably opportune, as the questions involved were now forcing themselvs upon the world more strongly than ever before. The power of wealth was growing more and more aggressiv, and the monied men had a greater power over legislation than legislation had over them. Mr. Hough was mainly correct as far as he went, but failed to go far enough. The remedy will be the development of right men and women. There must be a conspiracy to do good; to take posession of the world and run it in the name of humanity.

Poet Founting was called upon, but his modesty forbade him to respond.

Mr. Hunn answered to his name, and took the platform. He agreed with all that had been said, but he desired to see talk supplemented with action. He held that it was the first duty of those present to vote for Ben Butler, when the Greenbackers nominated him for president. Then they must agitate. Talk wherever you are. "You want to get up here occasionally," said Mr. Hunn, "and make a fool of yourselvs, the same as I do." That might inspire some other individual to do likewise. Anything was better than inaction. He admired the Catholic church because it was so well organized. The Protestant denominations were nothing compared to it, and for them he had great contempt. The Catholic could could say to Ingersoll, "Go on, Robert; you are destroying other church organizations, but you are not hurting us." Hr. Hunn's liveliness was appreciated and encouraged by frequent applause.

Dr. Weeks also admired the organization of the Catholic church, but disapproved of it as an instrument of despotism. The people of this country must learn from their own blunders what is good and what is not good for their welfare. We profit by our mistakes. The bumped nose which we sustained in infancy was the first intimation we received that there was a law of gravitation. By making mistakes we find out what it is necessary to avoid, and learn by contrast what is good for us.

Madam Delescluze requested permission to say a few words, and was received with an amount of enthusiasm which her remarks, being devoted chiefly to an attempt to ridicule Mr. Andrews, served somewhat to put a damper on. After having raised a laugh at the expense of the pantarch, Madam Delescluze divulged the Socialistic scheme for setting things right, which was to force bad people to be good. She would strip the wealthy community naked, and make them go to work before they should eat or wear a garment. This eminently improper suggestion was favorably received by those who did not pause to consider the undignified spectacle that would be presented if the lady's proposition should be carried out.

Professor Vaughan, of Virginia, took the floor in a highly perturbed state of mind. Everything seemed to hav conspired against him. He said first that Liberal organizations were composed of bigots. It is inconceivable that the professor here alluded to the club itself, or even to the Newark Liberal League, of which he is willing to be a member. Then he recounted a visit which he had paid to John Swinton with the praiseworthy intention of instructing that gentleman in the art of running a newspaper. Mr. Swinton had listened to Professor Vaughan, and then remarked: "You are the fifth crank that has called on me to-day. If you will go and bring in the four others I will make over the whole business to you." But this was not the end of Professor Vaughan's troubles. A would-be wit had reported his speeches before the club, and reported a lie. (Perhaps this cannot be denied. The reporter is not responsible, however, for Professor Vaughan's statements.) "I am not so poor," said the speaker, "that I must abuse a man because he don't happen to take my paper." Consoling himself with this reflection, the professor made his customary speech. The long preface which he had inserted made his remarks extend over the ten minute limit, and the chairman's effort to cut it off at the end of that time were futil. This gentleman apparently doesn't know when he is well off. He has in his connubial arrangements solved the trinitarian problem of reducing three to one, and is otherwise an unusual person; but he is not pleased with the attention he has attracted, and his name will therefore be omitted hereafter from these reports.

Mr. Hough in his closing remarks predicted that this government as now administered could not survive the close of the present century.

Dr. Paul Carus speaks upon the subject of "Education and Liberty" at the next meeting.

Waking the Wrong Passenger.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE TRUTH SEEKER, Sir: The following explains itself. The sleuth hounds are ever after the pillars of our liberties, and Edmunds, I think, is their man for president.

OFFICE CHRISTIAN STATESMAN,
1520 CHESTNUT STREET, PHILADELPHIA, PA.

Permit me to mail you a specimen copy of the Christian Statesman, which, I trust, you will carefully examin. The special purpose of the paper is to disseminate and urge the acceptance of the important principles of National Reform, although the character and varied nature of its contents make it especially valuable as a paper for home reading and study. No other journal givs a more thorough and reliable exposition or more brilliantly illustrativ treatment of the International Bible Lessons. The subscription price is $2.00 per year.

JOHN WAGNER PRITCHARD.

ORTONVILLE, MICH., May 1, 1884.

JOHN WAGNER PRITCHARD, Dear Sir: I hav a copy of your Christian Statesman sent me to this place, together with your printed postal card advising me that the central object of the paper is to advocate "National Reform," that is, to Christianize our noble national Constitution and submerge our people in the dark slavery of the old world, to wit, church and state. Those great-souled men, Franklin, Thomas Paine, Washington, Jefferson, Adams, Patrick Henry, and others, perceiving this monster of the old world, took their lives in their hands—defied the tyrants, and gave us secular liberty, and you would destroy it! The very monster the old world is now striving to shake off, you would saddle on to us! You can't do it! The people are becoming too thoroughly enlightened. But should it possibly come in my day, I would fight, for I hav strenuously labored the last thirty-five years against this very idea. I return your paper unopened, and you will please send me no more copies of it. DR. T. S. ANDREWS.

Pious Men.

From the New York Sun.

Mr. George L. Seney, lately the president of the Metropolitan Bank, has given away hundreds of thousands of dollars for religious and philanthropic puposes.

Mr. A. S. Hatch of Fisk & Hatch was conspicuous, not merely as president of the Stock Exchange, but also as an enthusiastic supporter of movements for the moral and religious improvement of his fellowmen. After presiding over the Stock Board during the week he would even do the work of a lay preacher on Sunday in Jerry McAuley's mission. Mr. Hatch was, besides, a liberal pecuniary backer of that and other religious undertakings.

But Mr. Seney, as president of the Metropolitan Bank, imperilled the property of his fellow stockholders and impaired confidence in the security of other banks by his vast speculativ ventures.

Mr. Hatch by his failure brought down also the Newark Savings Institution, and appears to hav used the securities of the institution deposited with his house, in an unwarrantable, if not extremely culpable, way. By so doing he has caused untold anguish among the poor people who had intrusted their savings to the Newark Bank. If the outcasts of Jerry McAuley's mission hav blessed him, the industrious poor of Newark must now curse him with much more heartiness.

Of course the vulgar scoffer will say that all this only proves the men to be religious impostors. But we do not call them so. We do not question their honesty and sincerity. That they both tried to do good for the sake of doing good we hav no doubt. The trouble was that the public assumed that because they were kind-hearted they were necessarily men of unswerving fidelity to a trust, sound business judgment, and firm moral principle.

A man's religious impulses may be good and true, and his enthusiasm for humanity deep and genuin, but his moral principle may be at the same time unsound and weak.

From the World.

The bankruptcy of the gambling bankers and brokers will play havoc with the professional saints and reformers.

President Fish is a member of the Union League Club, and a pious churchman and deacon.

President Seney, who also speculated with the funds of the bank of which he was trustee, is a church-member and a philanthropist who was liberal with the money he made in speculations, probably to satisfy his conscience and his sense of his religious duties.

President Eno, who depleted his bank of the nice little sum of four million dollars, is treasurer of the Civil Service Reform League, member of the Union League Club, and a class-leader in the church.

Ferdinand Ward is a leading light of a Brooklyn Hights church, and a member of the Union League Club.

President Dodd, of the Newark Bank, is a pious church-member, deacon, class-leader, and Sunday-school teacher.

Fisk, the broker, is the brother of the great reformer, Clinton B. Fisk, a member of the Union League Club and a church communicant.

Gen. Grant, the broker, belongs to the Union League Club, and is a member of Parson Newman's church-militant.

O. M. Bogart, the broker, is saintly in his church duties and prominent in the Union League Club.

President Hatch, of the Stock Exchange, is a shining light of the Union League Club, devout in his religious duties, an expert at leading in the hymns, and an exhorter at the Jerry McAuley Mission.

This is a goodly and a godly list. It shows that society and swindling may walk shoulder to shoulder and piety and peculation can go hand in hand.

Acts of Paul and Thecla.

This book is of undoubted antiquity. Tertullian speaks of it as follows:

"But if the writings which wrongly go under Paul's name, claim Thecla's example as a license for woman's teaching and baptizing, let them know that in Asia, a presbyter who composed that writing, as if he were augmenting Paul's fame from his own store, after being convicted and confessing that he had done it from love of Paul, was removed from his office. For how credible would it seem that he who has not permitted a woman (mulier) even to learn with over-boldness, should giv a female (fœmina) the power of teaching and baptizing" (On Baptism, xvi).

The story is, that after Paul's flight from Antioch (in Pisidia?) he went to Iconium. His fellow-travelers were Demas and Ermogenes (2 Tim. i, 15, iv. 10). Barnabas is not mentioned at all. These two fellows pretended to love Paul, and he taught them about the birth and resurrection of Christ.

Onesiphorus, a citizen of Iconium, with his wife and two sons, went out to meet Paul that he might entertain him. Titus (who is not mentioned in Acts unless as Titus Justus, of Corinth) had informed Onesiphorus how Paul looked, which enabled him to identify the apostle on the highway; and the writer describes him as "small in size, bald-headed, bandy-legged, well built (or healthy), with eyebrows meeting, rather long-nosed, full of grace." Paul smiled, and Onesiphorus said: "Hail, O servant of the blessed God!"

Demas and Ermogenes were offended because they also were not saluted; but the good man condescended to invite them to his house to rest themselvs.

There was great joy, bending of knees, and breaking of bread when they all entered the house of Onesiphorus. (See blessing of the same house in 2 Tim. i, 16, and iv, 9.) Paul delivered a discourse commending virginity, retiring from the world, and baptism.

While the apostle was thus preaching in "the church in the house of Onesiphorus," a maiden named Thecla listened to him night and day from her window close by.

Note here "the church in the house of Onesiphorus," as if established before Paul visited Iconium.

Theoclia, the maiden's mother, not being able to induce her daughter to leave the window, sent for her betrothed, named Thamyris, to try his power of persuasion. "For three days and three nights," said the mother, "Thecla does not rise from the window, neither to eat nor to drink." Thamyris went and kissed his beloved one, saying: "Why dost thou sit thus overpowered? Turn to thy Thamyris and be ashamed." The mother and maid-servants wept, but Thecla answered nothing.

Thamyris then went out to learn something about the strange preacher. He met Demas and Ermogenes and promised them money if they would inform him. They spoke disparagingly of Paul. He took the two men into his house and gave them a sumptuous dinner with much wine. They advised him to bring Paul before the governor Castelios on the charge of "persuading the multitudes to embrace the new teaching of the Christians."

The next morning he had Paul arrested and brought before the governor on the charge of "making virgins averse to marriage." Paul being required to answer, said that God had sent him to reclaim men "from corruption and uncleanness, and from all pleasure, and from death, that they may not sin"—that he taught only what had been revealed to him by God, who had sent his own son, who alon e had compassion on a world led astray. The proconsul committed Paul for a further hearing.

At night, Thecla bribed the gate-keeper to let her into the prison, where she sat at Paul's feet to receive religious instruction.

Thamyris missed his beloved, and went to search for her. The gate-keeper's fellow-slaves said she had gone out of the city, but the keeper himself was obliged to admit that she was within the prison.

This being reported to the governor, he ordered the prisoner and the maiden to be brought before him. The crowd cried out against Paul, saying: "He is a magician! away with him!" But the proconsul listened to Paul concerning Christ, and then called a council to try Thecla. "Why dost thou not obey Thamyris," said he, "according to the law of the Iconians?" She gave no answer. "Burn the wicked wretch," cried out the mother.

The governor was greatly moved, and having scourged Paul, and cast him out of the city, he condemned Thecla to be burnt in the midst of the theater.

The crowd attended the spectacle. Thecla "saw the Lord sitting in the likeness of Paul"(!) and said, "As I am unable to endure my lot, Paul has come to see me." Fagots were brought in by virgins, and as Thecla came in naked to be burnt, the governor wept. Making "the sign of the cross," she went up on the pile. The fire blazed, but God in compassion quenched it with a cloud of rain which came near drowning the people.

Paul had found refuge in a new tomb on the road to Daphne (near Antioch in Syria), and Onesiphorus with his family had followed him there. After many days' fasting, the children got very hungry; but the father had no money. So Paul took off his cloak, and sent one of the children with it to buy bread. This procured five loaves and some herbs. On the errand, the child met Thecla astray, and told her that Paul had been distressed about her and praying six days. She hastened to the tomb, where they were all refreshed with the food.

Thecla wanted to cut her hair and follow Paul; but he feared she might be unable to withstand temptation on account of her beauty. But she said: "Only giv me the seal in Christ, and temptation shall not touch me."

The seal of the Holy Spirit is alluded to in 1 Cor. i, 22; Eph. i, 13, and iv, 30. What it was no one now knows, but we shall presently see that it was something material.

Paul said to Thecla: "Wait with patience and thou shalt receive the water." Then he sent Onesiphorus and his family back to Iconium, while he and Thecla proceeded to Antioch (in Syria?). On the way a Syriarch named Alexander met them and tried to bribe Paul to giv her up. The bribe being refused, the man attempted to take her by force. She tore his cloak and pulled off his crown. Then he led her before the governor, who, upon her confession of what she had done, condemned her to the wild beasts.

This judgment aroused the indignation of the women; and one named Tryphena (Rom. xvi, 12), who had lately lost a daughter, was permitted to hav the custody of the maiden preparatory to the exposure to the beasts.

When all was ready Thecla was bound to a lioness. But the animal licked the maiden's feet to the astonishment of the multitude, and the women cried out: "An impious sentence!"

After this failure Tryphena again took Thecla to her home; for her deceased daughter had said to her in a dream: "Take this stranger in my place, that she may pray for me and that I may be transferred to the place of the just."

The next day, in spite of the indignation of the people, and especially of the women, she was brought again into the arena, clothed only with a girdle. Lions and bears were let loose upon her. A fierce lioness ran and lay down at her feet. A bear made for her, but was torn to pieces by the lioness. A trained lion, belonging to the Syriarch, her accuser, then ran upon her, but was killed by the lioness. More wild beasts were sent in. She prayed and then plunging herself in a ditch full of water, said: "In the name of Jesus Christ I am baptized on my last day." The multitude wept, saying: "Do not throw thyself into the water;" and the governor shed tears "because the seals were going to devour such beauty." But she threw herself in, and "the seals having seen thegl are of the fire of lightning, floated about dead. And there was round her, as she was naked, a cloud of fire; so that neither could the wild beasts touch her, nor could she be seen naked."

Her accuser now proposed to try some ferocious bulls that he had. The governor, looking gloomy, said: "Do what thou wilt." So the bulls were brought, and the maiden's feet being bound, red-hot irons were touched to the tender loins of the bulls to make them furious. The animals rushed about, but "the burning flame [of the seals?] consumed the ropes, and she was as if she had not been bound."

Here Tryphena, who was standing by the arena, fainted, and the crowd cried out: "Queen Tryphena is dead." The governor, in dismay, stopped the games, and even Alexander, the accuser, asked for the release of Thecla. "For," said he, "if Cæsar should hear of these things he will speedily destroy the city also along with us, because his kinswoman, Queen Tryphena, had died beside the abaci"—i. e., near the stage.

Thecla was now set at liberty and clothed in her own garments. The women shouted: "There is one God—the God of Thecla." Tryphena again welcomed the maiden to her home, saying: "Now I believe that the dead are raised; now I believe that my child livs."

After a rest of eight days, Thecla heard that Paul was in Myra of Lycia. So she girded herself and put on a man's cloak, and taking some young men and maidens with her went to Myra, where she found the apostle preaching.

The only reference to Myra in Acts is when he stopped there on his voyage to Rome (xxvii, 5); but it is hardly possible that he could hav preached in that place at that time.

Paul was astonished to see Thecla and her companions. Thecla said, "I hav received the baptism, Paul." The apostle led her to the house of Hermeus (Hermas? Rom. xvi, 14), where she gave an account of her sufferings. And Paul said: "Go, and teach the word of God."

This is contrary to 1 Tim. ii, 12: "I do not allow a woman to teach;" and to 1 Cor. xiv, 34: "Let your women be silent in the church; for it is not permitted them to speak."

Thecla gave to Paul for the benefit of the poor some clothing and gold which she had received from Tryphena, and returned to Iconium. Here she went to the house of Onesiphorus. Thamyris, her betrothed, was dead, but her mother was living. She sent for her mother and said: "Theocleia, my mother, canst thou believe that the Lord liveth in the heavens? For whether thou desirest wealth, God givs it to thee through me, or thy child, I am standing beside thee." "And having thus testified," says the writer, "she departed to Seleucia, where she dwelt in a cave seventy-two years, living upon herbs and water."

In this cave she was beset by some wicked young men, but, "by the providence of God, she entered into the rock alive and went under ground."

At last she went to Rome to see Paul, but the apostle was dead, and after a short time she also died and was buried near Paul's tomb.

She was seventeen years old when she was cast into the fire; eighteen when thrown among the wild beasts; and lived to the age of ninety.

Another MS. locates the cave in a mountain called Calamon or Rhodeon, and givs a few more particulars of her life in the cave. She cured diseases and expelled unclean spirits. The physicians of Seleucia called her a priestess of Artemis (the son of Isis and Osiris), and as she had interfered with their trade they sent some drunken fellows to corrupt her. She told them that she was a humble old woman and a servant of her Lord Jesus Christ. The boys seized her. She then said: "Wait, my children, that you may see the glory of the Lord." Then she prayed, and a voice from heaven said: "Fear not, Thecla, my true servant, for I am with thee. Look and see where an opening has been made for thee." The rock opened and as she entered within, it closed up so that not even a joint appeared. Then the young ruffians were baffled, being only able to retain a fragment of the old virgin's veil.

This story may hav been forged by a presbyter of Asia in the second century, as Tertullian affirms. But we suspect that the alleged forgery was only a redaction of an old story founded on fact. There is an uncertainty about the geography which is probably due to the ignorance of the writer or to alteration of the text. Paul went to Iconium from Antioch, apparently in Pisidia; but from Iconium he went into a tomb on the road to Daphne, and from thence into Antioch. Now Daphne was a clebrated sanctuary of Appollo near Antioch in Syria, whence the ancient name Antioch by Daphne. And Seleucia was a seaport town sixteen miles from Antioch in Syria. There was another Seleucia Trachea in Cilicia.

We find nothing in the story requiring us to believe that it occurred in the first century, but, on the contrary, several landmarks belonging to the century before. When Rome began to absorb the kingdoms of Asia Minor and Syria, the princes were allowed, for a time, to retain their titles and some of their royal privileges. Hence the words, "Syriarch" and "Queen," in this story. Thecla's accuser was Alexander the Syriarch, and her benefactor was Queen Tryphena. But both of these were subordinate to the proconsul. This state of things existed in the reign of Augustus, but the race of Syriarchs and Asiatic princes became extinct long before the reign of Nero.

If Thecla went to Rome expecting to find Paul alive she must hav been far short of ninety years of age. Those who believe that Paul died in the reign of Nero cannot make the apostle more than sixty-eight years at most, while we make him an octogenarian, and truly "Paul the aged," in the reign of Augustus.

Ideal Perfection and Progress.

AN ANSWER TO S. P. ANDREWS.

I hav read with much interest the published account of S. P. Andrews's lecture in answer to Herbert Spencer's "Coming Slavery." So far as the lecture itself is concerned, I can only say that I heartily agree with Mr. Andrews in all the points he makes, and feel highly gratified that such a thorough answer should hav been made to Mr. Spencer's fallacies; but I must beg leave to differ from some of the sentiments in some of Mr. Andrews's rejoinder to his critics.

Mr. Andrews says: "The great question in Sociology, for me, is not what is necessary to-morrow, nor what is adapted to the low condition in which people are to day, but first and foremost, What is the high ideal of a perfect human society?" And follows it by expressing clearly his opinion that the best and shortest way to progress is to study out "what are the fundamental principles in regard to what would be a perfect order of human life for perfect men and women."

There is one insuperable difficulty about this mode of procedure, and that is: How shall we know that our high ideal of a perfect society is correct? Our knowledge of the future is altogether dependent upon our knowledge of the past, and the past furnishes us with no safe data that can enable us to conceive what constitutes a perfect society. Not only it has failed so far to furnish an example of a society that possessed the elements of perfection, but it has also entirely failed to evolve a common ideal of what would constitute a perfect order of human life for perfect men and women.

Mr. Andrews is not the first man who has sought after this perfect ideal. Christ and his disciples had just such an ideal, and their followers hav been trying to realize it for the last 1800 years. Mohammed had also his ideal; so had Brigham Young; so had Noyes. Comte thought he had discovered the new order of society, according to the most accurate scientific knowledge; the same can be said of Fourier and his followers, and the world is full of men who are certain that they hav found the "fundamental principles in regard to what would be a perfect order of human life for perfect men and women." And when they fail, as all hav, and all will, they, like the Christians, place the failure on the imperfection of human nature that is not yet adapted to the perfection of their high ideal.

Now, for my part, I hold very clearly and distinctly that it has been given to no man, or set of men, to know what is a perfect man, or a perfect woman, or a perfect order of human life, or a perfect society; and that no two men of sufficient mind to originate their own thoughts will never agree entirely as to what constitutes this high order of society.

And I further hold that, if there is a superior intelligence that controls progress in society, that superior intelligence alone knows what the ultimate result will be, and has not revealed it to Christ, Mohammed, Young, Noyes, Fourier, Andrews, or anybody else; and that if there is no such superior intelligence, as Mr. Ward believes, then no one knows or can know what the ultimate result will be, for it will depend upon the concurring result of so many different forces as to defy the powers of calculation of any man or combination of men.

On the other hand, I maintain that the only way to progress is exactly the one Mr. Andrews deprecates, "to feel one's way along in order to get something to-morrow a little better than to-day." I contend that improvement in society is a growth, not a manufacture, and that the practical men are those who say: "What is the use of going away off a thousand years ahead of us, or five thousand years ahead, for an ideal and profound thought? Why not take hold of the thing immediately before our hand and do that?"

And I further contend that the Socialistic movement that Mr. Spencer opposes, and Mr. Andrews sustains, is a growth; that it is due to the blind consciousness of the laboring classes, who hav no high ideal of perfect society before them, but a clear perception of the evils of which they are suffering today, and feel their way along to a better position.

Mr. Spencer, who believes in the genetic growth of society, ought to sustain this movement, and certainly would if he had not taken such an early stand against state interference, so that now he finds himself in the anomalous position of seeing the evolution forces in society turn in a direction different from what he expected they would take, and foolishly believes that as he was an efficient agent in recognizing and analyzing those forces, he may by his influence help to turn them in the direction that he thinks they ought to take; while Mr. Andrews, who believes in progress by teleological action, would certainly oppose it if it did not happen to agree with some of his preconceived ideas of a high ideal of society, and to form a stepping-stone towards it.

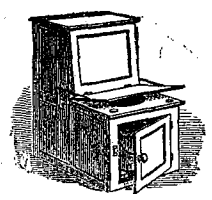
As to Mr. Ward's position, no one has a higher opinion than myself of his book, "Dynamic Sociology," but I cannot agree with Mr. Andrews that he is the coming man, unless he follows his work by others of more practical value. "Dynamic Sociology" is important as a compendium of social science. The student finds in it the condensed knowledge of more than one hundred books treating of sociological questions. He finds also scattered all through it condensed arguments of great value in lecture or debate. But the original thoughts it possesses, and they are many, are not fully developed; they are only glanced at, and will hav to be pushed home by much more extended arguments and convincing proofs before they will become practically effectiv; and the ultimate aim of the book is to scientifically prove what the civilized world has already found in its blind, groping way, that what mankind needs is an increase and a greater diffusion of knowledge. Of the question, now of much more importance, What kind of knowledge is of most value to man? very little is said, much less than is found in Mr. Spencer's "Education," written twenty-five years ago.

Mr. Ward advances the idea that society is perfectly competent to take its own progress in its own hands and under its own discretion, and on that account has been highly praised by Comte's followers; but he fails to bring any fact to prove it, and curiously enough in a man of such ability, while he refuses to man the possession of free will, and the power to control his life except as circumstances meet him, claims for society as a whole what he refuses to its constituent parts, thus arguing that it can rise higher than its source.

The great merit of his book is to call attention to the fact that just as the individual can take advantage of his knowledge to promote his welfare by the indirect mode of action, so the aggregate of individuals, or society, can also, in their collectiv capacity, take advantage of their knowledge to satisfy their collectiv wants, and by calling attention to the advantages offered by government action as against corporations and monopolies, offers arguments that greatly strengthen the Socialist's position.

But this increase of knowledge, this desire to make it available for the growth of what I call political co-operation, is itself the result of a blind groping after better conditions, of a feeling one's way along in order to get something to-morrow a little better than to-day, and not of a high ideal of what constitutes a perfect order of human life for perfect men and women.

ALBERT CHAVANNES.



Adair Creek, E. Tenn.

A Late but Promising Device.

The 297,966th invention filed in the Patent Office is due to the cerebral activity of Mr. James Joseph Brennan, of Whippany, N. J., and is described as a "combined Holy-Water Font and Poor-Box." The claim sets forth the object of the arrangement as follows:

"The herein-described article of church furniture, consisting of a combined poor-box and holy-water font separated by a partition, the said poor-box being projected above the font and in the rear thereof, and provided with a slit or opening, and having a door, hinged at one edge and provided on its opposit edge with a suitable lock, and the holy-water font provided with a dip-opening, and a tank, and provided at one end with a door through which said tank may be removed, substantially as and for the purposes set forth."

Below we present a cut designed to convey a more or less distinct outline of Mr. Brennan's invention.

We are free to say this is not strictly accurate, but it is the best we can do with the limited facilities of this office, which is not fitted up with the necessary appurtenances for correctly describing articles of church furniture; and the inventor has been thoughtless enough not to furnish us with a correct representation. Taken, however, as a whole, the resemblance is striking. The slit or opening in the said poor-box projected above the font in the rear thereof must of necessity be imagined by the reader, but the partly closed aperture shown in this picture is identical with the dip-opening of the holy-water font; and the tank, and the door through which said tank may be removed, are both present. The whole device is designed to be placed in the vestibule of a church building. The devotee, upon entering, dips the fingers of one hand in the holy water contained in the said tank, and makes the sign of the cross. With the other hand the said devotee is expected to insert a coin in the slit or opening of the poor-box, which is designedly made large enough to admit trade dollars.

We hav to trust to luck that Mr. Brennan will be passably well suited with our humble effort to lay before an appreciativ public the fact that he is an inventor of great attainments; and we further trust that old subscribers will refrain from fumbling over back-numbers of THE TRUTH SEEKER in order to discover whence we hav obtained the cut with which this object has been so happily attained.

But the significance of this invention consists not so much in the thing invented as in the possibilities thereby opened up. If it proves all that is expected of it, we may soon hear of further inventions; for instance, a patent Bible, opening automatically to any required text, suited for all denominations, from the hardshell Baptist down to the Episcopalian; a machine, necessarily more intelligent than the average preacher, so constructed as to saw off the last part of a prosy sermon at any desirable point; an indestructible oyster for church fairs; a theological barometer that will reveal the presence of a new idea in the atmosphere in time for the congregation to escape before it strikes them; a contribution box furnished with a device for extracting coins from the pockets of slumbering worshipers, thus avoiding the disagreeable necessity of awakening them. This last may be supplemented with a contrivance for conveying the contents of the box to the pocket of the sexton without exciting unpleasant remarks. Another inventiv genius in Mr. Brennan's church may get up an improved virgin, warranted to be "ever virgin" without being done in marble or necessarily isolated from the priests, no competition with which to be tolerated in the church, and all infringements to be punished according to law, civil and uncivil. Something might then follow designed to prevent trustees and highly respected members of the community from leaving town between two days accompanied by the society's funds. Archbishops could be so improved upon that they would not embezzle more than half the cash intrusted to their care by confiding parishioners. This would be a vast and most desirable innovation. In fact, the area for invention and improvement in "church furniture" seems boundless. Mr. Brennan has done a virtuous act in attempting to explore and work it. He has as yet reached only the vestibule. When he gets inside the inner sanctuary he will find a larger field and little competition. The unmistakable resemblance between his present invention and a useful though unecclesiastical article of furniture should rather encourage than deter him.

Is Beecher an Honest Man?

From the Detroit Evening News.

Mr. Beecher does not attract quite as much attention nowadays in his lecturing tours as he once did, but his movements and sayings are still interesting to thousands of people in every community. To the disinterested student of contemporary manners he is chiefly interesting for the unique divergence between the doctrins he accepts and preaches and the causes to which, as embodied in parties and other visible divisions, he allies himself. In discussion, whether on the platform or in the pulpit, he adopts theories against the practical application of which in real life he hurls the whole weight of his influence in action.

In politics he has been always a free trader in theory, and a most persistent and faithful high protectionist in practice. He has talked in glittering sentences against the slavery of tariff, and he has steadily cast his vote and influence to continue in power the party pledged to protectiv tariffs as the cardinal doctrin of its creed and the chief practice of its policy. He has denounced tariff as robbery, and he has never failed to assist the robbers to their swag and protect them in its enjoyment. He has a hundred times in the last six months declared that the reform of the tariff in the direction of free trade was the only political question before the people of this country worth a moment's consideration, and he has warmly commended the efforts of Carlisle, Morrison, and their followers to bring about that reform; yet he intends doing his utmost to compass the election of a Republican president, which, as he perfectly well knows and is ready to acknowledge, will defeat the reform he pretends to desire. Nor does he apparently recognize the slightest occasion for apology or explanation regarding this contradiction between opinion and action.

His attitude on religious and philosophical subjects presents the same contradictions between utterance and action; between theoretical sympathy and practical affiliation and association. He runs after every novel doctrin of modern science like a child after a new bauble, and frequently with as little understanding of it, and plays with the flame of Agnosticism without apparent consciousness that it burns the fingers of his theology. He talks with the apostles of modern unbelief, yet insists on standing within the ranks of the saints. He is we know not what in belief, for it is impossible to hold him down to any rule of logical consistency; but continues to draw a salary as the pastor of a Christian church, and to call himself a Christian. He denies pretty much the whole contents of the Bible, but professes still in the pulpit to take it as his guide and rule to salvation. He denies the necessity of Christ's passion for the salvation of man as a monstrous doctrin; and accepts Christ's divinity without explaining why a God should undergo such torture for no necessary or practical purpose. He scouts at hell; yet talks of salvation, which is merely the converse of hell—as there can be no salvage where danger of loss or destruction does not exist.

His struggles with the theory of evolution are as amusing to a logical philosopher as they must be painful to a logical Christian. He accepts the theory and is apparently very proud of it, without understanding it; for he talks of the "conservation of energy" and of miracles and special providences in the same breath, although the two are absolute contradictions in terms. He indulges in the cheap liberality of giving away the foundations of Christian faith, while flattering himself that the superstructure is still intact. Accepting the doctrin of evolution, which was formulated, established, and demonstrated by such men as Darwin, Spencer, Haeckel, and Tyndall, he rejects their interpretation of it, and sugar-coating it with the vapid theology of such amateur as the Duke of Argyll, he swallows it down, persuading himself that the sour substance of Materialism which forms its kernel is not only covered, but neutralized. His attempted reconciliation of the doctrin with Theism and Christianity is as absurd as Canning's ridiculous effort to reconcile Moses with geology.

To attempt to consider and criticise in detail such a discourse as he delivered last night would be as vain as to argue a proposition in mathematics with one who denied or ignored all the axioms of the science. What can be done with a man who will in the same breath accept two propositions which are as utterly destructiv of each other as are the religious doctrin of miracles and the scientific doctrin that the sum of energy can be neither increased nor diminished? Reasonable people can only pass along with pity for one who lacks the courage to stand or fall by a consistent line of reasoning; and who is vain and worldly enough to attempt to win at the same time a reputation for piety and faith with Christians and for liberality and enlightenment with Atheists.

Now Ready.

Col. Kelso's large book, "The Bible Analyzed, in Twenty Lectures," is now completed and ready for mailing. The work contains 838 crown octavo pages, is printed on tinted paper, bound in modern colors, beveled edges, stamped sides, and presents, typographically, a splendid appearance.

The name describes its contents as well as can be done by an extended review. Those familiar with Col. Kelso's racy style of dealing hard blows at the Christian superstition and mythology will heartily enjoy its perusal. The book bristles with plain statements of facts and logical deductions therefrom, upsetting all the cherished notions of the churchmen. We hope it will meet with a very extensiv sale to reward the colonel for his labor upon it. Orders may be addressed to either the author or THE TRUTH SEEKER. The price is $3.

Col. Ingersoll's Last Lecture.

The great demand for this latest utterance of the brilliant heretic has led to its publication in pamphlet form by the colonel's authorized publisher. It makes a neat book of fifty-four pages and is sold for ten cents. On orders of a dozen we make a reduction of twenty cents, forwarding that number postpaid for $1. The lecture ought to circulate by the tens and hundreds of thousands. Would that every man, woman, and child in the United States could read it. Send for a dozen.

The Pope and the Masons.

If all the pope says of the Freemasons in his last encyclical letter, the full text of which has just reached this country, were true, that body would be a magnificent power in opposition to the schemes of Rome. By substituting the word Catholicism where the pope has used Christianity, however, the gravamen of the pontiff's charges will be more clearly seen. It is a habit of the Catholic clergy to recognize nothing as Christian that is not also Catholic, and the anathematizing of Protestants as godless, Atheistic, etc., is for that reason dishonest. We wish it were otherwise; we could look with pleasure upon a world in which no superstition had a place, but as long as Protestantism is a religious force, the pleasure will be denied us, notwithstanding his infallible holiness has sent out word that Freemasonry and Freethought are synonymous. It is fair, we presume, to say that the pope denounces nothing he loves. Per contra, he and his church love nothing he denounces. Taken that way, this anti-Mason encyclical is a plain picturing of the ways of Catholicism, and shows how utterly impossible it is for Catholics to ever become reconciled to a republic, or to liv in one without plotting for its downfall. The principles most vigorously cursed by the old man in the Vatican are stated by him as follows:

"Now, it is the principle of naturalists, as the name itself indicates, that human nature and human reason in everything must be our teacher and guide. Having once settled this, they are careless of duties toward God, or they pervert them with false opinions and errors. They deny that anything has been revealed by God; they do not admit any religious dogma, any truth but what human intelligence can comprehend; they do not allow any teacher to be believed on his official authority. Now, it being the special duty of the Catholic church, and her duty only, to keep the doctrins received from God and the authority of teaching with all the heavenly means necessary to salvation, and preserve them integrally incorrupt, hence the attacks and rage of the enemies are turned against her.

"Now, if one watches the proceedings of the Masons, in respect of religion especially, where they are more free to do what they like, it will appear that they carry faithfully into execution the tenets of the naturalists. They work, indeed, obstinately to the end that neither the teaching nor the authority of the church may hav any influence; and therefore they preach and maintain the full separation of the church from the state. So laws and government are wrested from the wholesome and divine virtue of the Catholic church, and they want therefore, by all means, to rule states independent of the institutions and doctrins of the church.

"But naturalists go further. Having entered in things of greatest importance, on a way thoroughly false, through the weakness of human nature or by the judgment of God, who punishes pride, they run to extreme errors. Thus the very truths which are known by the natural light of reason, as the existence of God, spirituality and immortality of soul, hav no more consistence and certitude for them.

"Masonry breaks on the same rocks by no different way. It is true, Freemasons generally admit the existence of God; but they admit themselvs that this persuasion for them is not firm, sure. They do not dissimulate that in the Masonic family the question of God is a principle of great discord; it is even known how lately they had on this point serious disputes. It is a fact that the sect leaves to the members full liberty of thinking about God whatever they like, affirming or denying his existence. Those who boldly deny his existence are admitted as well as those who, like the Pantheists, admit God but ruin the idea of him, retaining an absurd caricature of the divine nature, destroying its reality. Now, as soon as this supreme foundation is pulled down and upset, many natural truths must needs go down, too, as the free creation of this world, the universal government of providence, immortality of soul, fixture, and eternal life.

"For domestic society almost all the doctrin of naturalists is that marriage is only a civil contract, and may be lawfully broken by the will of the contracting parties; the state has power over the matrimonial bond. In the education of the children no religion must be applied, and when grown up every one will select that which he likes.

"Now, Freemasons accept these principles without any restriction; and not only do they accept them, but they endeavor to act so as to bring them into moral and practical life. In many countries which are professedly Catholic, marriages, not celebrated in the civil form, are considered null; elsewhere laws allow divorce. In other places everything is done in order to hav it permitted. So the nature of marriage will be soon changed and reduced to a temporary union, which can be done and undone at pleasure.

"The sect of Masons aims unanimously and steadily also at the possession of the education of children. They understand that a tender age is easily bent, and that there is no more useful way of preparing for the state such citizens as they wish. Hence, in the instruction and education of children, they do not leave to the ministers of the church any part either in directing or watching them. In many places they hav gone so far that children's education is all in the hands of laymen; and from moral teaching every idea is banished of those holy and great duties which bind together man and God.

"The principles of social science follow. Here naturalists teach that men hav all the same rights, and are perfectly equal in condition; that every man is naturally independent; that no one has a right to command others; that it is tyranny to keep men subject to any other authority than that which emanates from themselvs. Hence the people are sovereign; those who rule hav no authority but by the commission and concession of the people; so that they can be deposed, willing or unwilling, according to the wishes of the people. The origin of all rights and civil duties is in the people or in the state, which is ruled according to the new principles of liberty. The state must be godless; no reason why one religion ought to be preferred to another; all to be held in the same esteem.

"Now, it is well known that Freemasons approve these maxims, and that they wish to see governments shaped on this pattern and model needs no demonstration. It is a long time, indeed, that they hav worked with all their strength and power openly for this, making thus an easy way for those, not a few, more audacious and bold in evil, who meditate the communion and equality of all goods after having swept away from the world every distinction of social goods and conditions."

Now we had always supposed that the Freemasons leaned more toward Christianity than toward Rationalism, and a correspondent in this week's paper says some hard things of them. But the pope's rage against them makes us suspicious that there may be considerable heresy in the body. The pope is no fool, though he is a spiritual and would-be temporal tyrant, and he manages, through his emissaries, to keep well posted as to what is going on. An intelligent Mason, who stands high in the order, also informs us that "a majority of intelligent Freemasons, those who read and think, are Freethinkers." That this is so is further shown by the efforts being made, under the guise of Knight Templarism, to "Christianize" the order, as the Cornerstone puts it. The creed of Masonry, we are informed, is simply Deism, although the Grand Orients of France, Belgium, and Holland do not exact a belief in a deity. It is probably because of its Deism that the order is so viciously denounced by Papists, Baptists, and Presbyterians. The Knight Templars form an extraneous order engrafted upon Masonry by those engaged in Christianizing the institution, and some of the Masonic papers protest against their being allowed to use the buildings of the order. A bitter war is now being carried on in the heart of Masonry, and has gone so far that, at the next meeting of the Grand Lodge in this city, the endeavor will be made to exclude the Templars from the Masonic Temple on its restoration from the effects of the recent fire. Knight Templarism has also been counteracted, we are informed, by the establishment of bodies in what is called the upper degree, variously known as the Ancient and Accepted, the Ancient and Primitiv, Memphis, and Mizraim rites. These bodies are strong, one consistory alone in this city numbering eight hundred. The Cornerstone also protests against the attempts to engraft Christianity upon Masonry. It is, says that journal, "a very serious question, pregnant with grave considerations touching the welfare and stability of the fraternity. It is by far a wiser course to avoid temptation, and thereby to discourage discussion of topics which contain seeds of discord."

It is seen, therefore, that the pope's fears are not altogether groundless. That the Masons form an immensely strong body is well known. If their influence is in the future to be thrown on the side of liberty, the Freethought party will hav a powerful, if silent, ally, and more good will come from a secret society than such bodies are usually credited with doing.

The Bible in the Schools.

A patriotic service has been rendered the independent citizens of Bloomfield, Iowa, by F. W. Moore, clerk of district and circuit courts of Davis county. In December of last year he filed a petition in the Davis district court asking the issuance of a writ of temporary injunction restraining the teachers of the independent district of Bloomfield public schools from reading, reciting, or repeating any portion of the Bible, or singing or causing to be sung any religious hymns or psalms in the school, and also restraining the directors of the school from having these things done, or paying out any money for the "encouragement, promotion, or carrying on of any kind of religious teaching, worship, prayer, Bible-reading, singing, or ministry of religion." On a final hearing the temporary injunction asked for was to be made permanent.

The appellant, who has two daughters attending the school, sets forth in his petition points that cannot be too often thrust upon the notice of Christians and impressed upon the minds of fair-minded men. Like the public school-houses in all our states, the building used in Bloomfield was built and furnished and is kept in repairs by taxes levied upon all the taxpapers of the district; and the teachers are hired for school purposes alone and are paid, like the janitor, out of the school fund raised by impartial taxation. Mr. Moore also states, what the defendants admit, that among the patrons of the school exists great diversity of religious belief, some being Christians, some Jews, some Agnostics, while some hav no definit ideas upon the subject, looking "upon all theology as an incomprehensible muddle."

Among the school laws of Iowa is one forbidding persons to teach in public schools without a certificate of capability, and Mr. Moore points out that the teachers hav no such certificate allowing them to teach religion, and that if the school-board prescribes the teaching of religion they must hire competent and certified teachers. Another count is that certain portions of the Bible are immoral in their tendency and "unfit to be read in a mixed assembly of people, and especially unfit to be read in the presence of persons of tender age."

The answer of the defendants (the teachers and directors of the school) is a very arrogant one. They coolly propose to Mr. Moore that if he does not wish his daughters to read or hear read the Bible he can hav them wait in the hallway till the services are over. A general answer is also made that the services are not sectarian, and therefore not in conflict with the Constitution.

The injunction was asked for before Judge E. L. Burton, and his decision was rendered December 24th, he refusing to interfere. The law and precedents cited by the judge are important to be known by the people of Iowa. He says:

"The plaintiff insists that reading the scriptures, repeating the Lord's Prayer, and singing a religious song must of necessity be teaching religious doctrin of some kind; that the teachers while so engaged are not performing the duties for which they were employed and for which they are paid; that in a public school, where all may go, no matter what their religious belief may be, or whether they hav any or not, any kind of religious doctrin should be excluded. His counsel insists to permit schools to be so conducted is in contravention of our Constitution, and its practice should be inhibited, and cites Section 3 of the Bill of Rights:

"'The General Assembly shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof, nor shall any person be compelled to attend any place of worship, pay tithes, taxes, or other rates for building or repairing places of worship, or the maintenance of any minister or ministry.'

"The section of the constitution referred to was intended to prevent the legislature from establishing any religion as the religion of the state. It was to allow perfect freedom of thought upon all religious subjects, and to compel no one to pay for the support of a ministry which his conscience or his religious training or belief taught him was erroneous.

"The framers of our Constitution—many of them, at least—were devout, God-fearing men; they were firm believers in the general doctrin of the Christian religion, and it cannot with reason be said that when the Constitutions were adopted it was intended to ignore the scriptures, the Christian religion, or deity. Such a thought was farthest from their minds; the conventions were daily opened with prayer, and the first thing the makers of our Constitution did was to recognize the existence of God. In the preamble they say: 'We, the people of the state of Iowa, grateful to the supreme being for the blessings hitherto enjoyed, and feeling our dependence on him for a continuance of these blessings, do ordain,' etc. The legislature of this state, in section 1764 of the Code, says: 'The Bible shall not be excluded from any school or institution in this state, nor shall any pupil be required to read it contrary to the wishes of his parents or guardian.'

"The plaintiff's counsel says, 'The foregoing section is void, that it is unconstitutional; that to allow the Bible in the public schools is to establish some kind of religion: that to allow the teachers to read it in the schools is to make them ministers in one sense of the word.' But we hav seen that such construction of the Constitution is not sound. That instrument does not deny the legislature the power to allow the Bible to be read in the public schools. The legislature has the same power to say that the scripture shall not be excluded from the public schools as it has to say that it shall be a crime to labor on Sunday, or that blasphemy shall be punished by fine or imprisonment.

"Our laws in many places recognize the Sabbath as a holy day. Thus courts cannot be opened or judicial business generally transacted on Sunday, Section 191 Code; notes cannot be protested on Sunday, Section 2094; original notices, except in certain cases, cannot be served on Sunday as a general rule, Sections 2952, 3028. And under Section 4072 it is made a crime to hunt, fish, shoot, dance, carry fire-arms, or to buy or sell property of any kind, or to do any labor, works of necessity and charity excepted, on Sunday. The courts under this section hav also held that contracts made on Sunday are void. Pike vs. King, 16 Iowa 49; Watrous vs. Blair, 32 Iowa 58.

"In short, the legislature in many ways recognizes the sanctity of the Sabbath or Sunday. It might be contended that the legislature had no constitutional power to enact such laws because to do so would be in the interest of religion. Men who did not believe in the sanctity of the Sabbath might say their natural or constitutional rights were infringed upon; that they ought to be permitted to do on Sunday what they could legally do on any other day. But they must remember that this nation is a Christian nation, that the Christian religion must be recognized, to some extent at least, as a part of the common law. Not so far, indeed, as to unite church and state, but far enough to prevent such gross actions and utterances as would shock the great moral and religious sentiment of the community.

"In many states blasphemy is punished as a crime, though to do so might be by some regarded as an interference with religious toleration. In Massachusetts such has been the law for many years, and although the subjects of religious freedom and universal toleration are provided for in the Constitution, and were long and earnestly discussed in the convention of 1820, no suggestion was made that the statute of blasphemy was in violation of the declaration of rights. And more recently, upon a general and careful revision of the whole body of statute law in that state, the law against blasphemy was reenacted, with some unimportant modifications.

"In Commonwealth vs. Kneeland, 20 Pick 206, the defendant was convicted of blasphemy for denying God, Jesus Christ, the Holy Ghost, etc., and the conviction was sustained by the Supreme Court.

"In New Hampshire, the constitution of which state has a similar declaration of rights to that of Massachusetts, the open denial of the being and existence of God, or of a supreme being, is prohibited by statute, and declared to be blasphemy.

"In Vermont, with a similar declaration of rights, a statute was passed in 1797 by which it was enacted that if any person publicly shall deny the being and existence of God, or the supreme being, or shall contumaciously reproach his providence or government, he shall be deemed a disturber of the peace and tranquility of the state, and an offender against the good morals and manners of society, etc.

"In Maine, with the same bill of rights, they hav the same statute.

"In New York the universal toleration of all religious professions and sentiments is secured in the most ample manner. It is declared in the Constitution that the free exercise and enjoyment of religious worship without discrimination or preference shall forever be allowed to all mankind in the state; with the only limitation, that the liberty of conscience thus secured shall not be so construed as to excuse acts of licentiousness, or justify practices inconsistent with the peace or the safety of the state. Notwithstanding this constitutional declaration, carrying the doctrin of unlimited toleration as far as the peace and safety of any community will allow, the courts hav decided that blasphemy was a crime at common law, and was not abrogated by the Constitution—People vs. Ruggles, 8 Johns 290.

"If, under our law, the Bible is not to be excluded from the public schools, then it can rightfully be read at such reasonable and proper times as the teachers may determin. It is rightfully in the schools, but no pupil shall be required to read it against the wishes of his parents or guardian. Subject to such restriction, I see no reason why a selection from it may not be read as a part of the morning exercises, provided it is not done for the pupose of inculcating some certain dectrin."

Next month Mr. Moore's appeal from this outrageous decision will be heard. In his prepared brief he has got down to bed-rock principles, and if the court refuses the petition it will but convict itself of a lack of common sense or of a disposition to over-ride justice in favor of Christianity. "At the outset," says Mr. Moore, "let it be understood that this proceeding is not an attack on anybody's religion; that whether the Bible is the last will and testament of Almighty God to the human race, or whether it is a pack of old wives' tales, should make no difference in the discussion of this question. The appellant makes no assault on the Bible as a divinely inspired book. It is not the province of this court to decide upon such questions. Appellant urges only that the common school is not the place in which to read and teach the Christian Bible, or the place in which to carry on any kind of worship. He insists that the common school is a creature of the law, carried on at the expense of the public, for secular education only. He makes no war on the Christian religion, but insists that the state shall not teach it, or any other religion, to his children; and claims the right to deny any and all religions, or to select and adopt for himself and his children the one that seems to him to be true. To speak plainly, as may be necessary to a clear understanding of the subject—yet without bitterness or intent to wound the feelings of any—it is nobody's business what the appellant's religion may be. It is nobody's business whether he has any at all or not. Appellant has the right to superintend the education of his children, and, in a free country, ought not to be compelled to keep them out of school to avoid the unauthorized attempt of an agent of the state to inoculate them with the peculiar religious views which such agent may deem to be a specific against endless misery."

To the judge's and defendant's reply that reading the Bible and singing religious hymns is not worship, the appellant retorts that the exercises consume from ten to fifteen minutes daily, which make "from fifty to seventy-five minutes per week—more time than a Sunday-school devotes to the same purpose. If this is not worship, what is it then?

"Is it a theatrical performance? If so, the school is not a theater. They claim that the songs are sung for the purpose of cultivating the voices of the children. Is it necessary to sing "sacred" songs to do that? It is hardly necessary to suggest that there are some kinds of songs that no teacher would be permitted to introduce into any school, no matter how cultivating they might be for the voice. Physical exercise is a good thing, but pupils are not generally allowed to exercise themselvs in making a football of a hornets' nest. If said teachers should devote fifteen minutes a day to the reading of the Democratic platform, and the repetition of the ordinance of Secession and singing the 'Bonnie Blue Flag,' it is hardly likely that they would be thought serious in denying that they were teaching partisan politics or something even worse. Or if they should devote the same amount of time to reading a work on law, or medicin, they could not claim that they were not teaching law or medicin. Is there any serious doubt in the mind of any sane person that the Bible is a religious book, and that it contains, or purports to contain, a system of religion? No, there is no such doubt; and for the purposes of this case the petition charges, and the answer admits, that it is a religious book. The people of this country hav learned enough of religious liberty to shut the mouth of the common school teacher when he proposes to giv to his pupil his ideas of the meaning of that book. All sects of Christians, as between themselvs, are agreed on this, and hav agreed not to trust each other in commenting on the book. This is all very well; but they do not consider that those who reject the book as a divine message are entitled to the benefits of the public school without having their children drilled day in and day out in the hearing of the contents of the book."

To the claim that the Code of Iowa permits the reading of the Bible in the schools, and that the provision is constitutional, the appellant says:

"It is claimed that Section 1764 of the Code authorizes the use of the Bible in the public school. It reads as follows: 'The Bible shall not be excluded from any school or institution in this state, nor shall any pupil be required to read it contrary to the wishes of his parent or guardian.' What does this section mean? It was passed, not by the General Assembly, but by a small body of men once existing in this state under the name of 'Board of Education,' which was abolished as soon as it could legally be done. Let us expand this section by inserting within it the meaning of the word Bible, as given in Webster's Dictionary; for we must assume that the lawmakers intended the natural, usual, and ordinary meaning of the word used:

"Section 1764. The Bible (the book, by way of eminence the sacred volume, in which are contained the revelations of God. It consists of two parts, called the Old and New Testaments.) shall not be excluded from any school or institution in this state, nor shall any pupil be required to read it contrary to the wishes of his parent or guardian.

"The law-makers certainly could not hav meant that an Infidel's child should be compelled to sit day after day and hav the book read at him or to him, or in his hearing, against his parents' wishes, and that the child should be exempt only from taking the book in his own hands and uttering the words with his own voice; or that a Jew's child should be compelled to hear the story of the cross as told in the New Testament; or that a Catholic's child should be compelled to listen to the reading from the version now in use among Protestants. There can be no difference in principle between compelling a child daily to repeat, 'There is no God but Allah, and Mohammed is his prophet!' and shutting him up a prisoner in a room and let a dervish howl the same thing at him. The public school is a common school, where people of all religious beliefs, or of no religious belief, send their children to hav them taught various branches of learning upon which all men are agreed. It is not a place to teach particular partisan political doctrins or religious dogmas; and what we asked of the court below we now ask of this court—to assist us in keeping the common school in just the condition that the law intends it to occupy; to prevent it from being diverted from its proper channel at our expense and in violation of our constitutional guarantees by a school board or a set of teachers who imagin that they hav been 'called' to devote a part of their time to the saving of the immortal souls of our children, in selecting and reading to them only such passages as teach and are 'calculated' to teach those peculiar dogmas that best fit in with said teachers' ideas of the eternal fitness of things, when such dogmas are in direct conflict with what we believe to be common sense, and but the words of the blind speaking to the blind in the dark. It is rank nonsense and injustice to say, as do appellees, that if appellant does not wish such doctrins taught to his children in the public school, he can keep them at home or let them stand out in the cold or dawdle away their time in the halls of the school building. Very gracious, kind, and considerate, surely! Perhaps they would let the children remain in the cellar in the coal bin, if appellant should ask humbly enough for the privilege. What crime has appellant been guilty of, or what taint of blood hav his children that they are not allowed access to the public school at all times when in session, except at the price of having some dreamer's 7x9 idea of divinity pumped into their ears! This Supreme Court has held, and has reaffirmed the doctrin, that a negro is even entitled to equal rights and privileges in the common schools, and that no youth can be denied admission to any particular school merely because of his color, nationality, or religion, or the like. (See Clark vs. Board of Directors, etc., 24 Iowa, 266; Smith vs. Ind., Dist. of Keokuk, 40 Iowa, 518; Dore vs. Same, 41 Iowa, 689.) If pupils cannot be denied on account of color or religion, a teacher certainly can not impose odious terms. Appellant's children hav the same rights that other people's children hav; he claims no more, and will be content with no less."

"If section 1764 should be construed according to the ideas of the appellees, then it is not a valid law. It is in direct conflict with sections 3 and 4 of article I. of the constitution of the state, and therefore void. Section 3 of our Bill of Rights is as follows:

"'3. The general assembly shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof; nor shall any person be compelled to attend any place of worship, pay tithes, taxes, or other rates for building or repairing places of worship, or the maintenance of any minister or ministry.'

"Section 4 of the Bill of Rights, so far as herein applicable, reads:

"'4. No religious test shall be required for any office of public trust, and no person shall be deprived of any of his rights, privileges, or capacities, or rendered incompetent to giv evidence in any court of law or equity, in consequence of his opinions on the subject of religion.'

"A house of worship is a house in which worship is carried on. We do not suppose that appellees will insist that a solemn dedication is necessary. To the extent of about fifteen minutes each school day, the schoolhouse in question is a house of worship, and as clearly so as any church in the land. If singing praises to a God, praying to him, and reading to the assembly passages from his alleged revelation do not constitute worship, it is about time to revise our dictionaries; and if the person who conducts such exercises is not a minister of religion, then a man who habitually shaves the beard and cuts the hair of his customers is not a barber. We hav all heard of 'family worship,' which consists of exercises of just the character complained of."

Mr. Moore pertinently argues that if the General Assembly can make no law respecting the establishment of religion, how can it say that the Christians' Bible shall be read at public expense? If no person should be deprived of any of his rights in consequence of his religious opinions, how can he be deprived of the benefits of the public school unless he will submit to odious and invidious distinctions that ostracize his children from among their equals? Why must the Infidel and the Jew pay taxes to maintain the ministry of a religion utterly repugnant to their cherished convictions? And what difference is there in paying tithes direct or having the money voted by the town and the individual assessed to foot the bill? The clause in the Iowa Code empowering teachers to read the Bible in schools is plainly a violation of Section 3 of our Bill of Rights.

The court to which these arguments are addressed is asked to do what the lower court refused to do, grant an injunction restraining the further teaching of religion in the public schools. Whether it will do this or not remains to be seen. We hope that all the Freethinkers of Davis county will uphold Mr. Moore in his struggle against the church, and use whatever influence they hav to obtain justice for themselvs and their children.

Letters from Friends.

BELFAST, May 3, 1884.

MR. EDITOR: Please send me the TRUTH SEEKER ALMANAC for 1884, and "Crimes of Preachers," for which find inclosed fifty cents. I must say to you that I sent for a trial subscription of THE TRUTH SEEKER, and I am much pleased with it. I hav shown the paper to some and find that it takes splendidly, but the postmaster and several here say that I am breaking up their churches, and that I ought not to show an Infidel paper to the faithful. And I hav found that several of my papers hav not come or that something is wrong, for I hav never received them. I shall continue to show my papers, if I get them, and these books I am sending for; and when my subscription for the paper runs out, I shall send for more and try and send several new subscribers. Good luck to THE TRUTH SEEKER, it is doing a great and good work.

Your sincere friend S. F. MCOMBER.

AN OPEN LETTER TO E. C. WALKER.

CANYON CITY, COL., April 27, 284.

FRIEND WALKER: I hav been looking over your arguments against prohibition, and hav come to the following conclusions: 1. That whatever arguments you may use against prohibition may be used with equal force in favor of toleration 2. That personal liberties must often be sacrificed to social interests, and the two essentials are finance and morality. The first is essential to life, and the other to civilization. If the liberty to use or use of liquor is a cost to the people of hundreds of dollars more than the benefit they derive from it, whose rights are paramount—those of few, or of many? I suggest that the rights of the many are paramount, and may extinguish in essentials of society the rights of the few. Friend Walker, in your opinion does the amount received from licenses to sell liquors balance the damages done by the use of liquors? Why should a man be required to pay license for doing right, or why should any man be licensed to do wrong? No man injures society by doing right. However profitable a business may be to an individual, yet if it proves a damage to the community their rights must be considered and his business discontinued. Suppose a man owns a lot across the street from you, it is his natural liberty to do what he will with his own, and he builds a hog-pen on it, and fills it with his pigs. In a short time an offensiv odor floats over to your dining room. Would you vote for its removal?

Now, as a parallel, it must be shown that saloons are a benefit to society—first to its finances. Is the drinker ever improved in his physical or moral relations? Does the habit of drinking liquor in any case better the condition of the drinker's family? Does drinking increase his property—make him more punctual and respectable? My friend, is he the man you would vote for to fill an office of important trust? Does a saloon tend to improve a man's morals, his language, his society, his manners, his intelligence? Do saloons ever elevate character? If they don't, what are their liberties in comparison with the rightful claims of the thousands?

THE LAND WAR COMMENCED.

BERLIN, N. J., May 10, 284.

MR. EDITOR: There will probably be a most destructiv war in this nation before land-grabbers relinquish their hold on the land stolen from the people. If all the working classes would unite and act together for the general good, they would soon hav a government that would put a final stop to the selling and giving of land to rich corporations and land-grabbers, and all could hav land enough, without money or price, on which to raise food and make comfortable and happy homes. But the workers, the producers, who are all that are of any benefit to the world, are crushed down with toil and poverty, and are slow to move in anything reformatory, and the probability now is that their rights to land will be restored to them at a future day by bloodshed, rather than by the peaceable method of the ballot.

As all men hav just the same natural right to land enough on which to raise food as they hav to life itself, and as they are now being educated in regard to their rights, a time is coming when they will demand them, and will hav them, if every land thief must die in the struggle. This is just as sure to come as the sun is to shine, notwithstanding land thieves feel strong and think they are to hav everything in their own way. Indeed, the land war has already commenced. In some of the Western states railroad companies hav run barbed-wire fences around their large stolen tracts, fencing in the farms of actual settlers. In some places the settlers hav had to cut the fences to go in and out. In return, the railroad companies hav begun to burn the cabins of the settlers to drive them off. If this outrage goes on it will grow as fast as Jonah's gourd, and the railroad stations and the dwellings of the land thieves will be blown up with dynamite. The workers will not go on to this battlefield to be shot down like wild beasts, but will inaugurate a war safer to themselvs. I am not encouraging this outrage, but am simply telling what is to be unless Congress immediately changes its course in regard to the public land, and warning all of the danger now before us; for the land belongs to the people, those who want to cultivate it, and the people will hav it. The nation is now slumbering over a volcano, and foreigners as well as rich Americans cannot stop gobbling up the land a moment too soon for their own safety, and the sooner Congress stops selling the people's land the better for all.

J. HACKER.

BATTLE CREEK, MICH., May 6, 1884.

MR. EDITOR: I am now over four score, and hav been a Spiritualist since the summer of 1838, and hav been fully convinced in my own mind from what occurred in this state, and of which there are yet many living witnesses. I had prior to the Fox phenomena in 1848 never heard the word Spiritualism made use of, but what had occurred ten years before convinced me that spirits of departed friends and loved ones do visit those left here in earth life, and I fully, and, I may say, religiously believe that if the entire human race could be made to fully realize the true phenomena of spiritual birth in the human soul crime would be diminished and human happiness would be greatly increased. I hav been and still am an open and avowed Spiritualist. My acquaintance with thousands of avowed Spiritualists extends from one end of this continent to the other, and I hav not found one single case of insanity, as charged in that infamous production of Talmage. And the other tissue of falsehoods and infamous lying charges which he is reported to hav made ought to brand him as a public nuisance and a lying vilifier of the blackest dye. Let him look at his Christian adherents the world over, and he, with his millions of hypocrits clothed in celestial garb, can find thousands in state prisons convicted of every phase of crime to one Spiritualist that has ever been convicted in prison Let him look at the insane asylums all the world over—he can find hundreds if not thousands of Christians insane to one insane Spiritualist. Let him look at the slums of New York and he can find a thousand inmates of Christian professors to one, if any at all, of Spiritualists. Let him take that king of all hypocrits that ever walked this earth, A. Comstock, and visit the brothels of New York, and they no doubt would be welcome visitors amongst their Christian inmates, and see if the two can find a single open and accredited Spiritualist among the thousands who no doubt were and are Christian professors. If Talmage can show his face among decent and respectable people after uttering such a tissue of slander and infamous falsehoods, then he ought to lock arms with his Christian brother Comstock, whose infamous hypocrisy knows no bounds. If their God or their Jesus can affiliate with such demons in human form I can but pity such a God or his illegitimate son. That would disgrace even the so-called evil one.

H. WILLIS.

SEBEWA, MICH., May 3, 1884.

MR. EDITOR: As Mr. Seward Mitchell, of Newport, Maine, has taken me to task for my letter in THE TRUTH SEEKER of April 12th on prohibition, with your kind permission I will answer him through the columns of your paper.

Mr. Mitchell writes, "O my sister, my sister! you know not what you do, or you would not write such words as you do in last TRUTH SEEKER. Don't you know, my dear sister, that in advocating the forcible suppression of a great evil, you sustain a million times greater? a wholesale system of murder, a government of force, which, with its partner in crime, the Christian church, is the cause of all evil." Such are his words under date of April 17, 1884. Mr. Mitchell, you use pretty strong language, but I fail to see the point where, by advocating prohibition, I sustain a wholesale system of murder, a government of force. Do you mean to convey the idea that all government is systematized murder?—for I know of no government but one of force. You would not advocate the overthrow of all government, would you? As for sustaining a million times greater evil, I claim there is no greater evil than intemperance. It is the cause of more misery, disease, and death than any other thing in existence. This earth would be almost heaven if relieved from this cursed cancer of intemperance that is living upon the very vitals of our country. Ought we not to do as much for our weaker brother as we do for the brute? We hav laws prohibiting the abuse of the brute creation simply because they are not capable of protecting themselvs. Let us do as much for our weaker brother; let us make it possible for the drunkard to reform; let us remove the saloons from every street corner, and stamp out America's greatest curse known by the name of friendly treats. Away with such customs called friendship. I would rather a person struck a dagger to the heart of my boy than to offer him a glass of liquor. Better a person filled an honored grave than liv a dishonered life. For God's sake, do not condemn prohibition until you can giv us some surer and safer way of protection from the demon intemperance. When you can do that I will cry, Amen. For I believe in liberty as broad as the universe, when humanity hav advanced far enough to use it without abusing it. But liberty to the drunkard would be like fire to the child—he would burn his own house and his neighbor's also. When man has developed to such a hight that he becomes a law unto himself, governing and controling his evil tendencies, then, and not till then, is he capable of enjoying liberty. I acknowledge that the Christian church is the cause of nine-tenths of the evil in the world, but I consider God's especial pet, old Noah, responsible for intemperance, for the first act he committed on reaching land was to plant the vine and get beastly drunk, and man has followed his example ever since. Now, Brother Mitchell, I should like to hav you prove your assertion that, by advocating prohibition, I sustain a million times greater evil, a wholesale system of murder. Until then, I remain yours respectfully for prohibition, with all my mind, might, and strength. MRS. HATTIE REEDER.

HUNTSVILLE, ALA., April 29, 1884.

MR. EDITOR: On the Lord's day, April 20th, I had occasion to travel hence to Nashville, Tenn., 147 miles in six hours. I hav also traveled on week days, or unholy days, when I invariably had an entire seat for myself. On the twentieth, however, the seats not only had two occupants, but, in many cases, even three, one of the three sitting on the railing, while others had no seat at all and had to stand. There was nothing extraordinary going on; no fairs or races. How is it that on Sundays the cars are overcrowded? The idea struck me that this is a capital opportunity to decide, once and forever, that most foolish of all laws, the Sunday law, by trying to stop any and all traffic on that day; people will then come to their senses and revolt against any and all Sunday laws, and the country will be free once more. The way I look at it is, no government has any right to dictate any one's way of religion, or to set apart for him a special day for religion. In a republic, especially, one ought to be free, and settle with himself whether or not to observe one day out of seven, or one day out of 365, or every day in the year. I fail to see how Americans, freeborn, boasting of their individual rights, suffer themselvs to be handled as they are by the Sunday law. The front doors of the saloons in the South are closed; also when connected with hotels. Now, from within the hotel you reach the barroom, and it is nearer full on Sunday than any week-day. Why are the proprietors not fined, and the patrons as well? Either close the barrooms or open them in front. How an American who has his individual share in this government, a vote, and what not all, can so forego his manhood as to visit a barroom on the sly, when his vote could revoke the Sunday law, is a conundrum I cannot solve. Look at Holland—coffee-houses, saloons, theaters, stores, churches, etc., wide open on Sundays. Guests sit even outside sipping their wine, exposed to public gaze; still no one cares, because no one stops to gaze. How different here, in this boasted free land! Forbid Sunday traveling, in fact, everything but going to church, and, my word for it, the people will come to their senses and determin that any week day is as holy, or as unholy, as any Sunday. Speaking about Sunday reminds me of a Baptist church I visited in Holland. The service begins at 9 A.M. I entered at half past eight and looked around. Slowly the worshippers entered, and were shown to a bench provided with a door. Scarcely was one seated, when the usher takes a small key from his vest pocket, inserts it in the lock of the bench-door, and the worshiper is locked in, or locked up. The usher replaces the key is his pocket, and so the maneuver is kept on. As soon as the minister made his appearance in the pulpit, the usher made for the church door and locked it. Fortunately I was standing near enough so as to slip out, and in this way avoided an involuntary imprisonment. The churches in Rotterdam are foreign to lotteries prayer-meetings, church dinners, church suppers, protracted meetings, hand-shaking, experience telling, and begging, for the preachers are salaried by the government.

HENRI PALING.

SALESVILLE, MONTANA, April 27, 1884.

MR. EDITOR: I see a letter in THE TRUTH SEEKER of the 19th, from S. L Dana, who wants Liberals to come to the Cœur d'Alene mines. He thinks from Prichard's letter that that would be a good place. Now for his sake and all others who think of going there, let me giv them some facts. I hav not been to the mines, but I had a chance to go one year ago with the first stampede. I know many of the boys who went there since, and some of our neigbors are coming from there every week, so I am better posted than those far away. In the first place there is nothing certain that the mines are rich, yet there is some gold there. but many who are rushing there know nothing of the country. Last May, when the boys went there, the snow on the ranges was nearly to the top of the telegraph poles, and, on Pritchard Creek, four feet deep the first of June. Besides, the high water was such that no work was done until July. And now the snow is four feet deep, and of course still falling, and so deep that there is no chance to get in there only on foot, over mountains of snow ten feet deep. Now a place where snow lies from four to ten feet deep nine months in a year is no place, no difference how rich. The whole country is claimed, and there is no work to do yet. nor won't be before July. And everything is high. A friend just from there gave me a list of prices: Flour, $25 per cwt.; pork or beef, 50 cents a pound; coffee and sugar, 50 cents a pound; meals. $1; lodging, to lie on the floor and furnish your own blanket. $1 per night. Then there are thousands going in there and coming out busted, and be ging their way back. Now you had better take Pritchard's advice, "That those who hav good homes had better stay there." This part of Montana has been wild. There are many men who hav mortgaged their homes for money, and are gone to the mines. All this Montana country is "dead flat." since the Northern Pacific Railroad was completed; our freight teams are gone; no work for laboring men; thousands of poor men out of work; farmers bankrupt. The railroad has been booming these mines for the money it brings, and every train is crowded with men going to these mines with scarce money enough to get there, and consequently they find themselvs in the rugged arctic region in a climate that they know nothing of, and poorly clad at that, to suffer, starve, and freeze to death. Now if you hav plenty of money to spend, and to come sight-seeing, make a trip to the mines in July or August, or go to the Yellowstone Park; but don't think of going to these mines to get rich; for one that will get rich a hundred will fail. Just received a letter from Dr. L. York, who is coming to Montana in July, and would like to receive letters from friends at various points. His address will be Salt Lake after May 10th. I hope the Liberals of Montana will giv him a cordial welcome.

DR. W. J. STOVER.

CALHOUN CO., MICH., April 30, 1884.

MR. EDITOR: Inclosed please find a criticism upon Mr. Beecher. [The article is in print under the head, "Is Beecher an Honest Man?"—ED. T. S.] Whatever doctrins he has hitherto taught and denied, he still tells people "it is neces- to believe something." He praises Mr. Ingersoll, who in turn praises Mr. Beecher, and would fain tell people what to believe. He would hav us believe that it is not quite time for us to cease paying 75 per cent on all that we buy for the benefit of some individuals and corporations, notwithstanding it is a gross violation of the Constitution. He would hav us believe in the political economy of the Republican party, which involves only the one question, how much the few may, with any degree of safety, rob from the many. Now I look upon politics and religion as the same hell in which men gnash their teeth, and belief in the creeds of political parties and of religion as the same trap to catch men and deprive them of their liberties. The story of St. Patrick driving the snakes out of Ireland and St. George destroying the dragon in England embody the same idea. It means that when they had firmly established belief in something, they had conquered the wisdom of the nations and deprived them of them of their liberties.

Mr. Spencer's article on "The Coming Slavery" is the true pabulum. I am anxious to know how Mr. Andrews can better his logic. I would be an independent sovereign state, delegating only what powers may be cheaper and safely exercised by another, and for the good of the body politic all alike, ignoring divine grace, which means special favors.

I am the only one who takes THE TRUTH SEEKER here now since Mr. Anderson and Dr. Howard are dead. But you must not jump to such hasty conclusions, as in a recent editorial, "that because a man has found the truth for himself, he cares for no one else." I am a photographer, depending upon the public for my living, yet I hav spoken my sentiments with boldness and firmness, and lost money by it. And I hav found to my cost that the Freemason elements are the worst enemies of THE TRUTH SEEKER. They drop it as a cat would a hot biscuit. But I hav some TRUTH SEEKERS out, even in the hands of church-members, and one of them told me frankly, "Well, sir, I hav had my doubts." Now I tell them that this is the royal road to progress. Don't believe what I say; believe nothing, not even the evidences of your own senses; but doubt, think, and reason.

The right way to stir up such places as this is for some fearless lecturer to strike them, even at a little sacrifice, as I hav done, at first, and by and by they will hav a highway through the wilderness, and the wilderness transformed into a golden harvest.

But I must not trespass longer upon your time, for I hav said more than I intended. My house is portable, and whether I go or stay I shall be an ardent friend of THE TRUTH SEEKER, its grand army of patrons, and its most worthy editor.

DENVER, IOWA, April 25, 1884.

MR. EDITOR: Although a Materialist, I am pleased to see Spiritualism discussed in a manly, intelligent manner in your paper. Every intelligent reader understands full well that abuse and denunciation are not arguments. I feel well convinced that the publication, week after week, of such letters as T. Winter writes is well calculated to disgust people with Materialism, and with the papers that publish his senseless and unmeasured denunciation of Spiritualists.

Nor do I believe the cause of Materialism or Spiritualism is to be particularly advanced by hiring one thought to be a leader to investigate either one or the other. Those who are accustomed to think for themselvs neither hav nor desire any leaders. What is the testimony of a former Materialist, who becomes convinced of the truth of Spiritualism, more than that of thousands of others? That which one has seen is no evidence to those who hav not seen it. Each must rely upon his own experience and observation. Though Mrs. Slenker may witness materialization, and become fully satisfied of the truth of Spiritualism, that cannot help my case, for her evidence is not mine; and were I disposed to accept mere ipse dixit, I should long ago hav swallowed all the isms in the world.

I hav seen things done by so-called mediums which I do not understand; but I cannot on that account jump at the conclusion that they were accomplished by the "spirits" of departed human beings. And I should be very glad to hav some of your cool, manly contributors, whether Spiritualists or Materialists, explain, if able, the means by which such things are accomplished.

In September, 1881, I went to Chicago, as a delegate to the N. L. L. Congress, accompanied by my wife and her stster, Mrs. A. N. Wood. We had been requested, by a Spiritualist friend, to call on one Mrs. Simpson, a medium in that city; and having an opportunity we sought out her address there, and visited her. About eleven in the morning we went with her into a room about 8 by 14, on the second floor. We were all three Materialists then, and are so still, but were resolved to make the best possible use of our senses to prevent imposition. At the east end of the room was a good-sized uncurtained window. On the north side of the room hung a picture representing some Indian. The only furniture in the room were four chairs and a so-called table, consisting of an unpainted pine plank, dressed on both sides, one and a half inches thick, about twelve inches wide, and three feet long supported by four round legs fastened in auger holes in said plank. Over the "table" was thrown a small colored tablecloth. The lower sash of the window was raised, and upon the window-sill was a common glass goblet, about one-third full of what I judged to be water, a few pieces of slate-pencils about the size of a kernel of wheat, and a small slate. There were two doors leading from the room—one at the west end, through which we had entered, and the other on the north side of the room near the east end, leading into another room. Both doors were closed.

We carefully examined the "table" and the cloth covering it, but could discover nothing about it calculated to deceive, or that it was other than what it purported to be. It stood square before the window, and about three feet therefrom. I took a chair at the south end of the table, my wife took one at my left, and Mrs. Wood on my right. Mrs. Simpson sat down near the side of the table, directly facing us, her right side to the table. She then took the slate, which was clean and free from any marks or writing, laid it upon the palm of her right hand, put a small piece of pencil thereon, raised the table-cloth with her left hand, and put the slate underneath, and held it against the underside of the table. I laid my ear upon the table, and could distinctly hear the pencil moving as if writing, dotting i's and crossing t's. The slate was then taken from under the table, when I read thereon the following: "Me like all the squaws and braves, and me do for them all me can." This was signed, "Ski."

Again the pencil was dropped upon the clean slate, and the goblet was set thereon over the pencil, and the whole was again put under the table, and held by the medium's right hand with the top of the goblet against the underside of the table. When taken out there was writing under the goblet, but the pencil was in the goblet.

Again the slate and goblet as before were held under the table, and when taken out there was in the goblet a large red pink, apparently just picked from the stem where it grew.

Again, Mrs. Simpson took a corner of the slate between the thumb and forefinger of her right hand, and Mrs. Wood with her left hand took hold of another corner in the same manner. They then held the slate under the table, some five or six inches from the table. Mrs. Simpson then laid her left hand upon the table and Mrs. Wood held her right hand thereon. Mrs. Simpson then let go the slate and took her hand from beneath the cloth, and took hold of the slate again with the cloth between it and her hand. She then took her hand away, when Mrs. Wood brought out the slate, with a fine, fresh, variegated dahlia thereon, apparently with dew on it, as it wet the slate slightly.

I hav made this letter longer than I intended, but could not well omit anything, as I wished to be particular in the descriptions.

SAN BERNARDINO, CAL., April 7, 1884.

MR. EDITOR: In a late New York paper I find this notice with the caption, "Notes on Ingersoll:"

"A fourth edition of that very interesting little volume called 'Notes on Ingersoll,' by Father Louis A. Lambert. As a complete answer to the most glaring blasphemies of the self-styled 'apostle of liberty,' this little work is calculated to do much good, and ought to get at least as wide a circulation as did Ingersoll's rude caricature of philosophy. The late Judge Jeremiah S. Black once undertook to answer Ingersoll. The North American Review for August, 1881, contained a wholesale attack on the Christian religion by Ingersoll, followed by a defense of Christianity by Judge Black.

"The literary and legal world were as interested as were religious people, for the two contestants were lawyers of recognized ability; and if one was witty the other was wise; and then the subject was of such universal importance. The opinion that Judge Black had the best of the argument seems to hav been shared by Ingersoll himself, for three months afterwards in the same Review appeared an article from him complaining of Judge Black's mode of defense, attacking both religion and the judge bitterly, and Judge Black was at the same time informed by the Review that it had no room for any reply from him to Ingersoll's attack. The readers of the Review did not know but Judge Black had acknowledged himself beaten, as no word of explanation was ever given them. It was through a card from Mr. Black in a Cincinnati journal, and widely copied by other journals, that the publie learned the truth, to the great discredit of the North American Review."

The fact of these "Notes on Ingersoll" already having attained to a fourth edition implies that the work is popular, at least with Catholic readers, and probably able.

I hav some Catholic neighbors who are becoming deeply interested in Freethought, and for their assistance and the benefit of Catholics in a similar condition—and there are many—I would request, as an old patron of THE TRUTH SEEKER, to be favored with a critical review, in the columns of THE TRUTH SEEKER, of Father Lambert's "Notes on Ingersoll." I hav not seen the work, but having been a Catholic, I think its animus, from a Catholic standpoint, is somewhat generally known to me—implicit faith and obedience in the implied and attributed mysterious verities of almighty God as held and taught by the one and only infallible and Catholic church; in the omnia exeunt in mysterium there is nothing the absolute ground of which is not a mystery; in the bonus vir sine Deo nemo est without a God it is impossible for man to be good (as, for instance, the saintly Anthony Comstock, the moral paragon of the Young Men's Christian Association, and the innumerable lecherous men of God of Mr. Billings's book; and compare, also, the Godly and Christian adulterous, hypocritical pastor of Plymouth and the editorial lying detracter of the religious Observer with the irreproachable character of the Infidel martyr of Freethought, the revered Mr. Bennett; and with the apostle of universal mental and political liberty, the immortal Thomas Paine); and, above all, a lively and an unquestioning belief in the Catholic church's dearest doctrin of Paul, the ophthalmic, visionary enthusiast, "est autem fides sperandarum substantia rerum, argumentum non conspectarum," now faith is the substance of things hoped for, the evidence of things not seen.

The metaphysics and casuistry of scholastic philosophy are but incidentally adjunctiv in the construction of the colossal pseudo science of theology—science falsely so-called—the foundation principles being really based on the assumed certainty of the Bible miracles, which, being absolutely devoid of fact or sufficient reason to establish the four essential ones—the miraculous birth of Christ, the raising of Lazarus from the dead, the resurrection and ascension of Christ—what folly to be everlastingly ding-donging into our ears the importance of the minor ones, and filling the world with dissertations, utterly incapable of proof, of their authenticity and efficacy—the harmless drinking of deadly poisons and handling of venomous serpents by the apostles and their priestly successors; the miraculously holy curativ properties of mineral wells and springs—medicinal waters of naturally transcendent virtues and efficacy being in abundance in many countries all over the world; the stigmata of St. Francis, and, more recently, the fresh bleeding ones of saintly peasant girls; scapulars, Agnus Deis, amulets, and talismans, and manual imposition in lieu of medical treatment as all-heal and preservativ panaceas in sickness and danger. And what argument is advanced and claimed as being all-sufficient support for this engrossing and bewildering superstition? Simply that "there is nothing impossible to Almighty God." But what is our knowledge of God? "All nature proclaims him," and "the heavens declare his handiwork," and, says Coleridge, "the truth the hardest to demonstrate is the one that of all others least needs to be demonstrated; that though there may be no conclusiv demonstration of a good, wise, loving, and personal God, there are so many convincing reasons for it, within and without—a grain of sand sufficing, and a whole universe at hand to echo the decision—the truth of which it is the least possible to prove, it is little less then impossible to believe." And thus runs, ad infinitum, this emotional, wonderful faith, continuing, as it ever has been, entirely and absolutely incapable of demonstration as a thing of God, as well as being utterly blind to even plausible reason. To be sure, the admission will not be withheld that "we are ever in the presence of an infinit and eternal energy, from which all things proceed." But as it is generally conceded by the ablest modern Biblical scholars that the claim of the inspiration of the scriptures is groundless; and m intained by the ablest scientists that the Mosaic cosmogony, or Bible account of creation, is inconsistent with natural facts and demonstrated science, and therefore impossible, mythical—there is no reliable or probable evidence that a supernatural revelation, as to beginning and ending, cause and effect, has ever been received by the human race; therefore, from all we are able to learn, with strict regard to truthfulness, Agnosticism unavoidably presents itself as necessarily the legitimate conclusion.

Having been a Catholic, as remarked, I continued steadfast in that creed till about the year 1850, when, after returning from a Fourth-of-July Paine celebration (two steamboats up the East River and Sound) on the Paine farm, at New Rochelle, I called at the office af the Beacon, and the Navigation School, in Franklin Hall, Franklin Square, N. Y., and procured from the editor of that Freethought publication, the teacher of the school and my Fourth Ward neighbor, Mr. Gilbert Vale, a copy of the great original creed-demolishing "Age of Reason," the perusal of which (then for the first time) completely staggered my ghostly visionary faith, and left it reeling, but not, however, entirely free from some spasmodic struggles, occasionally for re-invigoration and former ascendancy, till Mr. Bennett and the brave TRUTH SEEKER gave it the coup de pied of annihilation.

The above notice of Father Lambert's book has induced me to look up the North American Review for the months of August and November, 1881, containing, the first, Col. Ingersoll's and Judge Black's arguments, and the second, Col. Ingersoll's second paper; and after a close and attentiv re-reading I am constrained to remark that the judicially logical sledge-hammer blows of Judge Black make no convincing impression on a reader abreast with science and modern historical and biblical criticism, or, in other words, on an attentiv reader of THE TRUTH SEEKER. And in this respect Judge Black most glaringly betrays an inexcusable deficiency (one, however, being peculiar with the "faithful" might hav been anticipated), and because of the lack of this equipment, a correct understanding of the importance of scientific developments, and modern, historical, and biblical criticism—the logical. powerful blows of the great constitutional jurist are expended as impotently as the blows of a giant striking in the dark, while to such a reader (informed on these subjects) the arguments of Col. Ingersoll are irresistibly convincing. While exhibiting copious learning and the happiest argumentativ illustrations, there is a remarkably singular absence of any pedantic display. The whole is bewitchingly absorbing, combining, as it does, the incisiv logic of Junius, the burning sarcasm of Voltaire, and the delightfully calm, penetrativ reasoning and popular style of the immortal Paine. What has heretofore been considered the most abstruse subject in all literature, science, and philosophy is made easily comprehensible to ordinary capacity. In short, the abundance of the material, and its harmony with advanced science, giv to the whole argument, on the colonel's side, an easy, natural, and unlabored flow, by which it is at once rendered epigrammatic, attractiv, and demonstrativ.

This encounter of two of the most able and prominent citizens of the country recalls the memorable contest of Massachusetts's and South Carolina's champions, Hayne and Webster, for it is truly a war of giants; and it is as impossible to overrate the importance of the contestants as the issues involved in the controversy. As a victory in this contest, by the champion of religion, would be regarded as a vindication of all that the church has ever claimed—universal, absolute domination, mental and political, and especially as the triumph, being achieved by a legal Colossus and Democratic-Republican statesman of recognized ability and national reputation, the struggling cause of mental and political freedom of humanity would be regarded with suspicion, if not actually spurned, by the hosts now under the despotic yoke of the church, and the time of their deliverance, indefinit and remote. But by the overthrow of her arrogant pretensions, by the champion of humanity, the vast numbers of her wavering devotees will now take encouragement, and on liberation from the superstitious incubus of her debasing enthralment they will hail with ceaseless blessings the name of Ingersoll. For in this battle he has met the impetuous onslaught of the defiant Goliath, who, emboldened by an unfaltering trust in a supposed God, and with supercilious arrogance, vainly and sneeringly imagined that the triple-proof armor of his ghostly cause was impenetrable, and the victory triumphantly assured against the imputed empty, insignificant babble of freedom's champion "speaking an infinit deal of nothing." But the precision and deadly force of the sling of humanity's shepherd has humbled his arrogance, and completely discomfited his too confident army.

Col. Ingersoll conclusivly shows the unsoundness and often absurdity of the premises of the most material and essential propositions on which the Christian religion and theology are based and constructed. To untrammeled reason this of itself would be sufficient for rejection of the whole superstructure, being built on false premises, an insecure foundation. Untrammeled reason! Aye, there's the rub! From the presence of untrammeled reason, omnipotent deity of human grandeur, vanish theology and ecclesiasticism, the fell, ghostly fabries of the intellectual night of dark ages, as in the morning, nightly, noxious mists by the all-illuming radiance of the rising god of day. But the serpent superstitious error insidiously coiling himself around the "faithful" heart, and freedom of intellect being powerless in his deadly presence, both heart and soul are crushed by the consequent strangulation, and servilly crouch beneath the dictum of the uncompromisingly despotic "authority" of the church.

On the victorious monumental pillar of commemoration will be read, in all coming time, along with name of the conqueror, the expounder and establisher of reason, the inspired and ennobling inscription, born of true science and philosophy:

"Apart from moral conduct all that man thinks himself able to do, in order to be acceptable to God, is merely superstition and religious folly."

Our Susie.

I want to tell you to-day about my dear little niece and namesake, Susie.

It is not quite seven years ago since she first came into our home, a wee little cooing, crowing baby, and from the moment that she came she began to draw our love to herself. All babies are sweet and cunning, but our baby seemed to us the very sweetest and cunningest darling that ever drew the breath of life. Ah, how we kissed her and caressed her! How we watched the unfoldment of her mind—the development of her body, as it grew in grace and beauty! How we watched the fountain of light and love dancing in her lovely eyes! And how wonderful it was when her first little tooth appeared! And when she was able to sit alone, and hav playthings like other babies, we pleased ourselvs and her with all sorts of infantile toys.

By and by she began to stand on her feet, and I well remember the half frightened look in her eyes when she had learned to stand up alone. But presently she gained confidence, and by the aid of chairs and our hands she learned to step, and soon she was walking all about the room. She had long rides in her baby carriage, but oh, how delighted she was when she was old enough to walk! She would toddle along laughing, roll on the green grass, and then up again and run gleefully along like a happy, joyous bird.

Her voice was like sweetest music, and when she learned to talk it was a delight to listen to her chattering. And she learned to sing almost as soon as she could talk; yes, before she was able to frame ideas into words, she hummed the tunes of all the songs she heard.

Her songs still linger on my ear,
Her hands still thrill my heart,
The memory of her loving voice
Will nevermore depart.

Like all little ones, she was sometimes mischievous. One time she pulled up Lucy's choice flowers; she was about three years old then, I think.

"What made you do it?" I asked.

"Oh, I don't know," she said. "I suppose it was the mistiff [mischief] in me that did it."

Once when she wished to go to her "gammoo's," as she called her grandmother, Joe, the colored man who helped about the place, took her in the wheelbarrow, and brought her to her grandma's house. "I think Joe is so nice," said she, "to play he was a horse and drag me to my gammoo's. When he is old I will take care of him."

She was generous to a fault, and had, frequently, to be checked, for she would giv away anything that her friends or playmates wished for. She had a great many dollies, and one large "rag baby" that Henrietta made, and which seemed to outliv many a saw-dust dolly.

"It has had many hard knocks," said Susie, "but it stands the racket dreadful well!"

One Sunday a wounded dove dropped upon the lawn in front of the house. Susie pitied the poor little bleeding bird, and asked many questions concerning it. When it ceased to breathe, she said, "Why is it so still?"

"It is dead," I replied.

"Do folkses die like the dove?"

"Yes."

"It is sad, I think," she mused, "but then the dove can never be hurt any more."

She was passionately fond of flowers, and in flower time, she would always come with her hands full of loveliest blossoms. She liked to think of her friends being pure and sweet like the flowers. When she could find no flowers, she would gather bright leaves or grasses. I well remember a bouquet of daisies and ferns that she picked and arranged herself and brought to me. "I knew they would make you smile," she whispered; "flowers are smile makers!"

She was a very happy child. She would often say, "I am taking solid comfort now. We are all here together in solid happiness."

To her mother and father, she was a precious treasure, a most delightful and interesting companion, as, indeed, she was to me, and to all who came in close communion with her.

One day she had treated her kitten rather roughly in playing with it, and kitty ran away and hid, but, by and by, she came and nestled in Susie's lap, purring softly. "I think, mamma," said Susie, "that she has forgiven me!" By and by, she added sweetly, "And so must I forgiv those who are naughty to me, and be good to those who treat me badly, if anybody ever does."

She was, upon one occasion, reproved for speaking out when she was angry.

"And must I keep my madness in my mouth then?" she said.

"Yes," was the reply.

"But it is better not to keep it at all, but breathe it away in happy thoughts," she said, smiling.

She was very beautiful, was our Susie, beautiful physically, mentally, morally, in all ways a fair and sparkling jewel. She was so loving, too. She would pause from her play to put her arms around our neck, and say to each of her loved ones, "I love you, dear!" And, in some moment of great happiness, she would look up and say sweetly, "Ah, I am so happy, so happy."

Susie never went to school, but her mother taught her at home. She read fluently in the Fourth Reader, and was well advanced in arithmetic and geography. She took great pride in reading the daily newspapers, and was especially pleased with the stories in the Children's Corner. I sometimes read my stories to her before they were printed, and she was the best critic I ever had.

"When I am grown, I will write stories, too," she said, and I fondly hoped that her large ideality and deep insight into human nature would develop in that direction. But, alas! my hopes, plans, and wishes, every one of which centered in and around her, were doomed never to be realized.

There was a slight malformation in Susie's right hand, and, although she could use a pen or pencil very well, and had learned to write nicely, we thought it would be better for her if the two fingers that were partly joined together, should be separated. A surgical operation was decided upon, and the fingers were separated. The surgeons were skilled and anticipated no harmful result, and, for a few days, she seemed to be recovering, and, in a week, it was expected the wound would be healed. But it was not so to be. Diphtheria set in, and although all that love and the best medical skill could do was done, yet it was of no avail. Our darling, with her splendid talents, with all her grace and loveliness, with that sweet, affectionate nature, was doomed.

Patiently she suffered for two weeks, and then quietly fell asleep.

She had always been so healthy and activ, we never thought that she could die. Death was for us who were older, not for that sweet, rich, budding nature—so we thought. She was the only one, too, the only child, the only girl, and we felt we could not part with her.

My heart breaks with grief to-day, as I recall her gentle, loving ways.

When she was well, she would say, as often as she left me, "Good by, auntie! No one will hurt me! Don't disappear!"

To disappear was, to her, a very dreadful thing. Once, when she had been naughty, her mamma hid from her, and it made a great impression upon her tender mind. Ever afterward she used that expression to her dear ones, "Don't disappear!" And now she has disappeared; gone from our arms that held her so closely and so fondly. When I arrayed her dear little body for a long night of rest, I clasped the still form to my heart, and begged for one word to tell me where she had gone. But the eyes were closed; the dear lips that I had kissed so often moved not, and no sign escaped her to tell me whither she had fled. We had to lay the lovely casket that once inclosed an angel, a priceless pearl of rarest beauty, away in the cold ground. Tokens of love were showered upon her in her sickness, and bloomed around her after all was over. Her feet rested on a star of pansies, herself a bright and shining star, and the little mound to-day is covered and heaped with choicest buds and blossoms brought by her many friends, herself the fairest blossom of them all.

It seems but yesterday she came
With light and dancing feet,
And bathed my face in laughing glee,
With loving kisses sweet.

Shielded in helpful, tender arms,
Safe from every storm,
How could we think that death would touch
That lovely, blessed form?

How know that she so soon would fade,
So quick would float away,
Or that, to chill December blight,
Would change this blooming May?

In every plan, in every hope,
She held the chiefest place,
And every dream of life was bright,
Because of her dear face.

But, like some star in glory set,
She was too fair for earth;
A lovely bud of promis rare,
An angel from her birth.

We call her "lost," and yet, we know
She's safe from every ill;
No pain shall ever break her heart,
No tears her eyes shall fill.

This thought shall nerve our hearts to strength,
Since she is safe from blight,
Since never any harmful thing
Can hurt her spirit bright.

And while her memory we keep,
The fairest jewel yet,
May flowers of hope and peace entwine
These hours of sad regret.

I hav told you, dear children, about little Susie, because she loved the Children's Corner so well, and she loved those, who, from week to week, gather in that pleasant place; and I thought that I must tell you that one little darling had gone from our happy circle there. She would like to hav you read this little sketch, as brief and imperfect as it is, and to remember her in your hearts; and, best of all, she would be pleased to hav you cherish her memory as an inspiration to all good and noble deeds, to pure and elevating thoughts, to the making of this world brighter, better, and more beautiful for those who still remain in it.

Gladly would we hav kept our darling with us longer, but it was not so to be. She has gone away in all her sweet innocence and purity; gone from pain, sorrow, and trouble of every kind. Like the wounded dove that died from its hurt, she, as she said of it, can never be hurt any more. Her life was a bright, joyous, and happy one, too swiftly fleeting, but a song of joy as long as it lasted. We are better because she was with us so long as she was. We can never forget her, and time alone can soften the sharp pain of her removal from our midst. If that bright, intelligent mind continues in conscious existence, we shall some day see her again. Her little hands will be the first outstretched to greet us when the burdens of life become too great a weight. But if she has fallen into dreamless sleep forever, we are satisfied to sleep with her, for life would always hav a shadow in it, she being absent.

And now, we take up life's work again, seeking consolation for our loss in action, in doing good, in bringing joy to others, as Susie made joy and happiness for us.

RICHARD'S CROWN

HOW HE WON AND WORE IT.

This is a book of 300 pages, embodying the most graphic, vivid, and thrilling portrayal of Society Life as it now exists.

The third edition of this remarkable book has just been issued by its author, Mrs. Anna D. Weaver. It is a story of thrilling interest, thoroughly dramatic, pathetic, fascinating, forcible, and graphic. What "Uncle Tom's Cabin" was to the slavery question, "Richard's Crown" is to the cause agitating the masses of the people of to-day.

Printed in large, new type, on fine, heavy paper. Beautifully illustrated with eleven engravings, handsomely bound in cloth; title in gilt, embossed on the back and side of the book. Price, $1.50. For sale at this office.

Man.—Whence and Whither?

By R. B. Westbrook, D.D., LL.B.,
Author of "The Bible.—Whence and What?"

About all that can be said for the existence of God and the future life of man, is here pungently presented, with an incidental discussion of many collateral questions, from a rationalistic standpoint.

DAVID J. COTTER'S

BELT OF LIFE,

AND

"WILSONIA"

IMPROVED

Magnetic Garments.

312 MYRTLE AVE.,

BROOKLYN, N. Y.

For the Relief and Cure of All Forms of Disease in its Worst Stages.

Readers of THE TRUTH SEEKER, read the annexed letter from a well-known physician who attended the following remarkable case:

Mrs. L——, a lady residing in Brooklyn, E. D., for two year, suffered terribly with a uterine tumor; her attendant physician advised an operation, but having great aversion to the surgeon's knife, she would not submit to it; some friends having used my garments and been benefited thereby advised her to try them. About the middle of February, this year, a body set, as advised by myself, was purchased for her.

The following letter will show the results and prove the value of my improved appliances in all forms of disease:

MAY 2, 1884.

MR. D. J. COTTER, Dear Sir: Thinking you would like to know of the following, I notify you.

Mrs. L——, a patient of mine, had a uterine tumor of two years' standing and would not consent to an operation; some friends recommended her to use your MAGNETIC GARMENTS (a body set, I believe). Unbeknown to me she did purchase and wear them, for ten weeks, so she now informs me. Two days ago I was sent for to attend her and found the tumor had been expelled entire while standing, without pain or flow.

Have you met with anything of this kind before by the application of your garments? I should be glad to have some information on the point. Yours respectfully,

DR. A. R. PETTIT,
149 Tompkins ave., Brooklyn, N. Y.

COPY OF MY REPLY.

MAY 3, 1884.
312 Myrtle ave., Brooklyn, N. Y.

DR. A. R. PETTIT, Dear Sir: Your favor received. In reply I beg to say I have several such cases, some of many years' standing, cured by the use of my Garments I would much like to see the tumor mentioned in your letter, if in your possession, if you will name a time I can call upon you. I will then give you all the information possible respecting the above-mentioned cases, and, if necessary providing my patrons are willing, will place you in correspondence with them, or the physicians who attended them prior to the use of my Garments. I await your reply. Yours respectfully,

DAVID J. COTTER.

Dr. A. R. PETTIT having replied, I called upon him and saw the tumor; it was the fibrous tissue of a large one; all other matter seemed to have been absorbed (by the action of the Garments) before it was expelled. I fully satisfied him of other such cases by letters in my possession from parties cured and their physicians.

The above speaks for itself, as the full name and address of the physician is given, and I have a doubt but he will be pleased to satisfy any inquiring mind of the above facts. D. J. COTTER.

These garments are a decided improvement on anything of the kind ever offered, and only produced after many years of close study and scientific experiment.

Much depends upon the knowledge or how to apply such garments. Many persons have really good appliances to offer, but unless they are judiciously and scientifically applied they are valueless. Any person writing for pamphlet and information; by sending a full statement of their case, how long suffering, and all symptoms, would be advised free of cost, just what garment it would be necessary to use to effect a cure, price of same, etc. They are made to fit all parts of the body, easy of adjustment, and as comfortable to use as ordinary underwear; being well ventilated, they are cool, and, the infusion of magnetism into the system produces a cool, pleasant feeling in the hottest weather, and will cure any of the following forms of disease: RHEUMATISM, GOUT, LUMBAGO, PARALYSIS, NEURALGIA, DYSPEPSIA, LOCOMOTOR ATAXIA, SPINAL DISEASE, ASTHMA, BRONCHITIS, DROPSY, TUMORS, CANCERS, and others not necessary to mention, as I claim that disease in any and all of its forms originates from one primary cause, a breaking up of the Galvanic Nerves, preventing a flow of Odic or Vital force from the Medulla Oblongata at the base of the brain to various parts of the body (just as the severing of a telegraph wire would prevent the message being sent), the result being the iron particles in the blood become demagnetized; congestion and disease follow; if in the small of Back, Lumbago and Kidney trouble; in the shoulder, Rheumatism; in the Head, Nefralgia or Neuralgia, and so on in any part of the human organization. We have a thousand and one different names for disease, though produced by and through one source only, and it is by strengthening the Ganglionic Nerves, conserving the vital forces, and infusing magnetism into the system, I effect so many marvelous cures after all other means have failed.

REMARKABLE CURE OF PARALYSIS.

NOV. 13, 1883.

DAVID J. COTTER, Dear Sir: In reply to your inquiry as to the effects of the Garments sent me I am pleased to say the result has been astonishing to myself and friends. The first two pieces sent gave me such relief that I had great confidence of being entirely cured when I obtained the others, and I was not disappointed. My paralysis has entirely disappeared and I am altogether a changed woman, and it is only two weeks since I got the full set. I suffered very much with weakness in my chest and lungs. Now I can sing and talk as well as ever, also read aloud without the slightest difficulty. I can safely recommend the garments to any persons suffering as I was.

MRS. E. P. PLEASANTS,
Alderson, Monroe Co., West Va.

P. S.—My daughter has also found great relief from the use of your garments. See her note inclosed.

CURED OF NERVOUS PROSTRATION AND HYSTERIA.

DR. COTTER, Dear Sir: I am very happy to state that my general health has improved wonderfully since the application of your garments. From undergoing the operation to my eye my health had become fearfully impaired, until my attending physician feared for the results; but from the first ten days of wearing your garments I began to improve. I seemed to get new vitality, and with renewed health my sight got wonderfully better, until now I feel myself perfectly cured, and I am out of my physician's hands. I cannot feel too thankful for the benefit I have derived from your appliances and shall always bless the name of Dr. Cotter for his wonderful invention for curing disease without medicine.

Hoping thousands of others will be cured as I have been, I am, sir, Respectfully yours

MISS MARY C. BURTON,
Alderson, Monroe Co., West Va.

CURED OF ASTHMA.

FEB. 4, 1884.

DR. D. J. COTTER, Dear Sir: I had suffered with Asthma for years in its worst form, and never found anything to help me until I put on your Garments, in February, 1883. since then my Asthma has disappeared, and I have not been troubled about breathing in the least.

Money could not buy the Garments I have if I could not get more.

I forward you this letter hoping it may be the means of inducing some poor sufferer to use your health-giving appliances, Yours very respectfully.

The Books of the Sibyls.

Where are the books of the Sibyls
The high gods sent to men,
Writ upon leaves of marble
With what Eternal Pen?

The wise Cumæan Sibyl
Had not destroyed a line
Of those she brought to Tarquin,
The three that once were nine.

If the strong Powers had written
The reign of peace was near;
But the words were of swords—not plowshares,
And the prophecy austere.

Gone are the books of the Sibyls,
Sent down to earth in vain;
But others still more dolorous
In the hearts of Man remain!

A Snake Story.

Two moccasins once waged a battle,
And much they fought like human cattle;
At first they shook the warning rattle,
Hissing their ire in snakish prattle.

At length, enraged beyond all reason,
Each other's tail they fiercely seize on,
By suction and by "dint o' squeezin',"
To swallow each in proper season.

The waning circle now grows smaller,
With every squeeze and every "swaller,"
In size a saucer—now a dollar—
There cannot be much more to "foller."

The little circlet still keeps shrinking,
Their snakeships of each other drinking;
The little eyelet now seems winking.
And like a spark goes out a-blinking.

Now, Christian friends, I know full well,
You'll not believe the tale I tell;
But if your reasons you adduce,
Why you to it your faith refuse,
These very reasons may be told
Against the Bible tales of old.

An Interesting Discussion Revived.

Since the learned S. P. Andrews and the poetic Mr. Putnam hav apparently concluded their interesting articles on "What is Science?" and settled down to the bottom positions of their respectiv doctrins, I avail myself of the privilege of assuming to act as a general critic, and hope to discover to the readers of your paper what is the real animus of the writers, with such other matter as I hope will prove interesting to them.

Mr. Putnam's assumption is that matter is the only substance, and the only thing having endurance, while mind is the result of this moving material manifested by the changes of its various forms; and that the highest object attained by matter, as the result of natural processes, is the production of the most perfect material forms; that of necessity they are constantly changing and giving place to new and better forms which endure for a time only, but with constant elements of change; that any mind which may be exhibited by any of the higher forms of matter (such as man) is only the incidental result of the action on motion of changing material forms. Hence he assumes that matter is the real substance, while mind is nothing. To put it in a somewhat different shape, we might say the whole effort of nature, in all its wonderful manifestations of matter and conscious mind, is to produce as a result a sublime nothing, and then immediately pitch into the worn-out organic stock, and work it all over into something else by the addition of other elements, and finally, in the course of Mr Putnam's infinit circle, produce the same grand and inimitable nothing forever. He consoles himself and his mourners over the failure of life, and the evanescent state of mind, that some fragments of a man's mind may, by the fortuitous circumstances of history, be handed down to a succeeding posterity, and incorporated into the life of humanity as a temporary benefit, not to himself, but to everybody else. And this is the grand, central, inspiring, and unselfish idea of modern Materialism, to realize which it requires the quintessence of unselfish devotion to humanity—to enable it to eat, drink, and be happy, for to-morrow it dies.

If Mr. Putnam and his friends expect to convert the world from Christian superstition and intolerant bigotry, I fear it will require a long time to do it by his doctrins; and to succeed, it will be neccessary to produce some palpable evidence of his affirmations in regard to matter and mind. And by no means can he sustain his assertion that such are the legitimate teachings of science. The immortality which he is advocating, while every word of it is a truth as fars as it goes, falls far short of the kind of immortality which every one is seeking for himself. We may induce ourselvs to believe in various theories about life, because of our inability to explain nature from our standpoint; but it will never do to assume the question in dispute, nor hunt for the answer like a school-boy, and then work the great problem of life to suit it.

Mr. Andrews, on the other hand, has laboriously shown that there is an objectiv and a subjectiv world in man; that the subjectiv is the only conscious one; that it only knows, and by the process of begripping the external and internal sensations is mind manifested, and that accordingly the true process of classification of knowledge is a mental process, and the true scientific process; that outside of man and mind there is no knowledge. But the essential point of difference between himself and Mr. Putnam he has not attempted to offer any arguments upon. He has not offered a solitary argument to show that this conscious inner world would continue after the dissolution of the material form, man's organic body, has changed and passed away. Mr. Putnam does not disagree essentially on the question of the manner in which sensations are produced, and there is apparently no difference about the fact of what constitutes scientific knowledge; but while Mr. Putnam strikes out boldly, and fearlessly defines his materialistic philosophy, we find Mr. Andrews obscuring his position with a profusion of etymological phrases, intended to explain what are the five senses, and the universological characters in the form of circles, cubes, triangles, etc., to correspond with them. This is a matter of curiosity and study. But what becomes of Universology if Mr. Putnam s philosophy is true? And how much will it benefit Mr. Putnam's humanity if our advanced thinkers cannot comprehend it now?

The question is, Does Universology teach the immortality, or any conscious life in a future state of existence, based upon the life of this existence? And if so, what arguments has it to sustain such a position? Or does it, in its unlimited accommodation, teach both immortality and annihilation for man, as Mr. Putnam's philosophy attempts?

The subjectiv world, then, in which the outer or objectiv is analyzed, compared, and classified, is the mental world of man's organization, and its modes are the only and the true scientific process. All knowledge is, therefore, the result of classification, and must be a purely mental process.

The whole modus operandi of nature, according to this view of life, is by means of the organic forms of being and feeling, and the various changes of organic structure, which are constantly producing a more advanced form of matter in which to manifest conscious feeling or mind, which is nature's greatest and most important work; the better minds always manifesting in the most perfect forms of organization.

If there is any object at all in nature this must be it, because it is a universal result.

By the Materialist, the only thing accomplished by nature is the production of material forms, while the thing which perceives and knows of these forms is nothing, and dies with them.

MOTION, SENSATION, AND MIND.

All matter contains motion, from the heterogeneity of its elements. Homogeneity is but an assumption; we are bound, for all practical purposes, to take matter as we find it. The elementary conditions of matter always did and always will exist. The different elements of matter hav a motion peculiar to themselvs, when effected in different states and conditions, and the motion in matter is but the law or mode or effort to impart its motions and conditions to all other matter in contact. This law accounts for the everlasting commotion, changes, and forms of life in a material point of view.

The various motions of matter are subject to the law of sympathetic vibration, and are all recognized by the fine material elements constituting man's organism. He is made sensible of them in the same way that any matter is moved outside of himself, which givs him sensation or feeling. All matter outside of as well as within man has feeling, is moved, and responds accordingly. Every sense which man has, and there are at least seven, may be reduced to one sense—the sense of feeling; but the highest sense of all is the sense of conscious being, which man possesses in an eminent degree. The sense of sight, hearing, tasting, smelling, and feeling, heat and force, are all variations of conscious feeling. Some philosophers boast of only five senses, but they hav more sense than they are aware of. It is strange that anyone should doubt the sense of force or heat, when even a vegetable or tree knows how to grow straight.

Many of the senses are compound. When we hear a sound we locate it. So of seeing. I am something different from my body. I am as sure of this as that everything outside of me is something different. If it were not for this distinct ego I would glide into a confused state of mind in which I could not distinguish myself, and would be lost amongst a multiplicity of forms, so that, whatever comes in contact with me, I am affected thereby and made conscious of its and my own separate existence. I hav, therefore, the same evidence of my identi y that I hav of that which is outside of me.

These conditions of life and being are transmitted from generation to generation. The most important consideration at this point is, how did I become a conscious human being, feeling motion, sensation, and consciousness? It came about through the organization and ascending scale of development and by the laws of heredity. And here is seen that other law of life, viz., the progress and development of lower into higher forms of life. Let us look at this. Every human being originated from two germs, a male and a female germ, the union and motion of these originating a human organism by an orderly and natural process, by means of the life-giving and life-sustaining elements of matter contained in these germs, and by having transmitted into them the conscious principle of life, and the peculiarities of the parent progenitors. This does not necessitate the influx or association of a spirit independently of the developing germs into a human being, for the spirit is as much an inheritance from the parents as the body it inherits, and this accounts for the parental characteristics.

The new-born babe has a conscious life, and givs evidence of it the moment it takes its first gasp of air. It immediately satisfies its bodily wants; it feels the chilling blasts of its new conditions, and by an instinct of feeling, superior to the slow process of reasoning or thinking, it huddles close to the source of maternal comfort. This givs evidence of a consciousness superior to ordinary mental processes to begin with, and this is its inheritance. Therefore man's spirit is the resnlt of a dual inheritance.

The next important step in this inquiry is the fact that all forms of matter in nature are advancing to a higher condition. All lower forms are giving place to higher forms of life, and always hav been, from the past to this time, and will continue in the future. There are no exceptions of any account to this law.

It will be observed that all the organic structures and senses and their growth in this new creature took place in a world where, by the necessity of the case, they could not be brought into use, where no exercise of such organs could be made, and where no direct action could impress these senses The babe had feet and limbs, hands and arms, and body developed in a state of being where they could not be used. See its delicate eyes, ears, the olfactory apparatus. The eyes formed in total darkness, not a ray of light to help on in the development, except those first received by the mother, and transmitted by impress upon this being, a purely unconscious process. Then its delicate ears, fully formed in a world so silent that even the throbbing of the maternal breast must hav been as still as death. In short, every element of organic life and being was transmitted by means of that umbilical attachment and by which formation took place, not for that abode, but to be used in another; and in order to effect this these life elements constituted a conscious entity similar to its progenitors. This is as true in regard to a human life as it is in the division and growth of the cells in protoplasmic life, and the one depends as much upon a germ or germs as the other. It shows that nature is constantly doing work in one stage of life which is to be progressed and utilized in a higher state.

The Materialist asserts that all this seeming effort of nature is but the production of the best physical forms of organic matter, and that although the human consciousness and mind is constantly advancing and growing and accumulating, even while the body it inhabits may be changing and decaying, yet at death of the body all the grand and stupendous images of thought must vanish like the mist before the morning rays, which is asserting that when nature has done her best she makes her greatest failure.

It is evident, then, that all this fine speculation and theorizing from a human point of view leads us directly and squarely against an impenetrable wall of doubt and uncertainty, which we cannot surmount by any human aid, nor penetrate with human sight. And just at this human terminus against which all efforts dash themselvs in vain, may be heard faint sounds and slight motions that indicate a solution of the difficult problem for those who will patiently listen and candidly investigate them.

The man who says he can see as deep into a millstone as the one who picks it is the most likely one to be mistaken.

There may be many facts and analogies in nature that will lead to both solutions of this question, but my word for it, there is but one direct way, which is to investigate all the phenomena accessible in our present time, and thereby undeceive ourselvs about what can and what cannot be done by nature.

The true solution may be had in the human intelligence conveyed by modern Spiritualism, and those who are too proud or too set in their egotism may contend and grapple and die in the struggle, but will never realize the truth which, according to the production of things around us, is tending to things above us. We were developed in a previous world so as to inhabit this, and are developing in this to inhabit a much higher and better one in a more advanced condition, and thus is nature ever bringing higher things from lower ones.

"Ingersoll says that a man who makes his family happy in this world can't be damned in the next."—Boston Journal, April 28th.

Well said! Does he mean to be understood that a woman who makes her family happy can be damned?

"The Methodist Recorder says that the Wesleyan body lose as many members every quarter as were saved on the day of pentecost. In illustration of this, it states that for the past three years the addition to the membership has been a thousand a week—162,599 all told. But the net increase is only 30,407. Or in another form, of every ten gained, seven are lost, one dies, and two only remain to represent the increase."—Boston Journal, May 3d.

Encouraging! and yet quite recently one of their clergymen boasted over Col. Ingersoll's assertion, "Orthodox religion is dying out in the civilized world," "Yes, at the rate that we are building a new Methodist church every day in the year." Churches increasing in advance of membership! Out of every ten converted, seven are lost, one dies, and two remain for God. What a falling from grace! Will Methodist Recorder please report their destiny?

Rev. Minot J. Savage's Easter sermon is a marvel in itself. It contains so many historical facts, sound deductions, and candid admissions both for and against ancient and modern religions, Spiritualism included, that it would be well if it could be printed entire in a tract as a model sermon, not only for the orthodox clergy, but for every believer, unbeliever, and would-be believer in modern Spiritualism. Such a summer-land as he depicts and hopes for would not be a bad exchange from this. I wish every one could read the sermon.

His "Virgin Mary" in answer to Boston Pilot and Post in THE TRUTH SEEKER, May 3d, is a gem. All honor to Minot J. Savage.

Yes, we hav been defeated in our Massachusetts House, 62 to 75, that "disbelief in God shall not effect the credibility of witnesses." But we shall get it yet. "Maryland Intolerance," "Taxing Church Property," "Religious Test of Jurors," and the "Saving the Missionary System of Christianity," make a tremendous quartet of subjects in May 3d TRUTH SEEKER, which, with "Editorial Notes," must, by the Liberals, be kept before the people until not a vestige of church power over the state remains. Agitate, then, "bretheren," agitate! and "sisters" be not in the rear in this great work of emancipating the world from the tyranny of superstition, priestcraft, and moral deception, which blinds to the reception of truth. D. M. BENNETT'S LAST WORK.

A TRUTH SEEKER

Around the World.

FOUR LARGE VOLUMES.

With a steel plate engraving of the author in Vol. I. and each volume illustrated with forty-seven cuts.

BY D. M. BENNETT,

Late editor of THE TRUTH SEEKER, author of "A Truth Seeker in Europe," "Gods and Religions of Ancient and Modern Times," "The World's Sages, Thinkers, and Reformers," "Champions of the Church," etc., etc.

Handsomely bound in red cloth, $6.50; in leather, red edges, $9.50; in morocco, gilt edges, $10.50.

Readers of THE TRUTH SEEKER know the circumstances under which this work was written. The last words penned by the great author were for the fourth volume which was nearly completed at his death, and which will now contain an accounf of his world-lamented death and burial. Mr. Bennett was a very patient and faithful chronicler of the habits and customs of the different peoples of the many places he visited. The every-day life of all nations is laid before the reader by one who has visited them and beheld them with his own eyes. Particular attention is paid to the progress of Freethought in the various countries he visited, and the morality of so-called pagan nations is contrasted with the morality of Christian countries, much to the detriment of the latter The work is a

Freethinker's History of the World.

This work and "A TRUTH SEEKER IN EUROPE" should be in every Liberal's library Besides its intrinsic worth it is a memento of one of the greatest Freethinkers he world has known—of one who ranks with Voltaire and Paine in the force and clearness of his writings.

TESTIMONIALS:

Read the following testimonials, and be convinced our claims are correct in every particular and that your ailments can be eradicated without the aid of MEDICIN. THESE APPLIANCES ARE THE ACME OF PERFECTION:

Remarkable Cure of Paralysis in One Week.

CINCINNATI, Dec. 19, 1882.

DR. L. TENNEY—Dear Sir: As I feel greatly indebted to you for the benefit I hav received from your treatment, and the use of your Magnetic appliances, I can say without hesitation to those afflicted as I hav been that the effect was simply marvelous. Two weeks ago I was stricken with paralysis in my right arm and could not use it at all, but after wearing a suit of your MAGNETIC CLOTHING for one week, can use it quite as well as ever. I hav also been troubled with Dyspepsia and Kidney Complaint for a number of years, from which I hav suffered intensely, and, although doctoring all the time, never found but temporary relief. Since putting on your appliances I hav experienced great benefit, and if I improve as rapidly as I hav in the past two weeks, will soon be well. I would, therefore, recommend to those suffering as I hav your Magnetic appliances as the only means of effecting a sure cure. Yours respectfully,

WM. H. CLEMMER,
No. 80 Eastern avenue.

Remember that the same appliances which will effect a cure in a case of Paralysis will at the same time eradicate CATARRH or DYSPEPSIA in the same patient. We do not, like the Old School Physician, change medicins every day until, after dosing the patient almost to death, he may possibly strike something (if he is very skilful) that brings relief for the time being.

Neuralgia of the Heart of Six Years Standing Cured in Three Weeks.

SHULLSBURG, WIS., Dec. 11, 1882.

DR. L. TENNEY—Dear Sir: After wearing one of your MAGNETIC VESTS for about three weeks, I was entirely cured of Neuralgia of the Heart and Side, which had been a source of misery to me for the last six years. I had tried numerous remedies before without benefit, but as soon as I put on the MAGNETIC VEST I got relief instantly. With unbounded gratitude, I remain

Yours respectfully,
H. A. BROWN.

Ladies, read the following testimony from a lady who had been under drug treatment for eight years with nervous prostration and female weakness:

OSBORN, O., Dec. 15, 1882.

DR. L. TENNEY: Your letter just received; also the Clothing on Tuesday last. Fitted perfectly. FELT BETTER FROM THE FIRST HOUR I HAD THEM ON. Am not joking, and if I improve as rapidly as I hav since Tuesday, will soon be well. Will report again soon. Respectfully yours, E. J. K.

This lady reports herself entirely cured in less than six weeks after putting on the garments, and, although in bed, unable to get out, when applied, she nevertheless was able to ride twenty miles in two days after the application. The lady's name can be had upon application at this office, by any-one desiring to communicate with her.

Ladies, read the following testimony from a lady who had been suffering for two years with an Ovarian Tumor, and who had been told that nothing but the knife would save her life, and the chances were as 9 to 1 against recovery. In four months' time she is perfectly well, and has not taken a dose of medicin since putting on the appliances. Consult us when your physician tells you he can do nothinog for you; it will pay you.

SHULLSBURG, WIS., November 19, 1882.

DR. L. TENNEY, Dear Sir: About two years ago my health began to fail me; I became nervous, lost all desire for food, and, in fact, began to fail rapidly, so that I became alarmed and consulted several physicians of St. Louis, at which place I was then stopping, all of whom declared that I had an Ovarian Tumor, and that the only thing that would save my life would be the knife. About six months ago I grew rapidly worse, and had about made up my mind to take the only course that seemed left to me, and submit to an operation, when my attention was called to the Eureka Magnetic Appliances. As a drowning man will catch at a straw, so did I catch at this faint hope of a cure. Four months ago I purchased a suit of your appliances. From the very first I felt invigorated, the tumor, which had extended entirely across my abdomen, began to decrease, my pains became less from day to day, until now I am as well as I ever was in my life. Since putting on the appliances I hav not taken a single dose of medicin. My bowels, which before were constipated, are now regular. I would therefore cheerfully recommend them to anyone suffering as I hav, believing that they will do all and more than you claim for them. I remain,

Gratefully yours, MRS. MARY J. STEWART.

Remember that these appliances are not worn next the skin, but over the under-garment, and, unlike all other appliances in the market, they impart no shocks and leaves no sores.

If you are uncertain as to what would best suit your case send us word stating symptoms, and we will advise you what would be best suited to treat you. While our appliances are offered at less than one-third of what others are selling worthless appliances for, yet we will guarantee that the magnetic quality is a hundred fold superior to any other appliance ever offered the public, and will outlast the garments themselvs. Every magnet is put through a particular process, and hav raised five times their own weight six months after being magnetized, while not a single appliance in the market will attract the smallest particle of iron, the majority of such worthless appliances having so-called magnets made of material no better than hoop-iron, and not capable of retaining magnetism for a moment. All of our garments are made from the very best material for the purpose, and will outlast any and all other garments now before the public. Every magnet is arranged in the garments upon scientific principles, and not haphazard as in all the others. We offer you therefore

The Only Scientific Magnetic Appliance Ever Constructed.

And challenge comparison with any of the so-called magnetic garments now offered under that head. At the same time the application of labor-saving machinery in our manufacture enables us to offer them about

ONE-THIRD THE PRICE HERETOFORE CHARGED,

Gems of Thought.

BE assured it is far wiser to exercise to the fullest extent the powers and abilities which you possess, and to use the means within your reach, than to call upon imaginary beings and to look for help to those whom you know nothing of. Courage and determination can accomplish much, while timidity and irresolution must always prove failures.—D. M. Bennett.

YET we must confess that there is evil in human nature. We know that a certain thing is right, and yet there is the colossal selfishness of our nature which stands up in arms against us and seeks to corrupt our reason. There is a constant conflict against this enemy of ours; and if Liberalism means anything, it means a new assault upon the old, to bring new controversies into the conflict. Think of the story of Orpheus in the Greek mythology, who descended into the nether world in search of his wife, but failed of his object, because he was selfish, because in that region of darkness and death his heart shrank, and he thought of return to the upper life. Whoever dares to take up conflict with the powers of darkness in the human heart must not greatly value his life, but must go prepared to face difficulties, achieve his object, and secure victory for his cause. —Felix Adler.

IT is not the book in the quiet room that interests you so much as the busy ways of the world, the commercial interests of man, or, it may be, some mechanical craft to which your thoughts are ever turning, and your hearts inclining. How constantly are such differences observed in boys! Scholastic tasks weary and stupefy some who are all alert as soon as the unwelcome pressure is lifted from their minds, and their energies are allowed their natural play. Their aptitude is not for classic lore; their delight is not in love at all, but in activ work of some kind, the interest of which is of an every-day practical character.—Principal Tullock.

MAKE me feel the wild pulsation that I felt before the strife,
When I heard my days before me, and the tumult of my life;

Yearning for the large excitement that the coming years would yield,
Eager-hearted as a boy when first he leaves his father's field,

And at night along the dusky highway near and nearer drawn,
Sees in heaven the light of London, flaring like a dreary dawn;

And his spirit leaps within him, to be gone before him then,
Underneath the light he looks at, in among the throngs of men;

Men, my brothers, men the workers, ever reaping something new,
That which they hav done but earnest of the things that they shall do.

—Tennyson's Locksley Hall.

'TIS well! from this day forward we shall know
That in our ourselvs our safety must be sought;
That by our own right hands it must be wrought;
That we must stand unpropped, or be laid low.
O dastard whom such foretaste doth not cheer!
We shall exult, if they who rule the land
Be men who hold its many blessings dear,
Wise upright, valiant, not a servil band
Who are to judge of danger which they fear,
And honor which they do not understand.

—Wordsworth's Sonnets.

THOSE who ridicule vulgar superstitions, and expose the folly of particular regards to meats, days, places, pictures, apparel, hav an easy task; while they consider all the qualities and relations of the objects and discover no adequate cause for that affection or antipathy, veneration or horror, which hav so mighty an influence over a considerable part of mankind. A Syrian would hav starved rather than taste pigeon; an Egyptian would not hav approached bacon; but if these species of food be examined by the senses of sight, smell, or taste, or be scrutinized by the sciences of chemistry, medicin, or physics, no difference is ever found between them and any other species, nor can that precise circumstance be pitched on, which may afford a just foundation for the religious passion. A fowl on Thursday is lawful food; on Friday, abominable; eggs in this house and in this diocese are permitted during Lent; a hundred paces farther, to eat them is a damnable sin. This earth or building, yesterday, was profane; to-day, by the muttering of certain words, it has become holy and sacred. Such reflections as these, in the mouth of a philosopher, one may safely say, are too obvious to hav any influence, because they must always, to every man, occur at first sight; and where they prevail not of themselvs, they are surely obstructed by education, prejudice, and passion, not by ignorance or mistake.—Hume's Essays.

IT is the highest merit of our educational system that it puts into the hands of every teacher a means by which he can awaken in the youthful mind a craving which will refuse to be satisfied with the scanty pabulum the common school affords. It would be well if every journal of influence would strive to plant larger ideas of education in the minds of parents, and to evoke loftier aspirations in the minds of children, instead of belittling its importance in the eyes of the latter, and encouraging the former to begrudge the necessary expenses.—Toronto Globe.

MEN exist for the sake of one another. Teach them, then, or bear with them.—Antoninus.

A PETITION FOR STATE SECULARIZATION.

To the Honorable Senators and Members of the House of Representatives of the United States Congress:

A republican form of government being based on liberty, equality, and fraternity, as both means and end, involves the separation of Church and State, whose union is the worst form of class-legislation and the most infallible sign of arbitrary power. A house divided against itself cannot stand. The institutions of this Commonwealth should be made homogeneous throughout. Impartial protection of all citizens in their equal rights and liberties, by encouraging the free movement of mind, promotes the establishment of truth in whatever direction. Any infringement by government of this absolute equality of its citizens is the parent of manifold evil, a national crime committed against that natural "justice" which, as the Constitution declares, this government was founded to "establish."

And yet, though the first amendment to the Constitution of the United States says, "Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion or prohibiting the free exercise thereof," there does exist a union of Church and State, which gives to Christianity moral and material aid, and so proscribes other religions and forms of belief and unbelief, while taxing these also for the support of that special religion.

The ways in which this old alliance between Church and State still survives among us are:

1. Recognition of God and Christianity in State Constitutions.
2. Exemption of Church property from taxation.
3. Appropriations of public money for sectarian purposes.
4. Religious exercises, as the reading of the Bible, etc., in the public schools.
5. Laws enforcing the observance of the Sabbath on the authority of the Bible.
6. Religious test-oaths in courts of justice and on instalment into office.
7. Chaplaincies in the Legislature, the Army, and the Navy.
8. Fast and Thanksgiving Proclamations, which contain theological ideas that may or may not be acceptable to the citizen.

The necessity for this separation of Church and State is more apparent now than ever before, because of the still greater diversity of religious beliefs, the many forms of dissent from the religion which receives State patronage, and the growing signs of sectarian strife and ambition in the arena of politics. And emphasis needs to be given to the fact that the union of Church and State is a great hindrance to the employment of right methods in dealing with many questions of reform now demanding attention. And most essential is it at all times, and especially in the present, in order to secure for the law its due respect and observance, that the people's representatives should exhibit the strictest fidelity to their trusts by following the law in its letter and spirit.

Your petitioners, therefore, pray that immediate action be taken by the law-making power to bring into harmony the theory and practice of our government in making the following principle a part of the fundamental law of the land by amendment to the United States Constitution:

The total separation of Church and State, by prohibiting Congress or any State, County, Municipality, or Township from enacting any law that favors religion in any of the eight ways specified, or in any other way, or prohibits the free exercise thereof.

Odds and Ends.

THE way of the transgressor is—Canada.

A RECENT scientific theory is to the effect that it is possible under certain conditions to hear color. We are very glad to know this, because when we are walking around at night when it is dark, and we hav new clothes on, it will be gratifying to hear the green paint that has just been put on our enslaver's front stoop.

THE sugar flows out of the maple,
The blossom is white on the limb,
The fence wears the bill of the circus,
The boys are beginning to swim;
Hotels at the seaside and mountains
To advertise now do not fail,
And the ball breaks the first-baseman's fingers,
Or rips off a nail.

"NOW, brudders an' sistahs, I will now take up a collection fur de preacher," said the colored minister to his congregation a few nights ago. "An' I 'spec'fully' advise you ter not put no buttons in de conterbution hat, as I is goin' roun' myse'f, an' will take a list of de button membahs of dis congergation an' make them de subjec' ob my sermon de naix meetin'. Close that doah, dar."

SOON will the merry picnic days
In season roll around,
When, to escape the sun's fierce rays,
We'll seek the shaded ground,
Where ants hav a peculiar knack
Of wandering from their bed
And marching up a fellow's back
With a slow and measured tread.

OUR esteemed agricultural uncle, The Rural New Yorker, published a cut called "A Rabbit-Tight Fence." If there is anything that fills our souls with chaste and lovely music, it is a good fence-scape. But now we should be happy to see our E. C. bring out a picture of a fence through which a cow cannot crawl, over which two women cannot jaw back at each other, or a base-ball fly and go through your window.

"How do you like the new minister, Mary?" "I think he's just too sweet." "Preaches eloquent sermons?" "I don't know; our pew's too far back to hear well, but he called the other evening while pa and ma were away, and said he was going to restore one of the customs of the earlier church." "Did he giv you any idea of what it was?" "Oh, yes; he gave it to me several times." "What did he call it?" "The holy kiss."

"EDGAR darling,
Precious creature!
You're so sweet
I want to eat yer!"

"O Laurie, my own!
O glorious fate,
To be the Poe—
Et-Laurie-ate."

"ARE you still a member of the Temple Baptist church?" "Yes," she answered, "but it's very pokey, and I'm getting awfully tired of it." "Tired of it! You surprise me!" "Do I? Then you can't imagin what it is. In Mrs. Sprawl's church they're trying the clergyman for bigamy; at Mrs. Chizzleton's there's a jolly row among the deacons; Mr. Jorkins tells me a big scandal is brewing in their congregation, and unless something exciting happens in our church pretty soon, I know I shall hav to attend divine worship somewhere else."

ON one of the southern railroads there is a station called "Sawyer." Lately a newly married couple boarded the train, and were very loving indeed The brakeman noticed the gushing groom kiss the bride about two hundred times, but maintained a serene quiet. Finally the station in question was reached, and just after the whistle sounded the groom gave the bride a rousing smack on the lip, and the brakeman opened the door and shouted: "Sawyer! Sawyer!" "What's that?" responded the groom, looking over his shoulder at the brakeman. "Sawyer," replied the brakeman. "Well, I don't care a d— if you did; she's my wife."

GRANDPA likes to kiss wee Sallie.
She says no;
Says his whiskers, thicky and bushy,
Prick her so.
Grandpa's head is smooth and shiny
On the top.
Where the hair began to thin and
Wouldn't stop.
Grandpa kisses; Sallie questions,
So 'tis said,
"Grandpa, why not put your whiskers
On your head?"

DURING the overflow, just as the water was creeping up into the loft of a cabin, an old negro man, dropped on his knees, clasped his hands and prayed: "O Lawd, I'd jes like ter know what I'se eber done to desarbe all dis heah punishment. Lawd, ef yar sarvant hab eber tuck nothin' what didn't 'long ter him, an' he's afraid dat he hab, he's mighty sorry for hit. Water am all right, Lawd, but too much eben o' a good thing makes a man powerful sick." Just then Col. Milridge, who owned the plantation, came in a boat, and hearing the old negro, climbed noiselessly on to the roof. "Lawd, I'se tried ter be hones' an—" "Didn't you steal Milridge's hogs?" asked the colonel in a deep voice. "What's dat, Lawd?' in tones of agitation. "You know what I said. Didn't you steal Milridge's hogs?" "Lawd, come ter think er'bout it, bl'ebe I did sorter take holter one." "Old man, there is no use in lying to me. I hav been watching you for a long time, and I hav decided to punish you according to crime." "O Lawd, ef yer'll jes' let me off dis time, I neber will do nothin' else ter 'zerb punishment. I 'knowledges dat I'se de bigges' thief in de community, an' yer sarvint crabes pardon." The colonel began to laugh and the old man catching sight of him, said, "I sees yer up dar, colonel. I knowed it wuz yerse'f all de time. I never stold no hogs nor nuffin' else," climbing out on the roof. "Bless de Lawd, colonel, yer boat am floated erway. Uh, huh. Dat's whut yer gits fur tryin' ter ack de Lawd."—Arkansas Traveler.

THE woman suffrage question is to receive the expression of the legal voters of Oregon at the June election.

CUMMOO SULEIMAN, a wealthy citizen of Bombay, India, is soon to build and endow in that city a dispensary for women where female physicians will be in attendance.

ONLY a third of the ministers now assembled at the Methodist General Conference are in favor of allowing women to preach. Methodism, it appears, is a survival of puritanism into which new ideas creep slowly—very slowly.

THE surplus in the United States treasury over the national expenditures was $37,000,000 in 1860. It was only $2,000,000 in 1874; in 1881 it was over $100,000,000; in 1882, over $145,000,000, and in 1883 it was $133,000,000. This givs a per capita wealth of $2.66.

THE directors of the Chicago Driving Park hav unanimously decided to hav both running and trotting meetings on Sundays during the coming summer season. No pools will be sold or gambling in any shape allowed. Neither will their be any whisky sold. The idea is simply to afford the masses an opportunity to witness good racing on the only day they can affort to take the holiday.

AT a recent vestry meeting at St. Ethelbuga, Bishopsgate, in London, one of the speakers complained that, although the rector of the parish is in receipt of an income of £1,065 a year, his duties are entirely delegated to a curate, who receives an annual stipend of £140 only. It was stated that since the legal contest between the parish and the rector, on the subject of ritualistic practices, which ended in a victory for the church wardens, seven years since, the rector had not been seen in the parish. But he earns his money as fully now as when he officiated every Sunday.

THE new lecture by Col. Ingersoll, entitled, "Orthodoxy Dying," is creating a profound impression at the East. The great Agnostic especially assails in his own incomparable style the new and "improved" Congregational creed, and lays bare its absurdities and superstitions. The lecture has been published in full in a number of the leading dailies, and owing to the extraordinary demand for it, THE TRUTH SEEKER, though publishing it some time ago, was compelled to republish it in the issue of week before last. The blood-stained old temple of orthodoxy is tottering, and its sins and iniquities glare hideously under the electric light of Agnosticism.—The Universe.

WHEN the subscription list for the erection of the Garibaldi monument was opened, the Catholic community at Loreto, consenting for the moment to forget Garibaldi's anti-clericalism, and looking at him only as a great patriot, contributed toward the carrying out of the scheme. All went well until the final small details concerning the inscription, etc., came to be settled, when the religious subscribers were shocked to learn that the committee had decided to engrave on the base of the statue a denunciation of Christianity in general, and of the belief in the famous Loreto "manifestations" in particular. The government promptly vetoed the inscription.

THE Monmouth Republican says that a New Yorker rented a cottage in Asbury Park in the latter part of April, and expected to take his family there about May first, but an incident that happened one Sunday caused him to change his mind and break his lease. He was walking down Main street about when the train from New York passed the station, and continued on its travels without stopping at the Park. The New Yorker opened his eyes with astonishment, when he was told by a gentleman that trains were not allowed to stop at the station on Sunday. "Very well," he said, "this is a big country, but this portion of the United States is too small to hold me, and I'll locate for the summer in a more civilized part of the globe!" And he will, for he went up to the agent on Monday and had his lease cancelled.

ANCIENT ruins which surpass anything of the kind yet discovered on the American continent hav been found at Sonora, about four leagues southeast of Magdalena, Mexico. There is one pyramid which has a base of 4,350 feet, and rises to a hight of 750 feet. It has a winding roadway from the bottom leading by an easy grade to the top, wide enough for carriages to pass over, which is many miles in length. On the sides of this mountain a people of an unknown age hav cut hundreds upon hundreds of rooms from 5x10 to 16 or 18 feet square. These rooms are cut out of solid stone, and so even and true are the walls, floor, and ceiling, so plumb and level, as to defy variation. There are no windows in the rooms, and but one entrance, which is always from the top. The rooms are 8 feet high from floor to ceiling. On the walls are numerous hieroglyphics and representations of human forms, with feet and hands of human beings cut in the stone in different places.

THE lottery, as a means of raising revenue for church purposes, lingers as a survival in the province of Quebec. In Canada the lottery is illegal, unless when utilized for church purposes; and it is a mine which different denominations work to a greater or less extent. By the church of Rome, in Quebec, it is made the means of raising considerable sums of money. But the growing objection to the lottery, which has put an end to it as a means of raising revenue for state purposes, in most countries is being gradually extended to it as a source of church revenue. The rivalries of denominations do not tend to weaken the force of the denunciation. A bill now before the legislature of the province to incorporate "The Grand Colonization Lottery," in which the drawings may be for $1,000,000 each, is creating a lively discussion. Lotteries are denounced in the bulls as immoral, and strong advocates of provincial autonomy call on the federal government to veto the bill should it pass the local legislature Its defenders deny the general proposition that lotteries are immoral. The secular journals, published in the French language, say that in a question of morals it is for the church to decide, and that the church has never condemned lotteries as such, but has rather encouraged them when, as in this case, their objects are laudable. The declared objects of this bill are the erection and maintenance of churches and religious institutions, the settlement of wild lands in the province, the "promotion of education and morality," and the establishment of villages and parishes in parts of the country not now settled. At the head of the proposed company is Father Labelle.

GEORGE ELIOT'S opinion of the author of "Night Thoughts" is expressed as follows: "He is equally impressed with the momentousness of death and burial fees; he languishes at once for immortal life and for 'livings;' he has a fervid attachment to patrons in general, but, on the whole, prefers the Almighty. He will teach, with something more than official conviction, the nothingness of earthly things; and he will feel something more than private disgust if his meritorious efforts in directing men's attention to another world are not rewarded by substantial preferment in this. His secular man believes in cambric bands and silk stockings as characteristic attire for 'an ornament of religion and virtue;' hopes, courtiers will never forget to copy Sir Robert Walpole; and writes begging letters to the king's mistress. His spiritual man recognizes no motivs more familiar than Golgotha and 'the skies;' it walks in graveyards, or it soars among the stars. His religion exhausts itself in ejaculations and rebukes, and knows no medium between the ecstatic and the sententious. If it were not for the prospect of immortality, he considers it would be wise and agreeable to be indecent, or to murder one's father; and, heaven apart, it would be extremely irrational in any man not to be a knave. Man, he thinks, is a compound of the angel and the brute; the brute is to be humbled by being reminded of its 'relation to the stalls,' and frightened into moderation by the contemplation of deathbeds and skulls; the angel is to be developed by vituperating this world and exalting the next; and by this double process you get the Christian—"the highest style of man." With all this, our newmade divine is an unmistakable poet. To a clay compounded chiefly of the worldling and the rhetorican, there is added a real spark of Promethean fire. He will one day clothe his apostrophes and objurgations, his astronomical religion and his charnel-house morality, in lasting verse, which will stand, like a Juggernaut made of gold and jewels, at once magnificent and repulsiv; for this divine is Edward Young, the future author of the 'Night' Thoughts.'" Reviewing the book in which the foregoing appears, the Tribune says: "That the author's estimate of Young's personal character and the moral spirit of his religious poetry was just and discriminating, requires no extended argument. The 'Night Thoughts' was not the work of one who in any strict sense could be called a religious teacher."

THE Presbyterian General Assembly, after long discussion, adopted the following resolution: "That inasmuch as prominent among the forms of Sabbath desecration prevalent in our times are those to which many railroad and steamboat companies and publishers of Sunday newspapers are addicted, the Assembly earnestly counsels all our people not to be, as owners, managers, or employees of any company, nor as shippers or passengers on the Sabbath, nor as publishers, patrons, or writers for Sunday newspapers, partakers in the guilt of these flagrant forms of Sabbath breaking." It will be observed that the General Assembly only counsels Presbyterians to take no part in what it denounces as Sabbath desecration. But why does it not go further, and require them to desist from practices which it regards as contrary to the express command of God? In the view of the highest authority in the Presbyterian church, nearly all Presbyterians are guilty of the sin of Sabbath desecration, and yet, instead of commanding them to abandon their evil courses, and conform their conduct to the divine law, it only advises them to act differently. It lays down no rule as to the matter which they must obey under pain of ecclesiastical disciplin. The Assembly, of course, knew that it would be impossible to enforce such a rule in the churches without driving out nearly the whole membership. Especially Presbyterian capitalists, the men who giv the denomination its substantial support, are almost without exception Sabbath breakers within the meaning of the resolution we hav quoted. They buy stocks and bonds to make profit out of them, and if the profit is increased by Sunday earnings they are all the better pleased. So far as we know, the late William E. Dodge was the only conspicuous Presbyterian who ever refused to own stock in roads that run on Sunday. Presbyterians, too, are generally purchasers and readers of Sunday newspapers, and our neighbor, Mr. Whitelaw Reid, though a Presbyterian, publishes the Tribune on Sunday. Presbyterians do not hesitate to use the elevated railroads and the horse cars on Sunday to go to and from church, though they could easily walk the distance. We also see on a Sunday long lines of the carriages of rich Presbyterians before the doors of their temples of worship. But if it is sinful to do these things, the General Assembly is bound in duty to forbid them, even if the church is stripped bare of the wealth upon which it depends. If the men who practice them are guilty of "flagrant forms of Sabbath breaking," the church which harbors them, despite its denunciation of their sin, participates in their guilt, and shows an inconsistency which the scoffer will call hypocritical. The truth is that our civilization does not permit of any such strict observance of Sunday as a Sabbath as the General Assembly counsels. But to be consistent, a church should either revise its teachings as to Sunday observance so as to conform them to the necessities of civilization, or, keeping its old doctrins, boldly and uncompromisingly enforce them, on the ground that civilization is doing violence to the law of God.—Sun.

CHAPTER XXXII.

THE COURT ROOM.

Judge Arno pinned his faith entirely to the law and the evidence. With a thoroughly cultivated mind, and in the main a noble and generous disposition, he was nevertheless one of those limited natures who can see nothing beyond the established rule. He had not a spark of originality. The way of the world was to him the best way conceivable. What had been done was the standard of what should be done. The wisdom of the past ages was the wisdom of all future ages. Not a dishonest thought was in his mind, but his thought was only a repetition. It was a photograph, and not a picture; a richly bound copy of what others had declared to be the truth. He would not swerve a hair's breadth from conscience, but his conscience was the fixed result of custom. It was an elaborate edition of the powers that be.

A fine-looking man he was, with white hair that seemed a crown of glory; a pleasant face, a Roman aspect, a bearing full of dignity, a presence gracious and imperturbable. He appeared a majestic impersonation of justice. Ah, he would have been if what the world thinks were right, if the voice of the majority and the dead past were indeed the voice of eternal verity. Being, however, but a mixture of error and wisdom, Judge Arno's reflection of it was as apt to be a sword to kill as a scepter to uplift.

So the drama proceeds, with him as the central figure, to dispense justice as it is in the eyes of the world, but to dispense with justice as nature proclaims it from those depths which only genius can sound.

The forms of justice were rigidly observed. In every respect red tape was scrupulously honored. Not a ceremony was omitted. Oh, what a useful thing law would be if it were as fresh and strong on the inside as it is cut and dried on the outside!

Sandy and Bolton had their evidence well marshaled, and it was not easily to be overthrown.

They both declared that a slave marriage ceremony had been performed between Amy and Sandy. A forged document signed by a local Methodist minister was produced certifying to this. A marriage being thus apparently performed, the legislative statute was produced, declaring that all slave marriages were valid.

"The evidence is overwhelming, your honor, and I do not see how you can decide otherwise than that the marriage is legal and holds. Law is law, and marriage is marriage."

"You are right," said the judge. "If the marriage is proven, then the law must take its course. Her husband can claim his rights."

"Let me ask a question," interposed Sandy. "This is so important that in order to get at the exact truth we must insist that every point of the law be rigidly enforced."

"I will see to that," said the judge. "The letter of the law shall be obeyed."

"I have no doubt of it," said Sandy, "and that the truth will be made clear. I wish to call your attention to the fact that under the law of this state no one can testify unless they believe in a God—a most wise provision—for surely if one does not believe in God, how can we trust his word? There is nothing to keep him from lying."

"Your point is well made," said the judge, "and in this respect the law must be observed. I shall be particular as to one's belief on this point."

"Then justice will be done," cried Sandy.

The first evidence put in by Sandy was the forged document, but forged so cleverly that it was almost impossible to discover the fact. This was a sort of marriage certificate, or declaration that the so-called ceremony, so far as slaves were concerned, had been performed between Amy and Sandy. This document bore the signature of a certain itinerant Methodist minister of much local repute, but since dead. Bolton and Sandy both swore to the genuineness of the signature and to the fact of the marriage.

"What is your religious belief?" asked the judge. "The law requires, in order that one's testimony be valid, that he believe in God."

"Most assuredly do I believe in God," answered Bolton, who was a Presbyterian of the old school. "I believe in an infinite and eternal God, the maker of the heavens and the earth, who has ordained from the beginning that a certain number shall be saved and a certain number damned; who has revealed himself in the scriptures of the Old and New Testaments; who sent his only beloved son into the world that we, believing in him, might be saved; and he that believeth not shall be damned. To all this I most devoutly subscribe."

"He must be able to tell a pretty big whopper if he believes all that," said Cupples slyly to Jones.

And certainly, after his confession of faith, Bolton proceeded to tell a most consummate falsehood, in the most unctuous and pious manner. I do not believe he could have told the truth with greater sincerity. He declared that he had witnessed the marriage ceremony between Amy and Sandy. Of course, having expressed his belief in such a magnificent creed, his magnificent lie was received as proper legal evidence.

Sandy's faith in God was a little different from Bolton's. He was a Methodist and did not believe in foreordination and that sort of thing.

"I believe," said he, "in the father, son, and holy ghost. That in Adam we fell, and that Christ is our savior, and washed in his blood we shall become pure as snow, and all our sins will be forgiven."

Evidently Sandy meant to make the most of his chance to sin while he could, and so drive a good bargain with heaven. He reasoned, I suppose, that there was no use in having an atoning sacrifice unless one had a vast amount of sins to be washed away; the more deserved punishment one had to be rid of the more satisfactory the arrangement. There would be but little pleasure in forgiveness if one didn't have a big thing to be be forgiven.

Sandy meant to get as much out of God's grace as possible, to have all he could out of sin, and then, at the last, all he could out of redemption. He was a devil of a saint and a most orthodox sinner. He testified, without hesitation, to his marriage with Amy, and in every way corroborated the perjury of Bolton. Legally the conspirators had pretty well entrenched themselves. So far, according to evidence, there was a valid marriage.

Of course the simple truth could destroy this evidence very easily if it only had a fair chance. But the trouble with all our courts is that the truth is so hedged in with a thousand formalities that its natural and serene strength avails nothing. Oftentimes it is so clogged that it hesitates as if it were a criminal indeed; while in these very formalities falsehood has a thousand places in which to lurk and save itself, and, indeed, flourish triumphantly.

A vigorous defense, however, was made. Harry was put upon the stand. When questioned in regard to his belief in God, he said:

"I cannot say that I believe in the God of the Bible, but I believe in some sort of a universal good spirit which I feel justified in calling God, though it is absolutely indefinable, and is more a feeling than an idea."

"I object, then, to his testimony," cried Sandy. "This is a Christian country—is it not?—and he must believe in the Christian's God."

"Certainly he must," said Bolton. "Harry always has been an Infidel, and I don't believe he can legally testify. I object."

"The law only requires belief in God," answered Harry, "and in rewards and punishments—that is, in retribution. In this I honestly believe, that they who break the law will suffer by the law. In this I find evidence of what I call God, but I do not profess to understand this God. He is incomprehensible and unknowable. I appeal to the judge."

The judge had some good sense, and so answered: "The law only requires a belief in God. It does not define what kind of a God. Whether the Mohammedan's, or the Christian's, or the Jews, or the Deist's. I decide that this witness is competent to give testimony. He declares his belief in some kind of a deity. That satisfies the law."

Harry's evidence bore somewhat strongly against that of his father and Sandy; although he could not of course swear that the ceremony had not been performed. He only proved some circumstances that made it improbable.

Cupples, and Jones, and Hapgood, and Dr. Dobson were put upon the stand to tell what they knew, which, however, did not legally amount to much, except to corroborate the drift of circumstances to what Harry had testified.

Cupples, when questioned as to his religious belief, said that his head was in a muddle on that point, and he did not know exactly what he believed, but so far as he could find out there was some sort of an overruling power that after a fashion made things right. He thought there was a big devil somewhere who had a great deal to do with the management of affairs, and almost won the game, but in the end, as good luck would hav it, was checkmated.

"So, then, you can honestly say that you believe in God," said the judge.

"Yes," answered Cupples; "that is, I believe in God more than I do in the devil, and I suppose it must be one or the other. God on the whole is a majority, and so rules; though there's a devilish big minority."

"You can testify," said the judge, good naturedly, although Bolton and Sandy with righteous indignation declared that it was an insult to God, and the destruction of all morality, to allow such evidence.

Jones said he had never thought of the matter before. He had not bothered his head about the existence of God. He believed in God, for that was the way of the world. He didn't see any particular reason for not believing. On the whole, things went on smoothly, and there was more happiness than misery. He didn't believe in a personal God, for he couldn't conceive of such a being; but he was inclined to think there was an influence that in the end made for the best.

This was enough to satisfy the judge, and so Jones told all that he knew about the matter.

Hapgood, of course, had no hesitation in declaring his belief. He was as glib as Sandy, and almost as orthodox as Bolton. It delighted him, indeed, to deliver a sermon on this all-important subject.

"There is indeed a God. The heavens declare his glory, and the firmament showeth his handiwork. He is omnipresent—not a sparrow falleth to the ground without him. He numbers the hairs of our head. He is father to the fatherless. He is without variableness, or shadow of turning. He inhabiteth eternity. He rides upon the whirlwind. He is a consuming fire. In him we liv, and move, and hav our being," etc., etc., to the end of the chapter.

Of course the testimony of a man who had such a glowing faith as this must be received in every court in the land, and Hapgood's passed without challenge.

There was some hesitation about Dr. Dobson. He really didn't believe much in a God. His creed was Atheism, with a certain mixture of Pantheism, and it was a very nice question to decide whether he had enough Pantheism to entitle him to giv testimony in a court of law. Since the doctor desired to say what he could in favor of Amy, he was willing to make the most of his Pantheism, and the least of his Atheism. So he put it this way:

"I can't affirm that I believe in an infinite and all-powerful God; but in a God with certain limitations, who is perhaps what you might call a stream of tendency, or the evolution of things. I think the universe is about right, though not exactly right. There are some flaws which may sometime work for good. In this sense I can declare that I believe in God."

"With this explanation," said the judge, "you are willing simply to say, I believe in God."

Dr. Dobson thought a moment, shut his eyes, and then answered:

"I think I can say this much with a good conscience. It's stretching the truth a bit, but under the circumstances if it's a lie, it's a good, nice, white one. It can't harm anybody. Yes, I will make that affirmation."

The judge ruled that the doctor could be received. He had in substance complied with the demands of the law.

The evidence, although somewhat slight and circumstantial up to this point, had been worked together with great skill, and formed a substantial basis upon which Amy's own testimony could be given, and be accepted legally at its full value; and, with any fair-minded judge, would turn the scale in her favor. Indeed, it seemed almost certain that Bolton and Sandy would be defeated in their scheme.

"Do you believe in God?"

For a moment Amy hesitated, and then calmly and firmly answered:

"I do not."

There was astonishment all over the court room.

"Do I understand you aright?" said the judge. "Is it possible that you, a woman, do not believe in God?"

"I do not," said Amy softly. "I cannot."

"Cannot," said the judge. "Are you insane? The fool says in his heart there is no God."

"That may be the old story, it is not the new. What the fool says in his heart, the wise man says in his head."

"But do you not see evidences all around you," persisted the judge. "See the design manifest in nature, in the stars, the flowers; everything."

"Design; but for what? for good and bad together. Who can trust the so-called design to make him happy. Does it make all happy as it would if there were a God? I cannot shut my eyes to the misery that is in the world. I myself have suffered tortures unnameable and innumerable. I have prayed, and no answer has ever come to my prayer. I have had to rely upon myself, otherwise I should have been crushed. If, however, I alone were the unhappy one, I might pass it by if all others were happy; for no matter what my condition might be, if all others were happy I indeed should rejoice; but millions are more unhappy than myself. It is born into my soul with unutterable agony, that there is no infinite goodness. Not my intellect, but my moral nature revolts against such a contradiction. All that has been done that we might ascribe to intelligence and love, we must ascribe to man. Man alone helps and makes better. The universe is neither friend nor foe. It is a field as apt to thistles as to roses, whereon we work and make the harvest. This is to me an overpowering conviction, and I cannot deny it, not even to save my life or my liberty."

A Sin the Sun Forgot to Mention.

From the New York Sun of May 17th.

To the Editor of the Sun, Sir: In a recent paper you stated the Sun was run as a newspaper, and not as a religious weekly. Very good; in your enumerating the sins of a senator (April 30) you did not state that the most infamous sin of Edmunds was bringing into the Senate a bill for a Constitutional amendment incorporating the Christian God in the Constitution.

Grand Ledge, May 14th. JAMES MOYER.

The Fate of Christianity.

Christianity will pass away. The great champion of conscience; the arrogant power which has caused kings and princes to tremble; the boasted faith whose measureless ambition has prompted it to attempt to bring the whole human race into its fold, must be numbered with things that were. With mute eloquence the deserted pulpit will speak of man's release from the shackles of superstition. The pilgrim will seek in vain for walls that echo the story of a crucified redeemer. Light from the gorgeous stained window will cease to fall upon the bended head of the pious devotee. The solemn tones of the organ will be stilled, and the stirring chant of the choir. Hushed forever will be the footfall of the usher in the long aisles, and the sable robe, and cross, and crucifix will be laid away. Heavenward-pointing spires will fall to the ground and become heaps of debris, or be carried off and put to some useful purpose. But, says a good Christian brother, "How can this be? In all Christian countries, beautiful churches are being built every year. Revivals are being held, at which large numbers of converts are brought to a knowledge of the unspeakable joys of the religion of Christ. Sunday-schools are flourishing, missionaries, evangelists, and salvation armies are laboring with the heathen, and the day will surely come when all mankind will bow at the foot of the cross."

The man who predicts the downfall of Christianity must not place any weight upon feelings of revenge prompted by personal injuries at the hands of Christians, nor upon the fact that many people wish it to go down because they think something better might be substituted.

Upon what is Christianity founded, and whither is the ruling thought of the world tending? Science has effectually and forever exploded the absurd Bible story of the creation, and convinced every mind over which reason reigns that a miracle is an impossibility. Passing over the filth and obscenity of the Bible without comment, of what value is it to us as a history? Granting that Moses, after his death, wrote his own obituary, and that the sun stood still to allow Joshua to butcher a few more thousands of his fellow-creatures; the accounts of these and similar things may hav been of much importance to the Hebrews, but what is there to show that they concern the people of the United States any more than does the Koran or the Hindoo Vedas? Nothing. They are of far less interest to our people than the result of the next presidential election.

Again: It is not very long since a part of God's infallible word was revised and improved by his very fallible disciples. The new version was somewhat distasteful to that class of beings who would believe that Jonah swallowed a whale as readily as they would that a whale swallowed Jonah, if the Bible said so. But what will be thought of the infallible word now that the Old Testament has been so thoroughly revised that it contains very numerous changes both in form and meaning? If the new version is true, the old was not. What will become of the multiplied millions who went down to their graves with a rock-rooted belief that the old Bible was true in every word just as they read it? Or, if a belief in either of two different books is sufficient to secure salvation, why not a belief in any one of three or of twenty?

The late revising committees were composed of British and American scholars, and we are told that the reason why many changes were necessary was because the translators of King James's version were ignorant of Hebrew and guessed at the meaning of words. This is a blood-curdling, hair-raising statement. Think of the teeming multitudes of sentient beings who compose the population of the most enlightened nations of the earth basing their hopes of eternal felicity on the wild guesses of a few zealots set to work by royal authority, and who knew nothing of the work they undertook. What if nearly all their guesses were far away from the truth, and were written down as God's infallible word, and given as a sacred and sure guide to us poor ignorant mortals who know no more of Hebrew than the translators did? O superstition, thou monster odious, how long shall thy baleful shadow blight and blast the fair flowers struggling into light in the intellect of man? Thinking of this immutable word that is frequently changing, we are led to ask: Why not hang our hopes on the inspired writings of Josh Billings?

We are told that the American scholars in the late revision were "brave and inconoclastic; the British, conservativ and careful." This statement givs rise to another barrowing suspicion, that perhaps we havn't got the really simon-pure word yet. Doubtless if Americans had had entire charge of the revision, still more sweeping changes would hav been made. A hundred years hence, will the Bible really be the same book it was a hundred years ago? If the first translators who ever tackled the Bible had been Americans, we should probably hav had a book with far less mystery and debauchery and bloodshed in it, and hence, as an anchor of stupid, unquestioning faith, it would hav been much inferior to the Bible as it is; but it would hav been a much more readable book, and so plainly written that but few commentators' brains would hav waxed idiotic over it. Isaiah has been badly cut to pieces. The old prophet's glory has departed. We are told that "the changes that are made, particularly in the 28th chapter, transmute nonsense into sense and darkness into light." Let us hav another revision next year and take up Jeremiah. Again: "The reader of the English text can see that two writers were engaged on this poem." How is this? This is another startling statement. For thousands of years Isaiah has monopolized the glory of writing that "noble poetry," and now we can see that two authors were engaged upon it. If we hav just discovered that there were two authors, it is not unlikely that future revisions may reveal ten, and, furthermore, that no such character as Isaiah had anything to do with it. Again: "The mistakes in the meaning of single words hav been the occasion of errors that would be amusing elsewhere than in the sacred text." The old Bible would hav us believe that Job's hippopotamus "drinketh up a river and hasteth not; he trusteth that he can draw up Jordan into his mouth." We are now told that Job said nothing of the sort. He simply intimated that because the hippopotamus could swim, he was not afraid ofwater, even if it should come up to his mouth. But then the man who couldn't swallow the hippopotamus story would be but a second-rate Christian any way. What an enlightener is faith! "Isaiah's 'satyrs' were nothing but 'goats,' and his 'dragons' but jackals." Poor Isaiah! a cruel fate has overtaken thee. And we shall no longer be entertained with accounts of Mr. Belial and his noted sons. They hav been thrust out. Just think of it. The Bible will be Hamlet with Hamlet left out. The "fir-trees" that were used for weapons in the old Bible hav been turned into "cypress lances." Joseph's star-spangled coat has been thrown out to the rag-pickers, and the children will grieve as for a friend. No good orthodox Sunday-school can liv three months without Joseph's fancy coat. The good old Presbyterian of York state who has reverently pored over the same old hide-bound—beg pardon, calf-bound—Bible for forty years, till every leaf in it has become the color of an Indian moccasin, will visit his son in Nebraska, and seeing for the first time a new Bible lying on the table, will take it and sit down to read. He will soon discover that his favorit Munchausen stories are mutilated or missing. Amazement will sit enthroned on his brow. When informed that the book he has in his hands is the "correct thing" in good society now, and that it will probably be "the style" all summer, the old gent will be disgusted, throw the book aside, and become an Infidel on the spot.

The good Christian pities the poor heathen, little dreaming that Christianity and heathenism are all one. It is all mythology. The Christian borrowed heathen rites to begin with, and the moral codes of Buddha, Confucius, and Zoroaster were just as pure as Christ's, and far more sensible in some parts. But then those great reformers were only men, while Christ was God. That makes the difference in the Christian's view. Bringing a monotheistic God down to earth in the form of a man was a bold stroke of the founders of Christianity, and the world had just reached that stage when it was possible to establish the scheme, but they made a great mistake in adopting the Jewish Jehovah and representing him as a God of love. If they had discarded him altogether and manufactured a new God of better character, the system would hav lived much longer than it will as at present constituted. Swedenborg would hav made Christ alone all-sufficient, but his revelations came at too late a date. That old jealous God who enjoyed visiting the sins of the fathers upon the children, etc., had secured too strong a foothold to be dislodged.

Agni, the mediator, and the beneficent Vishnu were a worthier pair than Christ and his cruel father. When ancient nations went to war, they arrayed their gods against each other as well as their men, but when modern Christian nations go to war, they array God against himself. Both parties pray to him for help to overcome the other. The party that is conquered was in the wrong, and God withheld his assistance. The nation with the weaker or less skilfully managed battalions is always in the wrong.

The Christian smiles at the credulity of the poor Buddhist with his belief in 136 hells, but why not a hundred as well as one? The case should be reversed, however. If Christianity be true, it will be likely to need the larger number, but as the Buddhist looks for final annihilation, one hell ought to answer his purpose. Christian mathematicians hav taken the measurement of heaven as given in the Bible, and, after allowing half the space for the trinity and his or their personal staff, hav divided the remainder into rooms of confortable size, and they hav come to the conclusion that there will be plenty of room for all who are likely to go that way for several years to come. But the other place seems to be neglected. So far as I am aware, no accurate measurements hav been made. We are not told anything about the size of the rooms, nor whether the place is liable to become crowded.

Religion, in all ages and all countries, has corresponded with the mental advancement and the surroundings of its adherents, and Christianity follows the rule exactly the same as all the rest. When I hear men talk of the civilizing, elevating influences of Christianity, I cannot avoid looking back to see where I may find testimony in support of these statements. The Israelites delighted in slaying people by way of converting them; pagan Rome laughed at the dying contortions of Christians torn to pieces by wild beasts; in the fourteenth century the Moslem fiend, Tamerlane, drenched the soil of India with the blood of unnumbered thousands of Brahmans and Parsees for the glory of Allah and the Prophet; for centuries Catholics and Protestants hav butchered one another for Christ's sake, and the terrible Sepoy mutiny of 1857, with its devilish atrocities, was the result of Hindoo fear and hatred of Christianity. It is all the same. Supernaturalism, everywhere, inevitably and necessarily leads to bigotry and blood. If Christianity were really something essentially different from all other religions, and destined some day to dominate the world, I can see no reason why it did not commence at the scene of Christ's labors and gradually spread in ever-widening circles till the whole earth was brought under its sway. I hav asked Christians to giv me a valid reason, consistent with the claims of Christianity, why, on the one continent alone where Christ's alleged work was done, there are more people who know nothing of the savior or his scheme of redemption, than all the Christians on earth. And I am still waiting for an answer.

An able English writer speaks of Gibbon, the great historian, as one of the most dangerous enemies by whom the Christian faith was ever assailed. "He does not formally deny the evidence upon which is based the structure of Christianity, but he indirectly includes that system in the same category with the mythologies of paganism." When the world sees that there is no myth about Christianity, the work of conversion will go on rapidly. Bacon did more for the liberty and advancement of human thought than all the priests and preachers from his day until now, but where is the divine who tells us of any great good to the world in which the church had no part? No existing system of religion had its origin in the field of rational thought; hence, appeals to reason fall powerless in the presence of blind faith. Reasoning faculties that hav long been subordinated to the control of that vague fear inseparable from supernaturalism can only resume their normal condition by slow degrees. I think the living of blameless and happy lives by the majority of Liberals will advance the cause of Liberalism more than the most powerful arguments, however eloquently expressed or logically demonstrated. Whenever a worthy, noble deed is done by an individual, whatever his views on religious matters may be, it is usually spoken of as a real Christian act, when in most cases there was nothing Christian about it. Some Liberals, through the force of habit, generally let such remarks pass unchallenged. This is a great error. Let us hav Christianity clearly defined, and grant it all the good that belongs to it, but Liberals should be more on their guard against admitting these false claims.

The foremost nations of the earth hav now reached that stage where the fullest and highest cultivation of the reasoning, the purely intellectual faculties, is a necessity in order to hold their relativ positions in the great struggle for supremacy. Faith, fear, mytlis, feelings, sympathies etc., will be more and more neglected, and as these are the sole support of religion, Christianity must necessarily decline.

A Baptist minister of Detroit, in a sermon before a state church convention not long ago, said: "The conversion of the world to a universal religion will never come of those who ignore the divinity of Christ while they praise his humanity." Doubtless the reverend brother had good reason to warn his hearers. He was shrewd enough to see that the religion of humanity was getting into the church and threatening to supplant mythology. Protestants laud Luther for his boldness in bursting a few of the bonds of superstition and giving some impetus to freedom of thought, but if they could see the logical ultimate result of the work commenced by the great reformer, they would be filled with gloom instead of joy. Since Luther's time, a multitude of sects hav arisen, every one based on that well-known phrase, Freedom of conscience. Freedom has been the watchword all along the line. Can any sane man fail to see that in the great ocean of freedom, the central idea that has held these jarring factions together will ultimately be lost? Every new sect that is born is a warning stroke on the bell that will ring the death-knell of Christianity. The great religious system has not only made many false claims, but it is tardy in acknowledgment of favors received. All through the middle ages, nearly all the learning and culture that the Christian clergy had they learnt from the Jews. Even St. Paul, when he wanted a better argument than he could make, borrowed one from a heathen poet. There may be no truth in the tradition that the early Christians tore out portions of Cicero's manuscripts containing his treatis "On the Nature of the Gods," because those portions contained arguments which they (the Christians) felt powerless to refute, in case they should be brought forward by unbelievers; but many a legend with a far less likely foundation has been implicitly believed for centuries. We often hear about revealed religion. Revealed religion, per se, may be a very nice thing, but the term is ambiguous and confusing. It implies that there is also a concealed religion. Then comes the query: Who has it and why is it concealed, and wherein is the revealed kind better than the other?

Much is made of the Christian's consolation in the hour of death. But how vain and hollow sound words telling of a consolation derived from the bloody tragedy of the cross, compared with the sublime composure expressed by those last words of Socrates: "The death to which you condemn me, I count a gain rather than a loss. Either it is a dreamless sleep that knows no waking, or it carries me where I may converse with the spirits of the illustrious dead." Or these words of Cicero, speaking of death: "No man, then, dies too soon who has run a course of perfect virtue; for glory follows like a shadow in the wake of such a life." The clergy will cling to the old religion because many of them can do nothing but preach. But there will always be work enough. The man of ability who has something to say will always hav an opportunity to speak, and he will hav an audience. Many think that a great religion cannot be overthrown without a crash. But there will be no crash. As the man in the circus at night watches the last farce and tricks of the clown in the ring till he suddenly finds himself in the open air, the canvas behind him having been removed, soon to be followed by the roof, so will the Christian on the upper seat gaze at the last acts of spiritual jugglery in the religious arena till his temple of faith has been silently moved away, when, turning, he will feel his temples fanned with the invigorating breath of the new philosophy.

The writer of these lines is no enemy of true religion, but he is a firm believer in the resistless progression of thought; and that the co-existence of Christianity with that progression for all time is an impossibility. He believes that Christian persecution of Freethinkers and Freethought papers is the result of shortsightedness, because if every Liberal speaker and paper in the world should turn Christian to-morrow, and plead the Christian's cause with all their power, the final result would be the same. The triumph of Freethought would be somewhat retarded, that is all. If a personal God should be recognized in the religion of the future, it must be a being with attributes such as man has never yet conceived, and is not now capable of conceiving. But however that may be, Christianity must "go." No religion can always exist on such a foundation as the Bible, and the tendency of the world's thought is unquestionably towards still greater freedom. N. G. W.

Our London Letter.

The Religious Tract Society, which is in the possession of a very large income, a portion of which is spent in printing weak literature in many known and unknown languages, and shipping the same in considerable quantities to all parts of the earth for the benefit of the waste-paper dealers, has been greatly exercised in its mind of late at the rapid advance of skepticism, and has therefore boldly came to the front with the well-meant intention of stopping the tide, and will doubtless be as successful in the attempt as was Mrs. Partington in her endeavors to keep back the waves of the Atlantic with her broom.

The desired goal is to be attained by the publication of a series of tracts written by various champions of the only true religion, and I hav wasted an hour in perusing two of them, respectivly entitled "Ernest Renan and his Criticism of Christ," and "Evidential Conclusions from the Four Greater Epistles of St. Paul;" and I should say if they are a fair sample of the bulk, any Infidel that is converted or perverted by them will be neither a loss to the one party nor a gain tothe other.

The chief argument of the first-named tract is to the effect that as Renan does not believe in the divinity of Christ, he is not sufficiently qualified to write on the subject with any degree of authority, and although this pretentious pamphlet professes to review and confute his "History of the Origin of Christianity" more particularly the "Life of Jesus," it chiefly quotes and attacks his "Recollections of My Youth," which appears to me rather aside from the question under discussion; but this is, as we almost invariably find, the system adopted by Christian apologists of the present day.

The second tract, dealing with the evidence from the epistles attributed to Paul, is equally strong, or weak, from whichever point of view you take it, and without taking the trouble of attempting to prove the authority of the documents, or answering the objections made from our side, contents itself with insisting that the reader shall accept them as genuin and divinely inspired, and launches forth a host of quotations from these precious letters to prove that the gospels are true. Fine reasoning indeed! Had skeptics never had a better case to put forward than the theologists, we should all at the present day hav been humble and devoted subjects of the absurd superstition called Christianity. I cannot possibly understand how people with fair brain power and generally good judgment in secular matters, can read such rubbish and not see its absurdity, and can only conclude that such blindness is greatly the result of early education, combined with a desire to be considered respectable.

It is really refreshing, after a short time devoted to such trash, to read an article in a Freethought paper, or hear a lecture from the lips of a Freethinker.

I heard Chas. Watts a week or two back lecture on secularism, previously to which Mrs. Watts recited in an admirable manner a poem written for her by Lara, which appeared in last week's Secular Review, and is well worth printing. I need say nothing regarding the lecture itself; it is quite unnecessary. I regret to hear that he contemplates paying you another visit in August, though why he is going I hav not the least idea. I am afraid he must hav gypsy blood in his veins, as he is so fond of rambling. (I don't mean in his talk, however.) Owing to this inherent restlessness, I am satisfied that he will not take up his permanent abode there; if it were not for this characteristic I should hav my fears on the subject. I fancy you must hav treated him too well on his last visit; if so, kindly reverse the operation this next time, and thereby hasten his departure. Do not, however, resort to harsh measures, and hurt his sensitiv feelings; but, after he has been with you three or four months, giv him a gentle but firm hint that it is time he was home again. J. D.

The Liberal Club.

The weather was pretty warm when the members of the Liberal Club came together at their 341st regular meeting. The ladies were regardlessly radiant in summer apparel. Mr. Wakeman thumped the table with his mallet, and said that the secretary would read the minutes. The secretary did so, and on leaving the platform was button-holed by Dr. Weeks, who advised him to read louder next time. Dr. Weeks was thanked by the secretary, who then passed along, but was collared by a tall man with a big cane. This gentleman said the secretary read the minutes first-rate, only no one could hear them. He was instructed to go to the door and get his money back. A third gentleman jumped at the young man, and said he wanted the minutes read off as the former secretary read them. He was offered the earth. The suffering scribe reached the back part of the hall and wiped away the perspiration which had gathered in profusion on his brow.

The president read the announcements of meetings to be held, and spoke of Man and THE TRUTH SEEKER, which contained matters of remarkable interest. He then introduced the lecturer, Dr. Paul Carus, who spoke on "Education and Liberty." He held that education was the first essential to freedom; not a religious education, which imprisons the mind in a belief, the very reverse of liberty, but the kind of culture described by the German word bildung, for which there was no equivalent in English. The death of a tyrant, he held, would in no case banish tyranny. Tyranny exists because people, from lack of education, are not fitted to be free. All history showed that education ruled the world. Education would abolish intemperance and the social evil, because it would show man that dram-drinking and immorality were not necessary to his happiness, and would occupy his mind with higher pursuits. Freedom, education, and wealth go together and distinguish all civilized nations.

Dr. Carus is a German, and his mastery of English pronunciation is not yet complete. He, however, made himself fairly understood, and his lecture, being in every way excellent, was well received.

Mr. Robert Blissert, taking the platform, said this was the best lecture he had ever heard before the Liberal Club. Education was king. He employed men to work for him, and the reason he could get more out of them than they could get out of him was due to the fact that he knew most about the business. This speech of Dr. Carus's should be printed for a campaign document. Men who were elected to office represented the ignorance of the people, whether it was Arthur on the Republican side or some other bummer on the Democratic side. People should educate themselvs. As for Mr. Blissert, he was going to reform, and then he would be sure there was one less rascal in the world.

Mr. Andrews had observed, as had the lecturer, that the word "education" did not express the full significance of the idea. He had therefore formulated the phrase "integral development," which covered the whole ground. It was worthy of remark, Mr. Andrews said, that the Liberal Club was growing integral. Formerly every speaker was all-sided in his attacks; that was now changed to all-sidedness of toleration. No one man is doing all the educating. The advocate of the laborer, struggling to giv the workingman opportunity for self-improvement, is doing a greater work for education than he who teaches Greek or Latin, though both are necessary. What Mr. Andrews asked was that they should appreciate the value of each other's efforts, and not be enemies because laboring in different fields of usefulness.

Dr. Atkinson had no criticism of the lecture to offer. He deprecated self-reliance. A person should take counsel. If he did not know what to do, do nothing. He was formerly a teacher. When his pupils left him they inquired how they should judge of right and wrong without his wisdom to guide them. He said to them, "My dear boys, when you go out into the world and into society, seek the company of those you most esteem, and take their advice." The doctor liked the idea of one overruling God Almighty. It made every molecule in his corpus dance hallelujah to think of it. "We hav," he said, "too many God Almighties."

Mrs. Leonard wished to say that the human being is like the cat—born blind. We should educate woman as well as man. She did not think theology should be taught in the schools any more than the platform of the Republican party. Every well developed man and woman, in her belief, was a god. It should be the duty, then, of women, to go to work and propagate geds. She hoped to further set forth this idea at some future time. Mrs. Leonard took her seat amid hearty applause.

Dr. Carus had no reply to make to what had been said, because he was in accord with it all. He could only thank the club for his kind reception, and return his acknowledgments to the eminent president for being allowed to address so fine an audience.

At the next meeting, being on Decoration Day, the "Festival of the Dead" will be celebrated with appropriate ceremonies.

A Strange and Unnatural Christian Sect.

A St. Petersburg correspondent of the New York Evening Telegram recounts in a recent issue of that paper the story of his visit to a sect of religious fanatics a few degrees worse than the Mormons. He says:

During my stay in Yakutsk, the most northern capital of Eastern Siberia, I became acquainted with members of a community of Skopzi—169 men and 124 women—living at the village of Marshka, about ten miles from the city. The men I found to be remarkable characters. I paid a visit to the Skopzi village. Three men [eunuchs] to whom I was first introduced were kindly and gentle in their ways as girls. Their ages ranged from forty to fifty. One was of excessiv size, tall, and much puffed out; the two others were withered men, yet all must hav been originally strong, tall, and good looking. They neither drank intoxicating liquor, they said, nor smoked tobacco nor ate meat. Their voices were not so effeminate as I imagined I should find, being in fact not much different in tone from that of the ordinary run of Russian peasant youth. It seemed to me that they had retained the voice they possessed in early youth at the time when they were received into the sect.

Of the women I only caught a glimpse of two before they went out of sight. The "sisters," as they are called, did not show themselvs in the houses. They seem to be as carefully shielded from the vulgar gaze as are the houris of a Turkish harem. Those that I caught sight of were young, not over twenty-five at most, fair and comely to view. Of children I, of course, saw none. The cry of a baby was never heard in Marshka, for the "brothers" and "sisters" do not provide for descendants. The men complain bitterly of the many restraints placed upon them by the Russian government. For instance, they may not sojourn in Yakutsk for more than eight hours at a time, and this only during the day; nor can they leave their village in any direction without the written permission of the police authorities of Yakutsk. The authorities justify this strictness in the belief that they thus prevent the influence of the sect from spreading. They say that the community is very wealthy and pays well for new converts whenever they can get them.

The reasons given by the correspondent why men and women join this unnatural sect are much like those which induce people to join other religious bodies. He continues:

Most of the men whom I saw had joined the sect at the age of nineteen or twenty. Why thus early in life they renounced the lusts of the world, the flesh, and the devil I am not able to say, but I am inclined to think that the reason is frequently from remorse after debauched life, and sometimes from the melancholy produced by disease or abuse. Of the actual joys of life and love such a young Russian peasant race at twenty know nothing that is elevating; his life is spent in an atmosphere that is morally diseased. and he easily succumbs to the persuasion of members of the sect or other penitents like himself to undergo mutilation. The pictorial teachings of the Greek church may also conduce to the same end. Not many years ago there was a large painting in one of the churches in Yakutsk which represented the various punishments that awaited sinners of various grades when they came to receive their eternal reward. Hell was depicted on a dozen squares of the canvas, in each being a victim suspended over the fierce flames that sprang up beneath him, and diligently stirred by little imps of darkness. Thus the gentleman hung up by the tongue had been in life, so the inscription said, an incorrigible liar; the one suspended by his fingers, a noted thief; and the one hung up with a hook in each of his eyes had been found guilty of looking with covetous glance on the wife of his neighbor.

The picture appears to hav had the effect of making one or two converts to Skoptism in Yakutsk. A gentleman told me that his coachman, who joined the sect about four years ago, gave the following reasons for his doing so. With a companion he had lived a low and debauched life for some years, both generally drunk and both very immoral. One day, after a debauch lasting longer than usual, the twain found thomselvs in a condition representing a recovery from delirium tremens, and without a kopeck in their pockets. Said the other to the coachman, "Come, let us giv up this life and become Skopts; then we shall hav no more of temptation, and besides, we can get some ready money if we join." So they agreed to turn Spoptzi. They made their request known, and after an interview with the elders of the community, declared their readiness to submit to the ordeal. One day, says the coachman, he was invited to a gathering in the village, and went, quite unsuspicious that his conversion was to take place so soon,

He was there given a drink, after which, he says, he remembers nothing more until he awoke, suffering great bodily pain. His recovery occupied about three weeks, and his regrets last to this day. Why the women join the sect I am also unable to say, but probably for the same reasons as the men in some cases; in others from the desire to be rid of temptation and the inclination to the world and its griefs quickly and forever.

It seems, further, that the Skopts employ methods of securing youthful converts but little more culpable than those adopted by their contemporaries of other denominations. Protestants and Catholics alike warp the minds of children; the Skopts mutilate their persons. The writer goes on to relate:

Pitiable cases are these of the younger members of the sect, who hav been initiated into the brotherhood or sisterhood by their fanatical parents or relativs long before they could understand anything of the meaning of the rites which they were compelled to undergo. In each case the Russian government interferes, taking away the children, and looking out for employment for them. These hav all their rights as Russian citizens given to them, while their parents or relativs are outlawed or exiled.

The sect is kept up solely by new converts and has increased in numbers since 1859. There was published in St. Petersburg in 1872 a large quarto work, with colored portraits of members of the sect, and illustrations showing the methods employed in and the results obtained from the rites of initiation. The portraits of the women show faces of intelligence and great will power. The torture to which the members submit themselvs must be excruciating. And when all is done the traces of the original desires are not always entirely extinguished. Seceders from the sect hav told stories of orgies in which the brotherhood and sisterhood join on their great feast and holy days, and there hav been two or three cases of backsliding on the part of female members of the community which I visited. One woman who left the village afterward married in Yakutsk, settled down, and had children.

Thus it appears that the Russian government has upon its hands a religious problem similar to the Mormon question in the United States. And the only difference, it may be remarked, between the Mormons and the Skopts consists in the fact that the one sect take the lives of the Old Testament heroes as examples, while the other adopt the teaching of Christ—"He that is able to receive it, let him receive it." They, like Origen, regard themselvs as "able." It would be something in the form of a blessing to mankind if these two opposing sects of criminally religious fanatics could be transplanted—the Mormons from Utah and the Skopts from Russia—to some uninhabited island, there to settle their differences by the survival of the fittest. And should the fate of the famous Kilkenny cats overtake them, the world would certainly hav reason to rejoice.

Religion in the Temperance Movement.

A sensation was caused on Monday morning, says the Springfield, Mass., Republican, in Athol by the discovery of the following documents posted on the doors of various liquor saloons throughout the town:

"Notice—To law breakers in the traffic of rum and the whole traffic in the curse in this town: We, a committee of five, hav given and pledged our hearts and fortunes to suppress the whole traffic, licensed and unlicensed abomination. If we are powerless in law, we shall act in our judgment, and apply the aid given by the Almighty, by the use of his elements, such as we in our humble way can command. Per order of committee of five."

The fact that two saloons hav recently been burnt gives color to the joke or threat, whichever it may be.

A Question of Natural Law.

In THE TRUTH SEEKER of May 17th are two statements that arouse my "natural" impulse to talk back. Dr. Geo. W. Chapman says, "The fact is, either monogamy or polygamy is natural;" and A. B. B. in writing about Mormonism says the radicals "all condemn it because it is a violation of the law of nature as taught in the numerical equality of the sexes; and the obvious inference therefrom that every man is entitled to hav but one wife." Now, as a radical, I object to the statement that this inference is obvious, or that we hav any evidence that monogamy is more natural than polygamy. There is too much loose talk about what nature indicates, as there has been too much dogmatic assertion as to what "God says." Who knows what God wants or ordains? and who can know absolutely what nature's laws are? Scientifically, our only way of ascertaining what is natural is to observe the phenomena of nature, and study their relationship. As to man, he must be considered as an animal, and his habits as an animal examined from "away back" up to the present time. In the light of the natural history of man, it must be acknowledged that he has exhibited all the natural propensities of other animals in the direction of sexual irregularity. In primitiv states we find him living in polygamy, polyandry, and omnigamy, and in these later days we find about the same with the addition of one more phase of social relation as exhibited in Shakerism. The numerical equality of the sexes does not indicate monogamy as natural law any more than it indicates a general combination of all systems, and the fact that all are co-existent to this day in this one city proves, if anything, that man is following out the natural instincts which hav followed him from "away back," and maintained a sort of supremacy in spite of education in morals or sexual ethics of a higher order.

As Elmina truly says, "we must be continually reforming nature," and if we were to go according to numbers, we should be obliged in Eastern states to institute polygamy in order to giv every woman a husband or a part of one. In matters of this kind it is useful to study nature, but we should remember that times change and "circumstances alter cases." What may hav been natural and proper in the past must be revised to day, and our social and sexual relations should be amended in accordance with the "data of ethics," and not established, as A. B. B. would hav them, on so infirm a foundation as the "numerical equality of the sexes."

Yours truly, E. B. FOOTE, JR.

A Few Things in Brief.

I RECEIVE many copies of Liberal papers for which I feel truly thankful. How gladly I would patronize all of these papers if I had the ability to do so. Of course, with my limited time, I could not read them all; but I would subscribe for them and help along the good cause by sending them on missionary errands until light should shine in all the dark corners of the earth.

WHO knows what the lunatic Livezey is about? Why don't Preston make a raid on him as a vivisector? My friends hav been flooding me with something like a prospectus indicating that I, and many others, are to be publicly chopped up. Well, I think I may be able to pass through the ordeal, but, from the bottom of my heart, I pity such men as Putnam and Wakeman and Ingersoll, and the poor TRUTH SEEKER and Investigator. He has written to me enough to fill a good many sheets of foolscap, and I utterly refused to pay any attention to him. And yet, after every precaution, I don't expect there will be as much left of me as the Kilkenny cats could boast of.

I WANT to say to Ella Gibson that sex can neither excuse nor augment the nature of crime. And yet (it may be a weakness) I would rather see my father drunk than my mother.

I WANT to thank my Liberal friends all over the country for the many encouraging letters which I hav received. Of course, I cannot answer them all; it would take all the time. Many may think that I am a man of leisure, and that it is through neglect their letters are not answered, but this is far from the fact. How gladly I would take every Liberal by the hand and giv him or her a word of encouragement, especially the young, who hav long and useful lives before them. Press forward, I say—hold up the torch of reason until the gods and ghosts of superstition shall vanish forever, and the promotion of human interests shall become the supreme endeavor.

WILL some of my friends be kind enough to send me a copy of THE TRUTH SEEKER, dated March 3, 1883? It would be a real favor, and would be duly acknowledged and appreciated. JOHN PECK.

Editorial Notes.

A STRUGGLE for the possession of the negroes is to begin between the Protestant and Catholic churches. Bishop Williams has prepared a pastoral to be read in the Catholic churches, setting forth that the time has come for an official effort to spread the tenets of the Roman Catholic church among the negroes. The bishop imagins that his church can remove from among the colored people the licentiousness Protestantism has failed to check. After speaking of the rapidity with which the race is spreading, the pastoral continues:

"Here is this constantly increasing multitude in our midst, and the problem to be solved is, Shall they become a dire burden to to this community or a blessing? We can well ask ourselvs, are they advancing in chastity, honesty, industry, and morality in the same ratio as they increase numerically? It may perhaps be asked why there has been done so little in Georgia for them by the holy church. The reason is evident. In the very settlement of Georgia, under a charter from the British government, Catholics were excluded. The tide of Catholic immigration was therefore turned away. The settlement of Georgia was made exclusivly by Protestants, and few were the Catholics that came to Georgia after the establishment of our independence. Even at the present day the number of Catholics scattered over this territory is but 25,000. The vast slave population before the war was, therefore, owned by Protestant masters. The Catholic priest could not reach the slave. In spite of disadvantages the clergy of this diocese hav not forgotten the colored people. Savannah, Atlanta, and Augusta hav Sunday-schools for the colored people. A day-school was opened in Savannah under charge of the Sisters of St. Joseph for colored children, and a society for colored men was formed under the patronage of the African St. Benedict. The order of St. Benedict, which was so great an instrument in God's providence to bring the true faith and with it Christian civilization to our Christian forefathers, the Goths and the Vandals, opened a few years ago their monastery for the Christian education of the negroes. The work of the Benedictine fathers among the colored people in Savannah is growing daily more in value. A branch of the Colored Knights of America, to be composed exclusivly of colored men, has been successfully established in the Cathedral parish, and the sodalities for the women are a great edification. The two colored schools in Savannah taught by the Sisters of Mercy contain about two hundred scholars. A successful school exists in Washington, Wilkes county, and one will soon be opened in Sharon."

If the Catholics are successful in turning to themselvs the negro element, it will add about a million votes to the power of the church, without increasing the sum total of morality in the country. The Methodist Bishop Prince from long experience among them refuses to believe in the future of the negro. Compulsory education of the children and limited colonization in a colder climate are probably the only means of reforming the negro.

THE Sunday Gazetteer is a local journal of the Democratic persuasion, published by B. C. Murray at Denison, Texas. It is an able journal, and free. Mr. Murray is a Freethinker. He has been for some time endeavoring to "awaken the friends of order and good society to the importance of insisting upon police officers doing their duty in accordance with their oaths of office." Lately an attempt has been made by the churchmen of Denison to destroy the influence of his paper because, as he expresses it, he is "so mentally constituted as not to believe what is contrary to reason and experience"—in other words, the Christian religion. In explanation of his course Mr. Murray says:

"It is even asserted that because this journal is not distinctivly a Christian journal (what particular kind of Christianity is not stated), therefore its influence is against good morals. If it givs men and women of different views an opportunity to explain what they believe, or think, it is held its influence is evil, just because some dogma of some society or sect is attacked. The editor of this paper insists that there is no subject too sacred for investigation or discussion. Because an opinion is not popular is no evidence of its untruth; all new ideas are unpopular. Even the founders of Protestantism were unpopular and very decicedly so. But to say that infidel is another name for immorality is simply false, and those who make the assertion are not honest. Must a man favor theft because he doesn't believe in the holy trinity, or defend murder because he denies the doctrin of a burning, endless hell for the skeptic? The various teachings of any religious sect is simply a question of fact. The Catholic believes in transubstantiation, the Protestant denies it—there is no morality nor immorality about it, and, judging by our own senses, the Protestants hav the best of the argument. The Protestant says the New Testament was inspired by God himself; the Infidel doesn't believe it. Here is another question of fact, and in the light of history, internal evidence, and human experience, the Gazetteer says the Infidel has the best of the argument. A truth is a truth whether inspired or not, and, as Ingersoll says, error cannot be made truth though given by inspiration. It will be a sorry time for this boasted land of liberty when a newspaper cannot giv free expression to the views of the people on all questions agitating the public mind, even though the church may brand the sentiment expressed as Infidel."

THE Church Record, published at San Antonio, Texas, recounts that by dint of hard work a neat and comfortable frame church was erected at Del Rio. On the first of May it was to be consecrated to the service of God; but on the afternoon of the day before, a cyclone swept through the town, and when the bishop arrived he found the church a heap of torn and twisted lumber. This was obviously as much as anything a dispensation of providence, yet the editor of the Church Record bobs up serenely and asks for subscriptions to rebuild the church immediately. From our point of view, it looks this way: If providence was mean enough to blow down the house just for fun, then let providence be the loser; and if the building was destroyed in anger, it is equally flying in the face of the Almighty to attempt to build it up again. The Lord gave and the Lord hath taken away, The people of Del Rio must believe that they hav done their duty. They put up a meeting-house and providence turned it into kindling wood. He evidently prefers church material in that shape. In a new country like Texas this is comparativly cheap, and the inhabitants of Del Rio will save money by occasionally bringing round a load of slabs sawed stove length and dumping them on the former site of the St. James church.

UNDER date of May 24th E. H. Heywood writes us that his trial is to take place on the following Monday or Tuesday, "before Judge Pitman, an orthodox conservativ regarding morals." He adds that on this account "the outlook is not especially encouraging for a fair trial."

Lectures and Meetings.

W. S. BELL lectures at Clear Lake, Wis., May 28th, 29th, and 30th; at Arcadia, Wis., June 1st and 2d; at Waumandee, Wis., 3d, 4th, and 5th; at Northfield, 8th, 9th, and 10th.

THE Spiritualists of Iowa and vicinity will hold their June Mass Picnic on their campgrounds at Clinton, Iowa, on Saturpay and Sunday June 7th and 8th. Speaking forenoon, afternoon, and evening each day. The speakers are Dr. Juliet H. Severance, Moses Hull, Mattie E. Hull, and others. An admittance fee of ten cents at the gate to defray expenses. Everybody invited.

THE Thomas Paine Society of Frederick, Md., will meet on June 8th, to commemorate the death of Paine. Aaron Davis, the secretary of the society, writes: "After the regular ceremony of the society, the Paine men will march in procession to the cemetery to select a spot whereon they will, at some future day, erect a monument to the memory of Thomas Paine. We do not look upon death with the foreboding horror of the Christian church, whose members are afraid they will miss the road after death; but we look upon it as a May flower, unfolding its beauties to the balmy air."

The Lecture was a Success.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE TRUTH SEEKER, Sir: In view of your courtesy in announcing in THE TRUTH SEEKER my lecture upon the subject of "Religious and Social Intolerance," before the Philosophical Association of Brooklyn, I wish to report that the attendance was fair in point of numbers, and for intelligence could not well be surpassed; and though the gentlemen were in the majority, there was a goodly number of ladies, among them Mrs. Imogene C. Fales, president of the Sociologic Society, Mrs. Dr. Burns, and others prominent in movements for social reform.

Equal Rights for Woman as Well as Man.

What a question to be argued in this nineteenth century! Are women a part of the human race? If so, why are they not subject to the same conditions of law and government that men are? How or why was this distinction enforced? We are utterly unable to comprehend the enormity of the conception of a design that has subjected woman during the centuries past to conditions inferior to man. It would be thought an amazing credulity to believe the different treatment that has been accorded to women in the past did not history hav it distinctly and plainly confirmed. The first reference to woman, Gen. ii, 18: "And the Lord God said, It is not good that the man shall be alone; I will make him an helpmeet for him." The word helpmeet means a wife. Webster says a wife is a woman who is united to a man in wedlock; correlativ of husband. He also says a husband is one wedded to a wife; the correlativ of wife. He tells us that correlativ is one who stands in a reciprocal relation to some other person. We read that reciprocal means mutual, as reciprocal love and duties. Everything, as far as words go, appears to indicate the equality of man and woman. Whence came this inhuman bifurcation between the two that makes woman subject to conditions that are neither correlativ, reciprocal, nor mutual? Next we read that when the woman saw the tree was good for food, and a tree to be desired to make one wise, she ate of it, and gave to her husband. She showed wisdom in giving her husband his share of good things, thereby illustrating mutual and reciprocal love. For doing that act, the Lord God said to her, "And thy desire shall be to thy husband, and he shall rule over thee." Unto Adam he said, "Because thou hast hearkened unto the voice of thy wife, cursed is the ground for thy sake." We read no more of his hearkening to his wife's voice. His example is largely the rule of to-day.

I hav referred to this recorded case of different treatment of man and wife for the same so-called violation of a command, not as regards the truth or falsity of the narration, but because I believe that out of such a cosmogony has grown all the disabilities imposed on woman. Leviticus xii, the Lord said that if a woman hav a male child she shall not come into the sanctuary for thirty-three days; but if she bear a maid child, she shall not enter the tabernacle for sixty-six days, when she must bring a lamb for a burnt offering, and a young pigeon for a sin offering unto the priest, who shall offer it before the Lord, and make an atonement for her. What do we read of the man, the father, the correlativ of the wife? Not a solitary word. What difference in the treatment of a man and wife for the same act! Can such things be continued? Numbers xxvii, 1–8, is the first appearance of women to demand property rights. "Then came the daughters of Zelophehad and stood before Moses, and Eleazar the priest, and before the princes, and all the congregation, and said, Our father died in the wilderness, and was not against the Lord in the company of Korah." They gained their suit, and obtained their father's inheritance, and all in favor of equal rights must rejoice to read of justice being meted out to them even once, and but partially, for it was coupled with a condition that they should not marry out of the tribe, and they married their cousins. Deut xxiv, "When a man hath taken a wife, and married her, and it come to pass that she find no favor in his eyes, then let him write a bill of divorcement, and giv it in her hand, and send her out of the house." What kind of a bill shall the man hav if he find no favor in her eyes? None. The wife has now lost the correlativ position which she had at the starting of the race. After such a lapse of years it is sad to think of the change in her position from equality to an appendage to be divorced at the pleasure of her husband. At the beginning it was not good for man to be alone. In Job xxv, we read, "How can man be clean that is born of woman?" Who can compute the difference between the two statements as it affected the woman? From the time of Lamech, with his two wives, down to Solomon, with his three hundred wives and seven hundred concubines, I read of no expression against woman that comes so near the bed-rock of meanness as that in Job does. We need look no farther to decide what treatment woman must endure when men accounted the wisest so shamefully degrade her. A new dispensation is coming; what will it bring to woman? She has less to fear in the coming new than man has, as her situation cannot prove worse; consequently she has more to hope for, although it may prove to be a phantom. We enter the new and are at once confronted by the record that Mary, the wife of Joseph and mother of Jesus, was made to undergo the same degradation that was forced upon woman in Leviticus: thirty-three days was she forbidden to enter the sanctuary for having been the mother of Jesus; also to carry a pair of turtle doves to the priest, who should offer them before the Lord and make an atonement for her. An atonement for what? For being, as it is said, the mother of God! Watts, in his hymn book, says:

"This infant is the mighty God,
Come to be suckled and adored."

John Wesley, in his hymn book, says:

"God, who did your souls retrieve,
Died himself that ye might liv."

What atonement is required of the partner in Mary's crime? Nothing. If Mary had hopes of equal rights in the new dispensation, how suddenly were they blasted—as she was the first one to be dealt with in that inhuman fashion; and, as an outgrowth of such conditions, her son, when on the cross, and his mother near him, instead of addressing her by the endearing name of mother, said, "Woman, behold thy son!" Such a remark, coming from a son, would hav an added sting. We next read where a woman was adjudged the same treatment as her husband, for the same offense; but it does not show an advance toward equal rights for woman, as the man was stricken dead and no more could be done to the woman. I refer to Ananias and his wife Sapphira (Acts v). Paul, a new teacher, steps into the arena and says (1 Cor. xiv): "Let your women keep silence in the churches; and if they will learn anything let them ask their husbands at home; for it is a shame for women to speak in the church." What said he of the women who were not married? 1 Cor. vii, 34, 36: "But if any man think that he behaveth himself uncomely toward his virgin, if she pass the flower of her age, and need so require, let him do what he will, he sinneth not; let them marry." If he had gone to the bottom of that bottomless pit—once believed in—he could not hav found worse doctrins; and yet there are (I had almost said men) priests so devoid of all sense of equality that they hold up Paul as a paragon of virtue and morality to woman, whom he so shamefully maligned. The fact that woman will work to uphold his memory, or even to listen to fulsome praise of him, only shows what centuries of degradation, in the name of the Lord, hav accomplished. "Wives, submit yourselvs unto your husbands," is a command that has been obeyed better than many others. A few in all ages hav rebelled against tyranny. The tyranny borne by the women has been of such a character as to hold even the germs of freedom within her in abeyance. In 1541, in England, Ann Ascue was tortured, and after being so dislocated by the rack that she could not stand, was carried in a chair to the stake and burnt alive for denying the real bodily presence of Christ at the sacrament. Three men were burnt at the same time, and for the same offense, without being dislocated or tortured, thus showing that woman had no equal rights even at the stake. Can she ever be considered an equal factor in the human race? There is commotion in England, and a company of puritans, or roundheads, are driven by persecution to leave their nativ land and seek refuge in Holland. They decide to cross an almost unknown ocean and plant a colony in the wilderness—and for what? They say, "For freedom to worship God." They urge the Golden Rule, "Do unto others as ye would that others should do unto you." That is all that women ever asked for. It would seem that its realization was near at hand. The Mayflower took on board her load of humanity, and with the blessings, tears, and prayers of the friends left on the wharf for a safe and speedy voyage, she started for the New World. Many noted names of men appear in the history of that departure, but the first reference made to the women was when they were sent on shore to do the washing. Is that a prelibation of their equality in the New World amongst a company professing to giv up everything for freedom to worship God? From 1620 to 1624, one hundred and fifty young women were sent from England to Virginia and sold to the planters for wives, 120 to 150 pounds of tobacco, cash for each. The women were not allowed to hav the proceeds of the sale of their own persons, any more than they were given by law their own earnings. In 1637 it was customary in Boston to hold meetings to consider the sermon of the previous Sunday and argue the doctrinal points. Females were not allowed to participate in the discussions. Old Paul's ideas of woman held sway. Anne Hutchinson, a strong-minded married woman, determined that she would no longer be debarred from joining in the debates. As the scripture enjoins "the elder women to teach the younger," she established separate female assemblies. She was called the "Nonesuch," and her feminin gatherings were styled gossippings, a word before that time of respectable import. She was cordially esteemed by John Cotton and Gov. Vance, and became the leader of a sect. She was banished from Massachusetts, went to Rhode Island, and was finally killed by the Indians.

We hav looked at the records of the first woman in creation—hav read the indignities put upon Mary, the first woman in the new dispensation. Also the treatment meted out to the first woman of any note in the New World, the only one of the three who appeared to show a realizing sense of knowing what freedom and equal rights mean. Let her name be honored and remembered for showing resistance to tyranny. In 1649, three married women of Reading, Mass., were fined five shillings each for scolding. Were there any men in that town given to scolding? History says nothing of any such persons. Bear in mind that the cases I hav referred to are married women, all of them. But the single women are interested as well in the progress of equal rights, or ought to be, as they hav not escaped in times past. Oct. 22, 1648, the kirk session of Dumferline, Scotland, ordered that Janet Robertson "shall be carted and scourged through the town and market with a hot iron" (Chalmers' History). It is a sin for a woman to liv alone. The kirk sessions of Perth records that "Janet Watson holds a house by herself where she may giv occasion of slander. Therefore, Patrick Pitcairn, elder, is ordained to admonish her in the session's name, either to marry or to pass to service, otherwise she will not be suffered to dwell by herself." It is a sin to liv with unmarried sisters. The kirk sessions ordains the two sisters, Elspeih and Janet Stewart, that they be not found in the house again with their sister, but every one of them shall go to service, or where they may be best entertained without slander, under the penalty of warding their persons, and banishment of the town. No man do I find ordered to marry or go to service. Why do these godly men deprive these women of equal rights, not giving them even a choice, for marrying has been to the woman going into service? We hav looked through all time, and all over the world, to find equality for woman. We hav not found it. Hav we gained any knowledge in our travels that will help us in the coming time, so as to bring about the desired result? In 1624 women were scarce and valuable, and a fine was imposed on any woman who should encourage more than one suitor at a time. What do the records say about the man—the beau that had two strings to it? Nothing. There has been much said and written during the past few years with reference to a labor bureau. Massachusetts was blessed, or cursed, with one from its settlement. Young women were required to spin as much as the selectmen prescribed, or be fined. How would our young women enjoy the supervision of the selectmen, being told how much straw to sew, or how much to spin, even though it be spinning street yarn?

Young women in the joy of life do not as a rule giv this question any thought. The reason is obvious. They continually hear the jeers, slurs, and innuendoes of the older women applied to the women who hav attained to a knowledge that enables them to see and bitterly feel the injustice that their mothers endured, and the inequality still enforced by law on themselvs. Young women, you are marching on to take your places in the decimated ranks of your mothers whether you choose or not. Time and nature are inexorable on that decree. You can change the conditions. See to it now, so that better conditions may be your inheritance when you enter womanhood. It can only be done by thought that will make you abjure the fulsome flattery and ribald talk of your present position, having all the rights you want. Nothing but ignorance can make a woman say, "I hav all the rights I want." When the slave said, "I do not want my freedom, having a kind master," it simply showed what slavery had done for him; it had, as it were, obliterated all his manhood. Many women say they hav had all of this life that they want, and attempt to commit suicide. If it becomes known before the deed is accomplished they are restrained from it and forced to take more of the life that has brought them to such a sad strait. No woman has a right to say, "I hav all the rights I want," unless she has all the rights that a human being can hav. No more, nor no less, ought to satisfy her. If women can be found saying, "I hav all the rights I want," it ought not to militate against the granting of rights to those who, knowing what they are, dare to demand them, any more than the attempted suicide of some woman should be given as a reason for depriving all women of life. Mary Dyer, a Quaker, was hung on Boston Common in 1658 for the crime of being a Quaker, by the men who came to this country to enjoy "freedom to worship God." What injustice! And, worst of all, to make her amenable to laws which she was not allowed to take part in enacting. In 1681 Haverhill, Mass., voted to "enlarge the room in the east end of the meeting-house by making a gallerie therein for the women." Inferiority everywhere. The men hav not been the only contributors to this inferior condition of women. History shows nothing more plainly than that the women in the past, in season and out of season, aided to establish and uphold the church, which could not be maintained without their efforts; and which, when sustained, has deprived them of rights accorded to the meanest male member without any demand for it. The church has always endeavored to hav the laws of all countries made in accordance with their idea of divine law. One fact we must always bear in mind. However much at variance the different churches all over the world are as to God and his requirements, they are all in unison on this doctrinal point, the inferiority of woman. The inferiority of woman always has been, and is to-day, accomplished through laws that are sanctioned and upheld by the church. Outside of law they hav as many rights as men. When a tramp kills a woman with an ax in an illegal manner, all the power of the state is on his track, and if caught he is punished according to law, the same as though he had killed a man. If a tramp has a lawful wife, his treatment of her may be such that people see and realize that he is killing her just as surely as the other woman was killed with the ax, only not so quickly, because done in such manner as makes it legal. In the past it was lawful for the husband to chastise the wife, but as the years rolled on he was only allowed to do it in a reasonable manner. To-day he is not allowed to do it according to law. We can see the change for the better as the years roll on. What would Paul think if he could see the change? It would make no difference what he thought any more than it would what Brigham Young might think. The question must be settled on its own merits. Paul has failed to deal justly with the women, and must step down and out. The man who will not grant the same rights to another that he claims for himself is a scoundrel—only giv him a chance to carry it out. Paul had the chance, and the church, upholding his treatment of of woman, has had the chance, and both hav used it to the extent of making women satisfied with an inferior condition. The first duty of all is to cut loose from leaders of that stamp, acknowledging them as authority in no manner or way, and refuse to vote for any one who does. EQUAL RIGHTS FOR ALL!

Milford, Mass. CHARLES C. JOHNSON.

Talmagian Philosophy.

BY JOHN PECK.

It is not often that I pay any attention to so-called orthodox sermons. But when a man stands before the world, like Mr. Talmage, as one of the great Christian lights of the nineteenth century, and preaches a long sermon with scarcely a grain of truth in it from end to end; and when such sermon is published and read by thousands who believe that Mr. Talmage is "all in all," and that every word he utters has been duly considered, and who never take any mental food until it is chewed and put into their mouths, I think it is time for one smooth stone of truth to strike Mr. Talmage in the forehead. I never could endure a ranter, but a Christian ranter turns my stomach and gets me down to "the bottom of my loathing."

For a man to trample all truth, and history, and reason under his feet, and spit in the face of common sense, and then to hav his ravings spread out before the people in the newspapers, shows the amount of garbage the average Christian stomach can stand.

Mr. Talmage represents the extreme orthodox view, and as he has declared "for the largest liberty in religious discussion," and as it is as natural for me to tear the sheep's clothing from the wolf of falsehood as it is for ducks to make for water, I thought I would review the wonderful sermon of Mr. Talmage as reported in the Sunday Tidings of March the 2d, from Jeremiah vi, 16, in these words: "Ask for the old paths, wherein is the good way, and walk therein and ye shall find rest for your souls." Mr. Talmage likes the "old path." No doubt he would prefer the old stage coach to a Pullman. No doubt he would like to get back to a flat earth and a God that would converse with men and show his "person" as in days of yore. Mr. Talmage would probably be the Joshua who would put the brakes on the solar system and make it rain fire and brimstone at pleasure.

W.hat a pity Mr. Talmage could not get back into the 'old paths!" How he would enjoy the ignorance of the dark ages, and having the world stand still for another thousand years! Oh, for the "old paths" when there was no education except for the priests.

Anything but progress for him. He thinks all the world is in a fog because he don't see clear. He says, "A great London fog has come down upon the ministers in the shape of advanced thought." Too bad that these ministers are so far ahead of Mr. Talmage. Are the ministers so far ahead, or is it Mr. Talmage who is so far behind? "All of them," he says, "and without exception, deny the full inspiration of the Bible, and they will all land in a great continent of mud, from which, for all eternity, they will not be able to extricate themselvs."

Mud is a great improvement on hell-fire, and I think Mr. Talmage ought to apply to the great celestial patent office and take out "letters patent" on his discovery. It is one of the hopeful signs that man is advancing. "The fact that the Bible stands intact, notwithstanding all the previous assaults on all sides, is proof to me that the Bible is a miracle, and every miracle is of God."

Does Mr. Talmage know that there are some twenty "holy Bibles," or sacred histories, besides the one to which he refers? Some of those sacred writings antedate his Bible by many centuries. Can he not see that the argument which he brings to support the truth of his Bible will apply with equal force to all of these? Let Mr. Talmage ask himself why he believes Moses and rejects Mohammed, when all the difference there is between them, one received the law from the top of a mountain, and the other from a temple.

If Mr. Talmage claims that all other Bibles are man-made, I ask what could hav been the object? If man could find an object for writing twenty Bibles, could he not find an object for writing one more? What object had Joseph Smith for imposing upon the people with the "Book of Mormon?" What object had Mohammed? Let Mr. Talmage answer these questions as he may, his answers will apply to the "Book of Mormon," the "Koran," the "Puranas," the "Vedas," or the "Zend-Avesta," or any of the others with the same force that it does to his Bible.

"Advanced thinkers" seem to gravel the kidneys of Mr. Talmage terribly. What a pity he could not hold the world at a standstill so as to keep abreast of the times! I wonder if he thinks the world will cease to revolve because the beetle no longer rolls his ball.

He wonders how the Lord got along without "advanced thinkers" before they were born, and how he will get along without them after they are dead. In the first place, I hav no doubt that the Lord got along without them as well as he did without Mr. Talmage. In the second place, "advanced thinkers" will never die out. They hav come to stay, and they will be here to better the condition of humankind long after Mr. Talmage and his "stand-still" sermons are forgotten.

"Gibbon and Josephus and Prescott record in their histories many things they did not approve of." It is evident that Mr. Talmage is keeping his congregation about as ignorant as he could desire, or else he is very ignorant himself, for one of the facts which Gibbon recorded and "did not approve of" was that the New Testament was a fraud from the beginning.

"There are scores of things in the Bible which neither God nor inspired men sanctioned." So so! How did they get there? Can anything take place contrary to God's will? Was he not alone in the beginning, clothed with almighty power and infinit wisdom? How did things get in such a bad way that he could not sanction them? Did he create a power greater than his own, and was he too blind to foresee the result?

How does Mr. Talmage account for the wars of extermination commanded by God himself, like the war against Amalek, where God is commanded to "slay both man and woman, infant and suckling, ox and sheep, camel and ass? (1 Sam. xv, 3.) Did God sanction such barbarism? One would think he must hav sanctioned what he commanded. On what ground can Mr. Talmage justify the murder of these innocent children because a wrong had been committed many generations before they were born? Let Mr. Talmage square the justice of God as written down in the Bible with the ideas of justice to-day if he can. I am inclined to think that it is Mr. Talmage, and not the "advanced thinkers," who has "landed in a continent of mud."

In one instance God commanded the women to be ripped up alive that unborn children might be murdered. Had these unborn children done something to displease Mr. Talmage's Bible God? They certainly could not hav violated human laws. If space would permit I could cite other commands of God recorded in the Bible equally brutal and diabolical—one where all the men are to be killed and all the women who had known men by lying with them, and all the virgins are to be given over to the lust of a brutalized soldiery. If the Bible is true these things were sanctioned by God. And yet Mr. Talmage seems to be terribly disgusted because "advanced thinkers" do not get down in the dust like so many poodles and do homage to such a bloodthirsty monster.

"This book is the last will and testament of God to a lost world, and it bequeaths everything in the right way, although human hands may hav damaged the grammar, or made unjustifiable interpolation." Is Mr. Talmage a fool, or does he suppose he is talking to fools? "A last will and testament" that has been altered and amended and twisted and shifted by copyists and councils until nobody knows what the original was, or whether there was any original at all! What nonsense! Then he compares the mistakes in the Bible—which he admits—to the difference between spelling "forty or fourty." But if the "forty" stood in a note for forty dollars, and it should be changed to fifty or five hundred—although Mr. Talmage might think this little difference of no account—the difference would be just enough, as the Irishman said, to send a man where they sing twice.

Why, Mr. Talmage, think what you hav said. You first insist that the Bible has come down to us in its essential meaning, unaltered and unadulterated—"everything just right"—and then admit that human hands hav made "unjustifiable interpolation." Three new blades and two new handles, and the "same old jackknife yet!"

No, no, Mr. Talmage, that will never do. Where eternal salvation is on the one hand and eternal damnation on the other, we want to know just what God has said, and when and where. Now, Mr. Talmage, I wish to show you that you either see through colored glasses or else you do not see at all.

How large was a Bible before the art of printing was was discovered? and how much did one cost? and how many of the common people possessed a copy? Is it not a fact that the Bible was almost exclusivly in the hands of the priesthood? and could they not alter it to suit their own convenience? What means had the common people of knowing about it?

Although Mr. Talmage declares that "if there had been an element of deception the book would long ago hav fallen to pieces," I wish to inform him that the book has fallen to pieces many times, and been put together, but never twice alike.

Does Mr. Talmage know that in the manuscripts of the New Testament there were one hundred and thirty thousand various readings? and does he know that the authority of the scriptures was not established until the sixth century? and that additions thereto were made as late as the fifteenth century? and that for three hundred years different councils were overhauling them, and that books which were admitted at one council were rejected at another?

Now, I wish to show Mr. Talmage, by historians of the highest Christian authority, that he cannot put his finger upon one single passage of scripture and bring proof that would be accepted in any court of justice that it is the word of God:

"For the most important passage in the book of Revelation there was no original Greek at all, but Erastus wrote it himself in Switzerland in the year 1516" (Bishop Marsh, vol. i, p. 320).

"In the time of Simon and the learned Benedictines of St. Maur, very great and numerous errors with respect to the persons and transactions of those dark ages were commonly received. It is well enough known that in the early days of Christianity many silly and fraudulent persons composed fictitious narrativs of the life and actions of Jesus Christ and his apostles" (Dr. Smith).

"It was a maxim of the church that it was an act of virtue to deceive and lie, when by that means the interest of the church might be promoted" (Mosheim, vol. i, p 382).

"For if the truth of God hath more abounded through my lie, unto his glory, why yet am I also judged a sinner?" (Rom. iii, 7).

"The copies of the New Testament, of the gospels, at least, hav not come down to us as they were originally written" (Lardner, vol. iii, p. 67).

"The opinions, or rather the conjectures, of the learned concerning the time when the books of the New Testament were collected into one volume, as also the names of the authors of that collection, are extremely different. This important question is attended with great and insuperable difficulties to us in these later times" (Mosheim, vol. i, p. 108).

"Not long after Christ's ascension into heaven several histories of his life and doctrin, full of pious frauds and fabulous wonders, were composed by persons whose intentions perhaps were not bad, but whose writings discovered the greatest superstition and ignorance. Nor was this all; productions appeared which were imposed upon the world by fraudulent men as the writings of the holy apostles" (Mosheim, vol. i, p. 109).

"Such was the license of inventing, so headlong the readiness of believing, in the first ages, the credibility of transactions derived thence must hav been hugely doubtful. Nor has the world only, but the church of God also, reasonably to complain of its mystical times" (Bishop Fell).

I might fill a small volume with similar quotations from the most eminent writers, but sufficient has been given to show that the difference between the facts, as set forth in history, and Mr. Talmage's statements are greater than the difference between "forty" and "fourty"—sufficient to drive Mr. Talmage to admit either that he was ignorant of those admissions of historians, or that he was willing to impose upon his congregation.

Mr. Talmage thinks that some ministers of "advanced" thought are doing more to "hinder the world's betterment than five thousand Robert Ingersolls could do." Does Mr. Talmage realize that if it had not been for these advanced thinkers, he would be whipping women and hanging witches, and burning heretics to-day? Say, Mr. Talmage, wouldn't you be proud if you could raise all Christians up to the high intellectual and moral standing of Robert G. Ingersoll?

"Now," says Mr. Talmage, "if a man enters a denomination, and takes a solemn oath, as we all do, that we will promulgate the theories of that denomination, and then the man shall promulgate some other theory, he has broken his oath, and is an out-and-out perjurer." Yes, Mr. Talmage, these ironclad oaths hav ever acted as a clog to the world's progress. These "advanced thinkers" which you so much complain of hav never moved ahead one inch only as they hav overcome the united strength of the men who hav taken the ironclad oath. No matter how the world may move forward, no matter what new discoveries may be made, there you stand in your iron jackets, and cannot grow or move one inch. The wickedness is not in breaking such oaths, but in taking them. [CONCLUDED NEXT WEEK.]

THE North American Review for June opens with an article on "Harboring Conspiracy," by Prof. Henry Wade Rodgers, who examins, in the light of international law, the diplomatic history of the United States, and the national Constitution, the question as to how far our government may and most go in suppressing plots against governments with which we are at peace. Henry D. Lloyd, in the same number of the Review, shows how every branch of production is coming under the control of "Lords of Industry," corporations, and monopolies Elizabeth Stuart Phelps has an article marked by rare philosophic force upon the "Struggle for Immortality." Other articles of not less importance are: "Sociological Fallacies," by Prof. W. G. Sumner; "The Rise and Fall of Authority," by President J. C. The Proposed Change in the League.

The auxiliary Liberal League of Chicago recently took a vote on the anti-prohibition plank in the proposed political platform of the National Liberal League. The vote was reached after a lengthy discussion, brought about by the great dissatisfaction the plank had created, some members, according to the Radical Review, even withdrawing from the League in consequence of its recommendation by the National League. Gen. M. M. Trumbull first spoke against the plank. Mr. Trumbull said—we quote from the Review—that as he had been invited to open this question, he would do so simply by laying out a ground for debate. The anti-prohibitionist always took the ground that prohibition was a sumptuary measure. This he denied. A sumptuary law, he said, was a law for the purpose of restraining personal habits on the ground of morality, or for the person's own individual good; to prevent too great expenditure on the part of those who cannot afford it, such as, for instance, that all the people should eat at one table, and the same kind of food, in order to repress pride; or a law in England that decided the number of dishes a man should hav at one meal, because without the law inequality existed, and high living set an evil example to the poor, who became discontented. Then there were laws that decided what clothes a man should wear, and a law regulating the amount of cotton goods people should use; but this law was an economic one, made to protect the woolen industry. Prohibition, he maintained, could not be classified as a sumptuary law, and in the debate it was for the anti-prohibitionists to show that it was. If the people thought fit to prohibit the sale or manufacture of intoxicants they were perfectly justified, and the cry of special interest, or personal rights, as it was called, was not to be heeded. He had worked in reform movements for forty years, and had heard this argument of personal liberty used to defend every monopoly or wrong he had ever heard, as in the case of factory acts, education acts, etc., but he was glad to know that a feeling was abroad that no cry of personal rights would avail when the interest of the people as a whole were at issue.

Mr. Stevens replied by stating that this cry of personal rights was the sheet anchor of our liberty. He admitted that the evils of the drink traffic were great, but not so great as the prohibition fanatics would hav us believe. All the evils arose from the abuse and not from the use of drink, and why should he be denied the use of a thing because some people were too weak-minded to control themselvs? He resented this interference with his personal liberty. There was no knowing where it would end. The great supporters of this prohibition question were also supporters of the God-in-the-Constitution platform. The question was, Are we Freethinkers or are we Prohibitionists? He then went on to show how prohibition had failed, and quoted Gov. Robinson, of Kansas, as authority on the evil results of the prohibition measure there, how it demoralized the people; he also quoted figures from other states to show that there was more crime, and more taxes were paid in towns where prohibition was in force than in others where it was not. A lively discussion ensued, but most of the criticisms were directed against the position of Mr. Stevens; several of the speakers maintaining that it was not a question of Freethought and prohibition, nor of anti-prohibition, but a question whether it was advisable to maintain a plank in a platform which was a cause of keeping out many good members, or to erase the plank, and thus take away that cause of difficulty. Several of them were not prohibitionists, but neither were they anti-prohibitionists, and they thought that a man's opinion on that question had no more to do with the League than his opinion on free trade or protection, or hard money or paper money.

When the matter was submitted to vote, thirteen voted for and thirteen against, the chairman casting his vote in favor of retaining the plank.

During the past nine months arguments upon this question hav filled a good share of the space in The Truth Seeker, but without, so far as we can judge, any change in the situation. Those who were prohibitionists nine months ago are prohibitionists now, and vice versa.

The proposed political platform, of which anti-prohibition is one plank, was recommended at Milwaukee as a concession to the German Freethinkers. Without saying whether the favor has been returned, it should be considered whether the League had any call to go outside of its avowed charter objects. We do not think it had, and must agree with those who maintain that it is better for the League to stick to its legitimate business of working for the removal of legal disabilities of Freethinkers, the taxation of church property, the secularization of our public schools, abolition of religious festivals as appointed by our officials, the removal from public bodies of chaplains, and other measures of the same general character.

There were also many other planks besides the anti-prohibition one suggested at Milwaukee, which will hav to be dropped to insure harmony and unity of action. The proposed political platform is full of stumbling-blocks. The next Congress should allow it to still remain proposed, and devote its energies to framing a platform upon which prohibitionists and anti-prohibitionists, Democrats and Republicans, free traders and protectionists, Greenbackers and specie basis men, Spiritualists and Materialists, Socialists, Anarchists, and neither, can unite. In short, make a platform for Freethinkers, and for no one else.

Mr. Walker, of Lucifer, calls the declination of Messrs. Wakeman and Leland to longer hold office in the League "a prophecy of struggle," foreshadowing "great changes in the Liberal organizations of the country." We hope to be excused if we fail to see it. It might hav been so had the Index accepted the olive branch held out by the League president and secretary, but its contemptuous spurning of the offering leaves the League in the same position as before, except that Messrs. Wakeman and Leland wish to resign the offices they hav held so acceptably to all. And certainly they should be allowed to do as they please without questioning their motivs. Mr. Walker also thinks the statement that the Comstock issue is dead is erroneous. In this Mr. Walker is right. Section 4 of Article III. of the Constitution of the League recites that one of the specific objects of the League is:

"To defend through the courts, by the combined efforts and means of the Liberals of the country, any American citizen whose equal religious or moral rights are denied, or who is oppressed on account of any opinions he may hav held or expressed on the subject of religion or morals."

Therefore when Mr. Abbot and his friends refused to aid Mr. Bennett, it was simply a refusal on their part to practice what they preached when the constitution was adopted. It is a part of the business of the League to fight for Freethinkers oppressed by the church, and we are amazed that a proposition should be made to practically nullify this clause by suspending the agitation for the repeal of the Comstock law. We are for the repeal of any law under which can be worked such monstrous iniquity as imprisonment purely for opinion's sake, and for this reason, and on constitutional grounds, must vote for repeal first, last, and all the time. As Mr. Walker says, "there is nothing at stake which calls for co-operation with the maligners of our martyrs dead, of our heroes living."

We can go a little further with Mr. Walker:

"The League is bottomed, or should be bottomed, on certain definit principles, and our duty is to stand by these principles let come what may. We are to defend our colors though beneath the standard of freedom shall rally but a corporal's guard. Better a compact phalanx of one hundred true men, held in unity by an idea, than a mob of ten thousand held together by the sand rope of compromise."

True. And that idea should be State Secularization, and not Socialism, or Anarchy, or Prohibition, or Anti-prohibition. Let all of these hav their separate organizations, uniting if they please on such measures as all hav in common; but not forcing upon each body the ideas and principles of all. The League has been made a pack-horse until its back is bending. A little more piled on top of the load will break it. Yet Mr. Walker announces that he intends to pile the load on. At the next Congress, he says,

"There will be offered resolutions demanding the total and unconditional repeal of every statute which limits freedom of choice in the realm of letters and art."

We hope our fiery friend will forbear. If he thinks "there must be one national organization making this demand as a matter of right," let him organize one, and not saddle the League with an issue which two-thirds of its members would condemn to the extent of leaving the League. Mr. Walker talks violently of liberty, but he will not giv the League liberty to confine itself to its rightful purposes.

We must again express the hope that the next congress will frame a platform for Freethinkers; and upon such a platform we nominate for president of the National Liberal League

Samuel P. Putnam, of New York.

Upon all subjects Mr. Putnam has strong opinions of his own, but he would, we know, be content to discuss them in their proper place, and, as president of the League, work solely for the advancement of the League's objects.

The Sins of Legislators.

The June Popular Science Monthly contains Herbert Spencer's second contribution upon the above subject. Mr. Spencer cannot be accused of sentimentality in his writing. He applies the evolutionary principles of natural selection and survival of the fittest with pitiless rigor. It is, perhaps, going too far to say he would let the incapables die off of starvation and the diseases common to low orders of life and intelligence, but certainly one who should accuse his writings of tending that way could cite many quotations to justify him. Mr. Spencer places the individual—and by individual he seems to mean exclusivly the "capables"—above society in remedying social evils.

Individual aid, he thinks, "more generally demanded than now, and associated with a greater sense of responsibility, would, on the average, be given with the effect of fostering the unfortunate worthy rather than the innately unworthy." For the latter class he makes no provision. For "the poverty of the incapable, the distresses that come upon the imprudent, the starvation of the idle, and those shoulderings aside of the weak by the strong, which leave so many 'in shallows and in miseries,' are the decrees of a large, far-seeing benevolence." By "benevolence," Mr. Spencer does not hold himself committed to a teleological implication. It is rather such benevolence as we should attribute to a farrier who shot his horse to prevent the creature's suffering; or the benevolence, if we may apply the word, of a ceaselessly whirling millstone which should complete its work of death after having caught in inextricable grip a limb of its victim. It is the benevolence of an unfeeling power in nature which causes worlds to revolve and the unfit to die. Added to this conception of the universe, which is purely and coldly scientific, Mr. Spencer finds that the progress made in civilization has been solely the result of "men's efforts to achieve their private ends. Perpetually governments hav thwarted and deranged the growth, but hav in no way furthered it, save by partially discharging their proper function and maintaining social order. So, too, with those advances of knowledge and those improvements of appliances by which these structural changes and these increasing activities hav been made possible. It is not to the state that we owe the multitudinous useful inventions from the plow to the telephone; it is not the state which made possible extended navigation by a developed astronomy; it is not the state which made the discoveries in physics, chemistry, and the rest, which guide modern manufacturers; it is not the state which devised the machinery for producing fabrics of every kind, for transferring men and things from place to place, and for ministering in a thousand ways to our comforts. The world-wide transactions going on in merchants' offices, the rush of traffic filling our streets, the retail distributing system which brings everything within easy reach and delivers the necessaries of life daily at our doors, are not of governmental origin. All these are the results of the spontaneous activities of citizens, separate or combined. Nay, to these spontaneous activities govern ments owe the very means of performing their duties. Divest the political machinery of all those aids which science and art hav yielded it—leave it with those only which state-officials hav invented—and its functions would cease. The very language in which its laws are registered and the orders of its agents daily given is an instrument not in the remotest degree due to the legislator, but is one which has unawares grown up during men's intercourse while pursuing their personal satisfactions."

In another paragraph he emphasizes his adherence to the "benevolence" which stamps out the incapables—the process of natural selection. "So familiar has this truth become," he says, "that some apology seems needed for naming it. And yet, strange to say, now that this truth is recognized by most cultivated people—now that the beneficent working of the survival of the fittest has been so impressed on them that, much more than people in past times, they might be expected to hesitate before neutralizing its action—now more than ever before in the history of the world are they doing all they can to further the survival of the unfittest!"

To all this it can only be responded that it is true—every word of it; but yet it is not all of the truth; there is more to be said just as true, and the wonder is that Mr. Spencer has not himself said it. The reason that he has not is probably to be found in the almost universal law that men cease to grow after arrival at a certain age. Mr. Spencer got so far in his mental evolution; he learned just so much of nature, and then he stopped. His ideas on the "large, far-seeing benevolence" were penned in 1850, a third of a century ago, and he confesses that he has ad vanced no farther.

Mr. Spencer's impatience with the response of the sentimentalists to his statements of nature's laws is as just as the laws are inexorable. The sympathy of a society, which at one and the same time supports say a thousand orphans and disabled men and sends out armies with mechanically perfect instruments of death to make thousands of other orphans and disable thousands of other men, is not worth considering. The charity of a Wall-street millionaire, like the late Daniel Drew, who founded seminaries ostensibly to teach morality, and then fails, cheating his creditors and ruining hundreds of trusting clients, is of a not very beneficial kind.

But there is another natural and universal law which if recognized and applied would obviate the necessity of state charity or aid to the incapables. It is admirably stated by Mr. Spencer himself. "No one denies," he says, "that by the accumulation of small changes, generation after generation, constitution fits itself to conditions. . . . No one denies that people who belong to the same original stock, but hav spread into different habitats where they hav led different lives, hav acquired in course of time different aptitudes and different tendencies. . . . And if no one denies a process of adaptation everywhere and always going on, it is a manifest implication that adaptiv modifications must be set up by every change of social conditions."

Mr. Spencer has thus stated three premises, from two of which only has he reasoned. One of these two is the "survival of the fittest," which is the foundation of his laisser faire or let alone policy, and the other is the statement that to the individual is due all progress. This last is the reason for his cry to all governments to keep "hands off." He has left out of sight entirely his just as universal law of modifications of nature by change and adaptation.

If aid of the unfittest were certain to forever keep them unfit, if the law that peoples put into different habitats acquire different aptitudes and tendencies did not exist, Mr. Spencer's advice to let the unfit alone and let them die out would be sensible though cruel. In his "Coming Slavery," Mr. Spencer argues that the poor rates of England produced instead of diminishing pauperism. But would this be so if the habitats and conditions of the incapables were changed for a few generations instead of keeping them on in the same places? The law of adaptation is a larger and truer benevolence than that which stamps out the unworthy incapables as of no consequence in the economy of nature. Yet who and what power can thus help to modify and make the incapables fit to survive but the government or corporate society? Mr. Spencer relates that one of the counties on the upper Hudson in this country used to be remarkable for the ratio of crime and poverty to population. The cause came out at a meeting of the State Charities Aid Association held on December 18, 1873. Generations ago there had existed a certain "gutter-child," known as Margaret, who proved to be the prolific mother of a prolific race. Besides great numbers of idiots, imbecils, drunkards, lunatics, paupers, and prostitutes, the county records "show two hundred of her descendants who hav been criminals;" and Mr. Spencer asks, "Was it kindness or cruelty which, generation after generation, enabled these to multiply and become an increasing curse to the society around them?"

The "sins of legislators" is, according to him, that they do not take cognizance of sociologic conditions of evil like the foregoing, and stamp them out. Yet if society in its corporate capacity can rightly regulate such things, why not regulate smaller and greater but not less positiv evils? Must the incapables become debased criminals ere the state can undertake to modify the conditions of their life?

Mind, we are not advocating that the state shall own everything, and the individual be but a child under its parental care. A society organized upon that basis might indeed become a slavery as repellant to justice as is the present subjection of the people to the monopolistic individual. But the government may easily be made the agent of society in its corporate capacity to carry out those reforms to which individual effort is unequal. It is perfectly true, as Mr. Spencer says, that all the great discoveries, inventions, and enterprises, even language itse lf, hav grown up during men's intercourse while pursuing their personal satisfactions; but the matter does not necessarily rest there. Not asserting that it all could hav been done quicker and better by society in its corporate capacity acting through its agents, and not at all had not society relinquished many of its rights to aid in a supposed public benefit, yet it can be pointed out that it has all not been done well. Individuals hav abused the privileges granted them by their fellows, and by immoral means grabbed more than their share of material wealth, and become oppressors as tyrannical, perhaps, as any slave-drivers the most violent Socialism would produce.

Aside from the admitted sins of our legislators in not studying Sociology, and applying, or at least experimenting from, its principles, they hav committed worse sins in corrupting the public to looking upon them as an extraneous power and not as paid agents of society in its corporate capacity, to use again the felicitous phrase of Mr. Spencer. Our legislators hav accomplished this subversion of principle through the very individuals who hav done so much to advance civilization and to whom "governments owe the very means of performing their duties." If the government owed less to individuals and more to combined society, our legislators would hav more inclination to study the principles of Sociology and less to oppress society for the benefit of these overrated individual benefactors. A railroad may be used as an illustration, for to railroads is society deeply indebted, and by them grievously oppressed. To build one of these ways "of transferring men and things from place to place," the public is usually first taxed for a gratuity in the form of exemption from taxation for a term of years. This of itself givs the right to a voice in its management. Next, the legislators grant to the corporation the right to take any man's land for its purposes, paying practically its own valuation. Then often the government (society in its corporate capacity) guarantees the road's credit, or givs it public lands to sell. The road, being finally built, is owned by the corporation, which fixes its own charges for transportation, subject to such general laws as the corporation's attorneys in the legislature may hav enacted. These charges are always oppressiv, and made more so by discriminations in favor of particular points or some weak road concerned in a general pool. The public remonstrates, but is politely informed by the individual to whose exertions the road is said to owe its existence that the public may be damned, and asked in the language of another individual benefactor, What are you going to do about it? We instance these facts familiar to all Americans, because Mr. Spencer to support his reasoning has quoted Emerson as saying that "most people can understand a principle only when its light falls on a fact."

It is plain that the let alone policy can not be pursued without the oppression of society. Equally plain has history made it that government, considered as a force apart from the people, cannot be depended upon to conserve the interests of all. The question is thus marrowed down to a choice of evils, or the substitution of a new order of society, in which justice, even and exact, is accorded to all without demur from any. For this the world must look elsewhere than in Mr. Spencer's essays. He has set forth the difficulties in the way, but to their removal has contributed nothing but the suggestion that legislators study the laws of Sociology.

To Members and Frequenters of the Liberal Club.

The last meeting of the season for the Manhattan Liberal Club takes place Friday night, the 30th. The exercises are to be appropriate to the occasion. Mr. Wakeman will speak on the "Dead Past;" Andrew H. H. Dawson, Esq., will discourse on the "Living Present;" and the Great Universal Preacher, Mr. Andrews, will shadow forth the glories of "The Future." Mr. Putnam will read a poem. As the friends will not come together again for three months, we would suggest that those who are in the habit of purchasing their copy of THE TRUTH SEEKER weekly at the club, should hand the secretary (or send to this office) their names and addresses for a subscription to bridge over the vacation. This paper will be sent three months to new subscribers for fifty cents, and, as we hav often remarked, one of the best ways to help along the cause of Freethought is to circulate THE TRUTH SEEKER.

THE Congregational church of Elgin, Ill., publishes the Elgin Workman, in which they advertise for Sunday-school scholars. Desperate missionary efforts are evidently made. Elgin is full of work people, and to them this paper seems to be especially addressed. To get them into the fold on Sundays an article is copied from the Christian Statesman, in which the necessity of the Christian Sabbath is pointed out in statements like this:

"This portion of time, thus set apart, is sacred, and the public desecration of it is an immorality which strikes at the very foundation of social order and of all legitimate authority, and is to be restrained and punished like blasphemy and other crimes of similar character and tendency."

From the Christian Intelligencer is quoted the following upon the subject of opening art galleries and libraries on Sundays:

"They will also be disappointed if they expect to elevate the character or ameliorate the condition of the workingman by Sunday entertainments. The device has failed utterly in Europe. The Nihilists and the Socialists of the most extreme sort, who seek to destroy all religion and morality as much as they seek to destroy social distinctions, who are Atheists and advocates of the most gross and pernicious profligacy, are to be found in the towns where art galleries, music halls, theaters, and all places of amusement are open on the Sabbath. Every man who has been in Europe knows that these Sunday shows do not tend to diminish the patronage of the wine and beer and liquor shops. We feel certain that they tend to increase the patronage of such places. And it is perfectly evident that they are absolutely ineffectiv to bring about the moral elevation of the laboring classes. The only benefit accruing is that workingmen learn how to make artistic articles. It would be easy to make such arrangements so that the end could be attained on other days. It is also to be remembered that deep moral degradation has been often associated with a knowledge of art."

So here we hav three Christian papers asking workmen to make slaves of themselvs by voting for or refusing to ask for repeal of laws depriving them of one-seventh of their time, and otherwise curtailing their liberty to do as they like with the time not necessarily spent in the work-shop. The Congregational church of Elgin must think the workmen are fools!

THE Methodist General Conference advises that the Roman Catholics of this country be treated as heathens, and that missions for their conversion to Methodism be established and "administered as foreign missions." To which neighborly insolence the Sun suggests that the Methodists will do better to look sharply after the members their churches now hold on their rolls than to run after the Catholics. "Religious skepticism," it says, "is appearing among the Methodists, and weakening the force of the body which of old knew only religious faith and zeal. Dr. Curry, their chief scholar, confesses that he has come to the conclusion that many of the Bible stories are only old women's tales, and that the ancient veneration for the scriptures as the word of God must slowly disappear. More than that, this is no time for war among the different divisions of the Christian army. They are confronted by a common enemy, and their common safety requires that Catholic and Protestant should fight shoulder to shoulder against unbelief."

The Activ Mind of Youth.

From the Somerville Journal.

"What was cats made for, mother?" asked a Somerville little boy, who has been scratched by a household tabby.

"Cats made for? Well, I suppose to kill mice."

"Who made 'em?"

"God made them."

"What was mice made for?"

"What was mice made for? For some purpose, I suppose. For cats to catch, perhaps."

"Did God make the mice, too?"

"He did; he made all things."

"Well if the cats is made for catchin' mice, God wouldn't need to make cats if he hadn't made any mice, would he?"

"No, I suppose not."

"What did he make them for, then?"

"Make what?"

"The mice."

"Child, it is time for you to go to school. Hurry or you'll be late."

Letters from Friends.

GANANOQUE, CAN., May 6, 1884.

MR. EDITOR: Find inclosed $5, to be used as directed elsewhere.

A little band of Liberals in this town hav organized a society, and the ignorant and narrow-minded bigots are trying hard to stamp us out with their opinions and threats, but we are trying to work up an interest in our movement. Some Liberals are afraid to act with us for fear they will be "talked about." That is just what we want in order to advance our cause. We are trying to organize a quartet club and string band. We lack a violinist—one who can read music passably well—and would like to correspond with such a one.

Fraternally yours, HENRY SMITH.

BOX 614, UPPER SANDUSKY, OHIO, May 12, 1884.

MR. EDITOR: As you hav taken such kindly interest in my welfare, and given me an introduction to the readers of THE TRUTH SEEKER, accompanied by a testimonial of my abilities professionally, I should like to get permission to say a few words in expression of gratitude to you and S. A. Stewart, of Wayland, and one or two others who hav written me since you noticed me in THE TRUTH SEEKER of March 29th. For the kind letter of Stewart's and the birth-day present, I say with all sincerity, please accept my thanks.

I would like to say to all Freethinkers who may hav any small pictures of any kind they would like to hav a crayon or pastel painting made of that I will make them very low and guarantee to satisfy you in every respect. The work I do is not of the ordinary kind of crayon. It is what is called stippled or painted, a higher grade of work than the drawings. If you will correspond with me I promis I will satisfy you that you will never get another chance to get good work at the price I will do it for now.

I do not like the idea of being an object of charity, as S. A. Stewart, of Wayland, Mich., proposes in your issue of May 3d, and take this way of trying to be self-sustaining. True, as Stewart says, I hav been greatly crippled by adverse circumstances and poor health, and for two years past my trouble has been increased by the addition of constant sickness in my family. This, together with the stringency of money matters and hard times, puts me in rather an embarrassing situation, but I do not believe that I am half so badly off as hundreds who are worse in every way than I, and who are not able to work if they could get it to do. To them, I would suggest, make your donations, and let me work. Hoping at once to hear from Liberal friends in regard to this matter, and promising to be partial in charges to Freethinkers, I will not impose on your space farther. With well wishes to THE TRUTH SEEKER office forces and its supporters, I am

Yours respectfully and in gratitude, F. E. STURGIS.

WAYNESBURG, PA., May 19, 1884.

MR. EDITOR: I wrote you some time ago that I had engaged Mr. C. B Reynolds to deliver two lectures here. He was here on the twelfth and thirteenth and lectured to full houses both evenings. So far as I know these were the first Infidel lectures ever delivered in our town, and if there had been any efficacy in prayer I am confident they would never hav been delivered. Strange to relate, however, Christian prayers availed naught, and the great Jehovah allowed this "little fat man" to show up his infamous, selfish, unlovable character without a murmur. Jehovah is certainly growing less vindictiv, less cruel, more just, more merciful. I think he must hav turned Infidel. He is certainly not subject to those fits of wrathful vengeance so common in the days of Moses. Hear what he would hav done with such men as Mr. Reynolds then—"If thy brother, the son of thy mother, or thy son, or thy daughter, or the wife of thy bosom, or thy friend, which is as thine own soul, entice thee secretly, saying, let us go and serve other gods, . . . thou shalt not consent unto him, nor hearken unto him; neither shall thine eye pity him; neither shalt thou spare, neither shalt thou conceal him; but thou shalt surely kill him" (Deut. xiii, 6). But here we hav it. A young minister sees in Mr. Reynolds's visit to our town the special providence of God. Instead of strengthening Infidels in their belief he thinks it strengthened Christians in theirs. Ah, indeed! Let him lay this flattering unction to his heart and deceive himself if he can. He may also succeed in deceiving some of his congregation, but the more intelligent, thoughtful, observing ones know better. Mr. Reynolds has stirred up the putrid orthodoxy of this town as it was never stirred up before; and so great is the stench that it is becoming offensiv to many who hav long reveled in a mire that education had taught them to believe was unwonted purity. Many of the weak-kneed hav come out more boldly than ever before; some who had never before questioned the wisdom of their dogmatic faith hav begun to doubt, and if the spirit of investigation that has been awakened is only supplied with proper food, their doubts must soon develop into absolute unbelief. Mr. Reynolds's lectures were the cause of many Liberal books and papers being disseminated among our people, and I hav great faith in these. Let us once get honest intelligence sufficiently aroused to investigate this subject and our part of the conversion is done. We hav a gigantic work to perform. We require big consciences and brave hearts to meet the discouragements that false education and inherited superstition array against us. But the satisfaction of having acted conscientiously is worth much more than all the fame that can be derived from the suppression of honest convictions. To work, then, fellow-Liberals, in earnest! Every Liberal tract, every Liberal paper, every Liberal book, every Liberal lecture has its influence in shattering somebody's faith, in opening somebody's eyes, in giving somebody a glimmer of the light of truth.

Such men as Mr. Reynolds should be kept diligently at work. I was instrumental in bringing him to our town and had the honor of being with him most of the time during his stay here. He is a brilliant conversationalist, a big-hearted, jovial companion, and an earnest, stirring lecturer. He inspires confidence and seems to throw a halo of cheerfulness around him. Though I had known him but a short time, yet when I grasped his hand to say good-bye at the depot it seemed like parting with a friend I had known for years.

The editor of one of our papers went and sat in the hall during one of Mr. Reynolds's lectures and then took it upon himself to vilify and misrepresent the lecturer in the columns of his paper. I think that when he should hav been listening to the lecturer and weighing what he said this editor must hav been conjuring his brain for some vile terms to bestow upon Mr. Reynolds in his next issue. We should naturally expect such actions to emanate from a bigoted believer in superstition.

One of our divines pretended to review Mr. Reynolds's lectures last night, but if I were to tell you about it now my letter would be too long—perhaps it is anyhow. I may say something about it at another time.

Earnestly yours, H. CLAY LUSE.

BINBROOSE, ONT., May 1, 1884.

MR. EDITOR: Inclosed find two dollars, for which please send "Some Mistakes of Moses," "Life of Thomas Paine," by Gilbert Vale, and a couple of "Answers to Christian Questions." One Mr. Walter intends giving a series of lectures on the life of Thomas Paine here this summer, and I am determined not to let him hav all his own way, unless he sticks to the truth, which is not very likely considering that he belongs to the Ancient Order of Sky-pilots, and is a Presbyterian at that. Another of the same order announced from his coward's castle last Sunday that Thomas Paine recanted before death. I took the liberty, on reaching home, to write him a letter explaining in the most delicate manner that he either told a wilful falsehood or was mistaken; and now some Christians here wonder how I can be wicked enough to contradict a man of God. Certainly I had not done so. How do I know but that Jehovah is again putting a lie into the mouths of all his prophets or pilots, as the case may be? Or how do I know that the glory of God will not more abound through their lie? They must certainly think so.

I drove to Hamilton to hear Mr. Chainey lecture. And what a contrast between the pure, wise, and beautiful teachings I heard from him, and the hell-fire, blood-thirsty sermons preached from the pulpits of churches. Mr. Chainey lectures here again on the 16th. Subject, "Life and Teachings of Ingersoll."

J. LOVELL.

ESCANABA, April 30, 1884.

MR. EDITOR: Your account reached me first, so I will be the first to respond. I think if I had done that sooner and not waited for some one else, you would probably hav had the pay for your papers, and been saved the trouble and annoyance you hav been subject to by neglect. I think if THE TRUTH SEEKER had been as good when it first started as it is now, you would hav had very many more subscribers than you now hav. You may rest assured that unless some unforeseen thing happens to prevent, you will get your pay for your paper ere long; then if we can't keep straight, we will order it stopped at once.

MRS. ADELIA DARLING.

ST. CATHERINES, ONT., April 30, 1884.

MR. EDITOR: Is it not to be lamented that so many sincere orthodox Christians still cling so tenaciously to the old, ignorant, traditional doctrin, taught them by their ignorant preachers; that there is somewhere in the skies an omnipotent, omniscient, all-wise, forbearing, merciful, and gracious God, without body or parts, visible and invisible, three in one, and one in three; who, in his infinit goodness and plenitude of his power, governs all things in heaven and earth, and is especially mindful of his chosen Christian people to direct them aright? Candid Christian reader, I ask you now for your sincere consideration. Your Bible says God created the heaven and the earth; the earth had no form, void and darkness was on its face, on which God's spirit moved. God said, Let there be light, and there was light. Bear in mind he had already made heaven and earth, but it seems they did not suit your all-wise, omniscient God, for you see he is now altering them, and, strange as it may appear, he divided the light before there was any, which is preposterous. He said, Let there be a firmament in the midst of the waters (absurd), but the elements did not obey him; he had to make the firmament, and divided the waters under and above it (preposterous); he then said, "Let the waters under the heaven be gathered into one place" (this is not true, for you know the waters are not all in one place), and it was so. Here the elements again obey him. He then said, Let the earth bring forth grass, fruit, trees, etc., and it was so. The elements again yielded to his request. He then, after the third day, said, Let there be lights to divide the day from the night (he had already divided the light from darkness), and it was so. The elements were again obedient to him. But even after it was so, he then made the two great lights (contradictory), and stars, and set them in the firmament. This is not true, for we know they are not set. He then said, "Let the waters bring forth abundantly that hath life." Here the elements did not obey him, for he had to create great whales, and every living creature. He then said, "Let the earth bring forth the living creatures, cattle, beasts," etc., and it was so. Again, here, bear in mind, he said it, and it was so; but afterwards made beasts, cattle, etc., and saw it was good. He then said. "Let us [now it seems there is someone with him] make man in our image, after our likeness." But instead of doing so, he created man in his own image, male and female created he them, and blessed them, and saw everything he had made was very good. Again, here, where is your all-wise God's precious omniscience that he had first to see his created things before he knew they were good? On the seventh day he ended his work, rested, and blessed it. But after this your Bible says the Lord God (who was that?) made earth and heavens (God made heaven), formed man of the dust, etc., planted a garden, put the man into it to dress it (did that paradisaical garden require dressing?), and told the man he might freely eat of every tree of the garden, except of the tree of knowledge, etc.; the day he ate of it he should surely die. Bear in mind this was said by your all-wise, foreknowledge Lord God. He then brought the beasts, and fowls, etc., to Adam, to see (again, here, he had to see—did not know it before) what he would call them, etc. Again, bear in mind, your almighty, omniscient God, who had previously just said, "Let there be, etc., and it was so." And he had already created a female, etc. But now your Lord God goes to work mechanically, like a finite surgeon, renders Adam insensible with sleep, then takes one of his ribs (and closes the fissure with flesh), from which he makes a woman, brings her to the man, who said she was now of his bones and flesh, and was taken out of man. How could Adam know all this when he was in a deep sleep? Both were naked but not ashamed.

Then one of God's subtil beasts, the serpent, it seems, knew the precept that the Lord God had given to the man, and recited it the woman truthfully, saying, "God hath said ye shall not eat of every tree of the garden." She said, "We may eat of the fruit of the trees of the garden, but not of the fruit [no fruit in precept] of the tree that is in the midst [not so in precept] of the garden. Ye shall not eat of it, neither shall ye touch it [not so in precept] lest ye die." Again, here the serpent tells the whole truth (I admire that serpent; it would not lie) to the woman, saying, "Ye shall not surely die, for God doth know the day ye eat thereof, your eyes shall be opened and ye shall be as gods," etc. When the woman saw the tree was good for food (how did she know before tasting it), and pleasant to the eye, and would make one wise (common sense), she, therefore, ate of it, as did also her husband; and as the serpent (not God) had told her, their eyes were opened. This transit from blindness, unopened eyes, to the bright sunlight of day and God's celestial garden, must hav overwhelmed them with exquisit delight. And now they knew for the first time that they are naked. Again, how did Adam (who did not even know that he was naked), with unopened eyes, name beasts, fowls, etc., and know that his wife was of his bones and flesh, etc., and how was the food pleasant to the woman's unopened eyes? Here the ignorant bring in their allegories, but the Bible writer does not mention them. Truth never errs, falsehood always. Again, did not your all-wise, foreknowledge Lord God tell that innocent man a positiv lie, when he told him the day he eat of the tree of knowledge, etc., he should surely die? Of all things, I abhor a lie. Next they hear the voice of the Lord God without body or parts, walking, etc., and he asked Adam if had eaten of the tree (had the Lord God's word proved true the man and woman would hav been dead), and he told the truth. He then asked the woman what she had done, and she said, "The serpent beguiled me, and I did eat;" which you know is false. The serpent did not even insinuate that she should eat of tree or fruit, but simply told her the truth; and for this your forbearing, merciful Lord God cursed it. Again, here, ponder well and you will see at once the palpable injustice of your long-suffering, benevolent Lord God in wreaking vengeance on the serpent for telling the truth. Could not the serpent hav justly said, and with the best of reasons, "Lord God, you told the man the day he eat of the forbidden tree he should surely die. He did eat of it but did not die. You lied to him; therefore curse yourself. I told the woman nothing but the truth; and as I had told her, so it came to pass. Wherefore cursedst thou me?" Again here the fanatics bring in the allegories; it was the devil that talked through the serpent. But this only brings out more of their ignorance. If it was the devil, then why did not their just God curse him instead of the innocent serpent and the ground? The Lord God said to the serpent, "Because thou hast done this." Done what? How he would like to throw the blame on the serpent! The Bible writer has headed the third chapter of Genesis, "The Serpent deceiveth Eve," which is false, though many would like to hav it true. Well might God say the serpent should go on its belly—any simpleton might know from the structure of the reptil that it could not go in any other way, and the combined powers of all the most mighty gods could not make it go on the end of its tail, as the ignorant believed it did before it was cursed. Again, "dust it shall eat," which is false. We know they eat flesh. It is much harped on by the ignorant, that Christ was promised, but there is no such word in the verse. Next he multiplies the woman's, etc. (obscene), curses the ground. Forbearing, merciful God that! Next he says, "The man is become as one of us" (I hope much better than the one described in the Bible), and now fears he will eat of the tree of life and liv forever. Where is that all-powerful God now who just said it and it was done? Has he lost all his mighty supernatural power that he must now physically, like a common man, follow the laws of nature, and drive the man out of the garden, and mechanically station there a sword that turns, etc., to protect that wonderful tree?

Respected Christian reader, can you now believe in an almighty, all-wise, omniscient God who, in his infinit goodness, would create a man and a woman who he knew from all eternity would not only disobey him, but entail on their posterity an everlasting curse, sin, shame, misery, and bloodshed? No, never, never, never! I sincerely believe if any man or woman reads the preceding narrativ carefully, he or she will at once see that the Bible story of the creation is one of the grossest tissues of falsehoods that ever was fabricated by the most illiterate, ignorant, superstitious, and supernatural fanatics imaginable. But oh, how I long to see the sun of reason dispel those superstitious, visionary myths and phantoms from their unenlightened minds, and fill them with useful knowledge and the glorious realities of this world as they are here and now, and ever bask in the illumination of an enlightened existence! They will ever love truth, sobriety, industry, integrity, justice, and honesty, which will ever actuate them to transact business with all their fellow-beings in such a manner that they will not only not be ashamed nor afraid to see them again, but will always be pleased to see them, and can look every person full in the face. This all intelligent beings are delighted to see. But alas! behold that contemptible, degraded, mean, low, vile wretch of a lawyer here (St. Catherines, Ont.), who, under his holy Bible oath, has proved himself to be a liar, perjurer, embezzler, and sneak thief, and whenever he meets or sees his victim that he has ruined, he hangs his guilty, sneak-thievish head, and shirks, skulks, sneaks, and slinks; and his Christian partner who sings hallelujahs on the holy Sabbath in his Christian church here has also, after kissing his holy Bible, proved himself a liar, perjurer, and shameful embezzler, who now has to suffer the terrible ordeal of his innocent victim's gaze. The holy Bible kiss is powerless to force the truth from these degraded lawyers' desperate falsehood lips. But oh, how delightful to see that wonderful mechanism, man and woman, whose noble and enlightened minds ever actuate their hallowed lips to utter the precious truth these wretched lawyers, with all their wealth (which they got mostly by robbing their innocent victim behind his back), can never enjoy this world, because that terrible, unwieldy load of guilt will hang on their guilty heads whilst their lives endure. May mysticisms be banished from unenlightened minds, and good morals, justice, kindness, mercy, charity, and love be instituted instead, and may they ever be trained physically, morally, and intellectually in all the immutable and philosophical laws of nature, so their greatest desire will ever be to do what is right, not from fear of vindictiv wrath or punishment, but because it pleases them.

Ever onward with the good cause of secularism. May it be heralded from pole to pole. A. Moot.

BEHOLD WHAT A GREAT FIRE A LITTLE MATTER KINDLETH.

Mr. Editor: For over thirty years I hav been talking upon the various reforms of the world, advocating anti-rum, anti-tobacco, antislavery, equal rights, sexual temperance, and common sense, against fables and myths; and teaching general goodness as more prevalent than total depravity. In all this time, though I hav, now and then, found an opponent who used pretty strong language, yet, as a general thing, toleration, kindness and charity hav tempered their words and robbed them of their sting.

In view of this, I really fail to understand why my consenting to simply go and see what I can of Spiritual phenomena (so-called), and to tell what I see, should raise such a tumult of vituperation, scorn, and ridicule. Perhaps I ought to feel complimented by this manifestation of interest, and so I would be if I only had the consciousness of knowing that I merited the notice I am receiving. But when I realize how little I know of these wonderful manifestations that are puzzling scientists and thinkers, and fairly overturning the philosophy of ages, and also think of my inability to cope with what so many hav found incomprehensible, my heart fails me, and I dread the ordeal. Do you know, friends, that I am as easily gulled as a child? Why, it's a by word wherever I liv, "Oh! its no use to play a joke on Mrs. Slenker, for she always believes just what you tell her." It is a fact, too, that I try to believe in human truth and human goodness. Being unwilling to deceive others, I seldom expect to be deceived by them. But once convinced I am right, it takes mountains of evidence to move me. Mary Hutchison is not wrong in giving me a due amount of prejudice. I claim to be simply human and plenty of it. But I must insist that "all who do not enjoy life would cease to love it." If there is no happiness in the present and no hope for the future, I cannot conceive of anyone desiring its continuance. I am sure I should not, and I should be glad to hav Mary tell me how it could be possible for any one to to do so. And here is my whilom friend and correspondent, David Bruce, condemning me for not believing in one of the many gods that hav been conceived of by the ignorant and deluded creators.

Atheism is far from "effete." There are more Atheists today than there has ever been before since the historical period. The great mass of mind tends to Atheism. Will David please tell Elmina what views of a God he would wish her to believe in? I must say I am sorry his lot has been cast among the miserable and unhappy, the depraved and the wicked, the sick, the poor, and the starving. But is he sure even these are really so miserable as he imagins? Will he pick out fifty or a hundred of those whose misery he deems so "insupportable," and watch their lives a few days and weeks, and then tell me if they do not enjoy more than they suffer. I hav been all over Snowville (mentally) this morning, and could not put my finger on one miserable, or even comparativly unhappy, person. There are two old men who hav apparently but a few weeks or months more of life to liv, but they do not seem at all unhappy. There is one large family who seem destitute of nearly all the comforts of life, but the children dance, run, play, and laugh as merrily as the petted darlings of a palace.

Yonder is an old black woman with a house full of pickaninnies, and simply living from hand to mouth, yet I hav seen the little bare-footed things skip, dance, and play on the cold frozen ground and their rags fluttering in the wind, and their white teeth grinning in smiles; while cheery words of mirthful pleasure made glad the whole place.

I do not deny there is wretchedness, misery, want, woe, and crime—rivers and oceans of it—scattered all over our beautiful earth, but I say it is all exceptional, and this is why suicide is exceptional and probably ever will be. In the fifteen years we hav lived here, I hav heard of but one self-murderer in all the country round, and he was insane.

I may hav "left school a long time ago," but I taught school fourteen years, and hav been learning in the great school of humanity ever since, though I hav failed to learn anything of Gods and ghosts, and may miss doing so even if I go where spirits are supposed to be manifesting. I think I shall try it, ridicule or not. The money to go is slowly coming in. Mary, like David, thinks no manifestation will come in Elmina's repellant presence. But, really, I don't mean to be repellant. If the dead do liv, I want to know it. Why, I would giv my bottom dollar to-day to know that D. M. Bennett was "over there," and I should one day meet him and all the rest of our heroes who hav gone from earth. But I am not so conceited as to think my conversion would be a means of converting others. Seaver says I "cannot see ghosts for other people." Nor can I think thoughts for other people. But, probably, if I was convinced that death did not end all, Mary would study the subject with a desire to learn the weighty influences that had so wrought upon my "materialistic" mind. We each hav our personal friends and our own special field of influence.

If I can influence any one to be moral, temperate, kind, good, and happy, I shall be very glad, though I do not think, with Seward Mitchell, that even cities are as depraved as he seems to believe them. True, I hav not seen much of cities, but I thought there was a world of beauty, art, science, love, and pure happiness in all the cities I was in during my trip North. That there was also misery, destitution, and crime I am well aware, though I insist they are only incidentals.

The best way to make a child bad, untruthful, and vicious, is to insist he is so. But put him upon his mettle as a good, truthful, and honest boy, and he will strive to make his record tally with his reputation. Let us, then, look on the bright side and send out cheering words, glad thoughts, and hopeful messages that lift, elevate, and refine. Friend York says, "Let us find comfort in honest doubts." Elmina claims to be an honest doubter as regards the existence of Gods and spirits. Why, then, is she so culpable? She is willing to go and see, and should be commended for not doing as thousands are doing, turning her back on the whole thing and calling it humbug. Truly and hopefully, Elmina.

THE FOUNDATIONS OF RELIGION SHAKEN.

Poughkeepsie, N. Y., April 12, 1884.

Mr. Editor: If I am not intruding on the liberty of your paper by this letter, let me say this: the great question before the world just now, when the foundations of a particular fetich are fatally shaken; when science denies that Christ, as we conceive him, ever was; and when art bewails wildly that should ever hav been, is whether the Christian religion can exist at all; whether when a few more years hav passed away it will not present to a modern mind the spectacle that paganism once presented to a mediæval mind. The priests and ministers know that the church is in danger, both through attacks from without and through a kind of dry rot within. Lyell and others hav demolished and made ridiculous the Mosaic cosmogony. Strauss and others hav demolished with more or less success the Biblical and Christian miracles. No sane man now seriously believes that the sun ever stood still or that an ass spoke in human speech, or that a multitude of people were ever fed with a few loaves and fishes, or that any solid human form ever walked on the liquid sea.

It is now pretty well agreed that there are substantially beautiful things in the world which hav precedence over fancifully beautiful things. The other poets hav taught us the loveliness of nature, the painters hav shown us the loveliness of art. Meantime, what does the church do? Instead of accepting the new knowledge and the new beauty, instead of building herself up anew on the debris of her shattered superstition, she buries her face in her own ashes and utters a senil wail of protestation. Instead of calling upon her children to face the storm and to build up new bulwarks against the rising wave of secularism, she commands them to wail with her or to be silent. Instead of perceiving that the priests of Baal and Antichrist might readily be overthrown with the weapons forged by their own hands, she cowers before them, powerless in all the paralysis of superstition, in all the blind fatuity of prayer.

Mr. Editor, let us look the facts in the face. The teachers of the new knowledge hav unroofed our temple to the heavens, but hav not destroyed its foundations. They hav overthrown its brazen images, but hav not touched its solid walls. To put the case in other, stronger words, the God who thundered upon Sinai has vanished into air and cloud, but the God of man's heavenly aspiration is wonderfully quickened and alive. The Bible of wrath and prophecy is cast contemptuously aside, but the Bible of eternal poetry is imperishable, its wild dreams and aspirations being crystallized in such literature as cannot die. The historic personality of the gentle founder of Christianity becomes fainter and fainter as the ages advance, but, on the other hand, brighter and fairer grows the ideal which rose from the ashes of that Godlike man. Men reject the old miracle, but they at last accept a miracle of human idealism in one word, though Christianity has perished as a dogmatic world.

This being so, how does it behoove a Christian minister, eating the church's bread, but fully alive to her mortal danger, to steer his course? Shall he, as so many do, continue to act in the nineteenth century as he would hav acted in the fifteenth —or, indeed, in any century up to the Revolution? Shall he base his teachings on the certainty of miracles, on the existence of superiority in this world and the certainty of rewards and punishments in another? Shall he brandish the old hell-fire or scatter the old heavenly manna? Knowing in his heart that these things are merely the cast-off epidermis of a living and growing creed, he may, in perfect consciousness of God's approval, put aside the miraculous as unproven, if not irrelevant, warn the people against mere supernaturalism, proclaim with the apostles of the Renaissance the glory and loveliness of this world, its wondrous scenes, its marvelous story as written on the rocks and in the stars. J. G. O'Hara.

Oak Valley, Kan., April 8, 284.

Mr. Editor: I noticed an article by Dr. Chapman, of Cawker City, Kan., on the land question. He seems to think that three-fourths of the people in this state are incapable of conducting agricultural operations with profit. It is also claimed that nearly eighty per cent of those in business make a failure. Now, what is the remedy? Co-operation of the people in all branches of industry will solve the question. Then every co-operativ factory or farm would hav the best of superintendents to guide the business right. Such farms as Dalrymple's and Dr. Glem's of California hav the best of managers, and everything goes on like clock-work. Large farming is carried on with all the improved machinery, while small farmers may lose their farms from having mortgaged them in order to compete with farmers that can afford machinery to conduct them rightly. We of the Knights of Labor are aiming to establish co-operation both productiv and distributiv, and we are still organizing assemblies of that order in this state, and are meeting with good success. The doctor says, "Quit raising incapables, and commence to raise capables." Such an idea is a good one, but let us hav a chance first. So long as thousands are compelled from their struggle for existence to put their children to work in the mines, in factories, and on the farms, and the mothers are compelled to scrimp, save, and toil, when they should hav the most congenial surroundings and plenty of rest, so that their minds will not be in a perturbed condition while those that are to follow us are being molded, we cannot expect to hav any other class but incapables; while the majority of the people who are producing incapables do so naturally from the position of serfdom that they are in to the capitalists, who are only fifteen out of a hundred. The offspring of those that control the existence of the many become incapables from their living a luxurious and riotous life. But when we hav a system of conducting the industries of our country so that there can be no great rich ones, there will not be any great poor ones; so the cause that produces incapables will be done away with.

I remember spendin' one fine afternoon last summer with the doctor, viewing his little stone palace near Cawker City, that has a great variety of geological specimens studding its front wall. The sight was very pleasing to the eye.

Mr. Editor: Please send twenty copies of The Truth Seeker with Col. Ingersoll's "Orthodoxy." If the balance due on Mr. Bennett's monument is not paid up by that time, I shall send an extra dollar. To-day we celebrate the fiftieth anniversary of our union as husband and wife, and are both in our seventy-third year of our journey through life—still earnestly grasping after truth. John A. Jost.

An Ornamental Member of Society.

Charles C. Duncan is one of the pillars of Beecher's church. He is an elder, a member of the governing body, leader in all the class meetings, leading spirit of the Sunday-school and Bible classes, and, in fact, may be called one of the chief engineers of the Plymouth machine for the manufacture of saintly products. He is a day and night toiler in the vinyard and never wearies in his solicitude for the welfare of souls. Mr. Duncan has now been figuring in another role, and, as results prove, quiet a fleshly one. Judge Wallace, of the United States Circuit Court of New York, has handed down a decision which sets Captain Duncan up on a pedestal of greed, selfishness, and malfeasance, and it will probably take the combined power of Beecher's eloquence and Plymouth church influence to purify the afflicted brother. The captain has for many years been United States Shipping Commissioner at New York at a salary of $5,000 a year. The government allowed the captain a "reasonable sum" for clerk hire, and the law directs that the income from fees shall be turned over to the treasury, after deducting the expenses of the office. For many years it was noticed that the fees turned in by Captain Duncan did not amount to much, but nothing was said about it until the year 1882, when the captain made a report that he had collected $22,531 50 in fees for that year, and that the "expenses" had, strangely enough, amounted to just that sum—$22,531,50. This led to an investigation, and rare fun it was. The investigators went back through the preceding years and found a remarkable condition of things.

The captain was his own judge of what clerical help he needed, so he divided up the work of the office among as many deputies as were needed to eat up the receipts. Then he appointed his four sons as the deputies. For instance, in 1882 the receipts were $22 531,50. He paid his own salary of $5,000, and divided the rest equitably among the sons. That year the sons each received $3,648 salary. Going backward the investigators found that some years the sons were salaried as high as $4,600. In 1874, the receipts were very large. That year the four sons received $4,600 each, and other expenses were added up so that the government only got $123 out of the total receipts. In 1875 the sons were paid only $4,000 each as deputies, and from that time until the present, the whole receipts of the shipping office hav been divided between Duncan and his four sons. It was quite evident from this showing that Captain Duncan's capacity to bleed the treasury was only limited by his receipts. The number of his sons had nothing to do with it. If he had had only one son he would only hav had to pay himself $5 000, and turn the rest over to the son. If he had had a dozen sons they would simply hav had each to take lower salaries. But that the Duncan family, as a family, hav been well taken care of nobody will deny. Judge Wallace says under the law nothing can be done to recover this money. He can, therefore, only expose the conspiracy and leave it to the government to find a commissioner with more honesty, less piety, and fewer sons.

Bun replied:
"You are doubtless very big;
But all sorts of things and weather
Must be taken in together,
To make up a year
And a sphere.
And I think it no disgrace
To occupy my place.
If I am not so large as you,
You are not so small as I,
And not half so spry.
I'll not deny you make

Alone in an Unfurnished House.

"What's the use of so much study, I should like to know? And reading—what does one want to read for?"

"Why, Edward! What are you talking about? If you do not study and read, you will not know anything, hardly," said Edward's sister.

"What does one want to know so much for, Mollie? It is fun enough for me to play marbles, fly kites, and kick football, I think. Playing suits me to a 't.' I don't believe in so much studying. Books are a regular nuisance; and I don't intend to crack my brains, filling them with other people's thoughts, now, I can tell you."

"Books are real friends, Edward, and royal company, as maybe you will find out some day. With good books one need never be lonely, and, with the ideas of others, you can enrich your own mind. You had better pay more attention to your studies, Edward, if you ever expect to amount to anything in this world."

"Oh, you mind your business, Mollie, and stop preaching. Who wants to be an old bookworm, creeping inside of books and newspapers all day long!" and with a sudden toss, the first volume of the new history of England that Edward's father had put into his son's hands that very morning as an inducement to be studious, went flying up to the ceiling, and came down a partial wreck upon a delicate vase upon the table, breaking it in many pieces.

"There! you've broken the vase," exclaimed Mollie.

"I don't care—I wish it had been the book."

Mr. Beebe, in an adjoining apartment, was a listener to the foregoing conversation between his two children, and was deeply pained. His only son, although not a stupid boy, would play truant at school, and in many ways grieved his kind parents. Mr. Beebe had tried many plans to correct the bad, indolent habits of his boy, but all to no avail. He would not study; had little taste for reading, and was greatly in danger of growing up an ignoramus. For some time Mr. Beebe sat thinking. At length he seemed to hit upon a plan that he resolved to carry out.

He had recently purchased a beautiful summer residence on the border of a wood near the sea.

It was the last of May when he resolved to pay the place a visit, preparatory to arranging it for the summer, taking Edward along with him.

Arriving at the house after a long ride, they rested on the piazza awhile, and then Mr. Beebe told Edward that he must remain there until his return from a neighboring town, where he had some business.

"You will find some food in the pantry when hungry, and should I be gone all night there is a buffalo robe for you to sleep on. All I enjoin upon you is to stay here till I call for you," said his father.

"That I will, father, and I'll hav a jolly time chasing squirrels and hunting rabbits."

"All right, my son. Be sure you do not leave the premises until I come."

"No, sir."

Mr. Beebe rode away, and for a couple of hours young Edward amused himself roaming in the woods and throwing pebbles in the water, and then it came on to rain, and he went into the house. It rained and it poured.

Edward went into every room up-stairs and down. There was not a vestige of furniture, and presently a queer feeling came over Edward. The rain kept pouring down, and after several weary hours night approached. He ate a cracker or two that he found in the pantry, and sighed heavily.

"O dear, how lonesome it is here!" he said aloud. His voice echoed and resounded so that it almost frightened him.

"I wish there was a picture to look at, or something," he said. "These bare walls are dreadful blank. No carpet, no chairs, not even a cricket. O dear!" he sighed again. "I wish my father would come." The dark night drew on, but still he came not, and Edward began to be very nervous. He wished for a book or a newspaper, but there was not one in the house. He had never been fond of reading, and had nothing to recall of interest.

It grew very dark, and the rain kept beating down. One dim lamp he had, but he thought it only made the darkness more apparent. He screamed out in his nervousness, but the empty rooms echoed the scream in a hollow, sepulchral way that was anything but agreeable. Then he talked in a low tone, but every word seemed to call up other words from unknown sources, and at last he rolled himself in the buffalo robe and prepared to sleep, but just as he was about to drop off into the land of Nod something came rattling along the ceiling and walls, and his heart began to beat quickly.

"Maybe the house is haunted. I've heard of such things," he thought, and he covered his head with the robe. Edward was very superstitious on account of his ignorance. Ignorant people are nearly always superstitious in one way or another.

Just then, something touched his hand, and he shrieked in agony.

"There must be ghosts in the house," he whispered, as the cold sweat started from every pore. "Oh, they'll kill me! they'll kill me!"

Edward passed a dismal night with the imaginary ghosts for company, and when daylight came, pale and haggard, he did not look like the brave, hearty boy his father had left there the day before. He went out with the first streak of dawn, and nothing could prevail upon him to enter the house again until his father came.

Toward noon he heard the clattering hoofs of his father's horse, and ran with great delight to meet him.

"Well, my boy, how hav you passed the time in my absence?" inquired Mr. Beebe. "Had a jolly time, I suppose."

"O father!" exclaimed Edward, "how could you leave me alone in that unfurnished house? Besides, it is haunted. I know it is. Father," said he, lowering his voice, "there are ghosts in there!"

"What!" laughed Mr. Beebe. "How do you know there are ghosts in the house?"

"Oh, they came and tickled me. And I heard them jumping rope and dancing all night."

"Lively ghosts, weren't they?" and Mr. Beebe laughed and shook his sides. "How I would hav admired to hav seen them."

"Father, it was dreadful, dreadful! It is no laughing matter, I assure you," and the poor boy sank down in tears, as he recalled the night's experience.

"So you don't like the idea of living alone in an unfurnished house, Ned?"

"No, I don't."

"Couldn't prevail on you to stop there a week or two, could I?"

"No, no, father. I would rather suffer almost anything then stay there another night."

"Well, Ned, I suppose you had rather a hard time of it, but your ghosts, I fancy, were nothing more than rats, and as you are larger than a rat, I think you could easily demolish a ghost of that sort.

"But, Ned, to be alone in an unfurnished house a few hours is nothing compared to being alone for a lifetime in an unfurnished mind, such as yours. You will not read a book; you will not study; consequently your mind, the house you dwell in, is an unfurnished one. If you would be intelligent—if you would be a blessing to yourself; company for yourself and for others, you must read, reflect, study; thus you will brighten, polish, adorn, and beautify your mind, and become what I long to see you, a good and noble human being. There are over 25,000 books published yearly, about seventy per day. Of course, you cannot read them all, and too many are not worth the ink and paper on which they are printed. But there are good books that will benefit and bless you—such I desire you to read. I want you to resolve to know as much as other boys, and more. With a good, interesting book last night, you would not hav thought of being lonely, or nervous.

Edward saw the force of his father's remarks, and resolved to profit by them. The idea of his own mind being as blank and cheerless as the walls of that unfurnished house was horrible.

Mollie, and his parents, were rejoiced at the good effects of the lesson he had received, and Edward shuddered whenever he thought of living alone in an unfurnished house.

Be Kind to Animals.

Dear boys and girls who read the Children's Corner of this grand advocate of all reform, THE TRUTH SEEKER, I want to say a few words to you, if Miss Wixon will allow me a small portion of her valuable space.

First let me say I love you all, for you are to be the future men and women with whom must rest the splendid burden of carrying to a successful ending the noble work that your fathers and mothers are doing now; hence, I say I love you, and I rejoice that a portion of this splendid paper has been devoted to your interests every week. You will now learn, while yet boys and girls, how much better a religion it is to become upright, honest men and women, delighting in preventing all suffering and in doing good, than to believe in that foolish teaching called Christianity, which has made men murderers who hav desolated the earth for pretty nearly two thousand years, because everybody could not believe the silly and absurd things that they themselvs did.

Of all duties that every good Liberal should be happy to perform, none is more important and necessary than that he or she should be just to every living thing with which he or she may hav any dealings, whether men or animals. But I wish more especially to speak a few words to you about being kind to animals, because they hav so few friends, and cannot speak for themselvs. A man or a boy who will abuse or torment a defenseless animal is far more of a coward than one who abuses a human being, for the animal cannot inform anyone how it has been treated, and thereby cause its tormentor to be punished as he deserves.

No young person will, I feel certain, be guilty of so unmanly an act as to abuse a poor, unfortunate beast, who naturally looks to man for kind treatment and protection, since he labors unceasingly for him without pay; surely the least man can do for his faithful servant is to treat him with uniform kindness.

I hav often seen thoughtless boys tease cats and dogs, which I feel sure they would not hav done had they only stopped to think how unhappy their sport made the poor beasts. No truer mark of a lady or gentleman can be pointed out than their care for the animals under their charge. Remember these creatures cannot speak to make their wants known, and often (as in the case of the horse) make no cry, even if in very great agony. Recollect always to water and feed animals regularly, and you will do much toward making their existence a happy one.

I will now close with a little poem of my own, entitled,

BE KIND TO ANIMALS.

Be kind to those dumb friends whose lives are spent
In faithful service and unflagging zeal;
Toiling, without reward, from morn till night
To serve our pleasure—hear their mute appeal:

"He whom we serve with all our best endeavor,
Lift not the lash! Oh, spare the brutal goad!
Withold not fresh, sweet bed, and generous meal,
Nor overtask our strength with cruel load!"

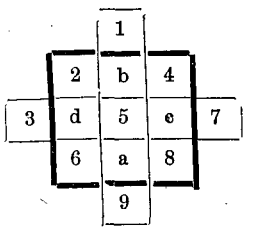
ANSWER TO ENIGMA IN CHILDREN'S CORNER, MAY 17, 1884.

Jessie Eason.

Correspondence.



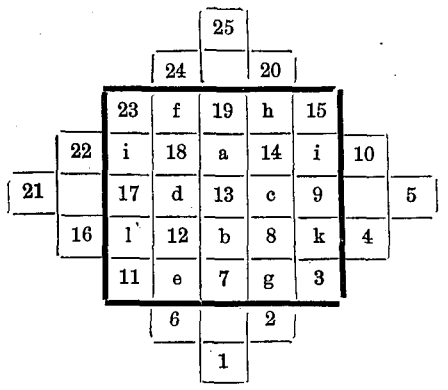
CLEVELAND, May 14, 1884.

DEAR MISS WIXON: I see by THE TRUTH SEEKER of May 10th that the magic square business is likely (if continued) to take up entirely too much space in the Children's Corner, because the end can never be reached if continued until time is no more. I hav already made them composed of thousands of thousands of numbers, and am no nearer the end than we are to the end of time, and consequently I thought it would be more interesting to the young readers, and, possibly, to some older ones, to change it to something shorter, and at the same time equally interesting. For the above reason I will introduce a new subject, the properties of one of the Arabic characters used in numeration; I will call attention to the wonderful properties of the figure 9. No other figure possesses such properties. If we multiply the figure 9 thus, 9 multiplied by 2 equals 18, and add the two figures together, they will make the original figure 9; now multiply 9 by 3, 9 multiplied by 3 equals 27, and add the two figures together, they are again reduced to 9; now multiply 9 by 4, 9 multiplied by 4 equals 36, and add the two figures together, they are again reduced to 9; and so you may multiply 9 by any number you please, large or small, and by adding the figures together time after time until the whole is reduced to one figure, and it invariably will result in 9; no other figure in the whole catalog possesses such powers or qualities. Respectfully, H. VAN PELT.

NEW YORK, May 4, 1884.

Your correspondent, J. K. P. Baker, must excuse me if I venture to criticise his explanation of the formation of "magic squares" having five cells on each side. His "formula" No. 1, in THE TRUTH SEEKER, May 10th, is really drawn from the numerical square No. 2. Why the letters of the "formula" are so arranged is the point that needs explanation. For at least two hundred years there has been no mystery connected with so-called "magic" squares, and if you will giv the space from week to week, I will giv such an explanation of them as will show that like all other problems in mathematics there is nothing "difficult" in them when one knows how to make the key that unlocks the combination. Let me premise, however, that the source of most of the information we now hav in connection with magic squares is "Hutton's Recreations in Mathematics," published in 1814, London, in two volumes. The work is full of amusing as well as highly instructiv curiosities.

It is always best to begin every investigation by solving the simplest problems connected with it. I, therefore, begin with the simplest magic square that can be formed, that of the numbers from 1 to 9 inclusiv. I do not know that the following method of forming it has ever been in print, and it is general for all squares having an odd number on each side. It is as follows:



Having drawn the square indicated by the heavy lines having nine cells, each side is completed as in the figure by an outside cell. Place the number 1 in any outside cell, and arrange the other numbers in regular order diagonally in all the lines containing three cells. Then take the number 1 from the outside cell and place it in that vacant cell inside of the primary square which is next beyond the middle line between it and the number 9. That is, place the number 1 in the cell in which the letter a stands. Place the number 9 outside the primary square in the first vacant square above the middle line. This carries it to b. Take 3, which is outside, to the right, across the middle line and put it in the first square after crossing over it. This carries it to c. Lastly take 7 to the first vacant square to the left across the middle vertical line or row of the primary square, that is, to the cell d. Then erase the outside cells and you will hav the magic square which has puzzled so many young people, as follows:

6	1	8

As already suggested, this method of forming this square is general for all squares having five, seven, nine, etc., cells on each side. In order not to revert to it again I append the square of twenty-five cells, formed in this manner:

By the rule the number 1, outside the primary square, goes into the first vacant square inside and above the middle horizontal line, that is, to the square a; 25 goes to b; 21 goes to c; 5 to d; 24 to e; 6 to f; 20 to g; 2 to h; 22 to i; 10 to j; 16 to k, and 4 to l. Then erase the outside cells and the magic square is seen.

23	6	19	2	15
10	18	1	14	22
17	5	13	21	9
4	12	25	8	16
11	24	7	20	3

Who first invented this method of constructing magic squares of numbers having an "odd root" I do not know. It must be regarded as quite ingenious, but it by no means develops the full solution of the "puzzle." The reader can now form the square of 49 cells in the same way. ADDISON.

EDITOR OF CHILDREN'S CORNER: As the "magic square" formed of any twenty-five consecutiv numbers, and which may also be formed of any twenty-five numbers in arithmetical progression, seems to be interesting to your young readers, I send you a "magic square" formed of the numbers from 1 to 36 inclusiv, with the remark, that it is also true that any thirty-six numbers in arithmetical progression may be used. This "magic square" givs a sum of 111 in every line of six numbers, and there are many curious details connected with it if one choses to take time in discovering them. Notice, for instance, how many combinations of four numbers analogously situated giv a sum of 74. These combinations, added to the two central diagonal numbers, 16 and 21, or 22 and 15, make also the number 111, of course.

Here is the square:

31	2	33	4	5	36
30	26	10	9	29	7
19	17	16	15	20	24
18	23	22	21	14	13
12	8	27	28	11	25
1	32	3	34	35	6

The most curious fact in connection with this square is that by its aid it may be demonstrated that "the world will come to an end" in 1887, a date that is fearfully near at hand. ADDISON.

DAVID J. COTTER'S

BELT OF LIFE,

AND

"WILSONIA"

IMPROVED

Magnetic Garments.

312 MYRTLE AVE.,

BROOKLYN, N. Y.

For the Relief and Cure of All Forms of Disease in its Worst Stages.

Readers of THE TRUTH SEEKER, read the annexed letter from a well-known physician who attended the following remarkable case:

Mrs. L——, a lady residing in Brooklyn, E. D., for two year, suffered terribly with a uterine tumor; her attendant physician advised an operation, but having great aversion to the surgeon's knife, she would not submit to it; some friends having used my garments and been benefited thereby advised her to try them. About the middle of Febrnary, this year, a body set, as advised by myself, was purchased for her.

The following letter will show the results and prove the value of my improved appliances in all forms of disease:

MAY 2, 1884.

MR. D. J. COTTER, Dear Sir: Thinking you would like to know of the following, I notify you.

Mrs. L——, a patient of mine, had a nterine tumor of two years' standing and would not consent to an operation; some friends recommended her to use your MAGNETIC GARMENTS (a body set, I believe). Unbeknown to me she did purchase and wear them, for ten weeks, so she now informs me. Two days ago I was sent for to attend her and found the tumor had been expelled entire while standing, without pain or flow.

Have you met with anything of this kind before by the application of your garments? I should be glad to have some information on the point Yours respectfully,

DR. A. R PETTIT,
149 Tompkins ave., Brooklyn, N. Y.

COPY OF MY REPLY.

MAY 3, 1884.
312 Myrtle ave., Brooklyn, N. Y.

DR. A. R. PETTIT, Dear Sir: Your favor received. In reply I beg to say I have several such cases, some of many years' standing, cured by the use of my Garments. I would much like to see the tumor mentioned in your letter, if in your possession, if you will name a time I can call upon you. I will then give you all the info mation possible respecting the above-mentioned cases, and, if necessary, providing my patrons are willing, will place you in correspondence with them, or the physicians who attended them prior to the use of my Garments. I await your reply. Yonrs respectfully,

DAVID J. COTTER.

Dr. A. R. PETTIT having replied, I called upon him and saw the tumor; it was the fibrous tissue of a large one; all other matter seemed to have been absorbed (by the action of the Garments) before it was expelled. I fully satisfied him of other such cases by letters in my possession from parties cured and their physicians.

The above speaks for itself, as the full name and address of the physician is given, and I have no doubt but he will be pleased to satisfy any inquiring mind of the above facts. D. J. COTTER.

These garments are a decided improvement on anything of the kind ever offered, and only produced after many years of close study and scientific experiment.

Much depends upon the knowledge of how to apply such garments. Many persons have really good appliances to offer, but unless they are judiciously and scientifically applied they are valueless Any person writing for pamphlet and information; by sending a full statement of their case, how long suffering, and all symptoms, would be advised free of cost, just what garment it would be necessary to use to effect a cure, price of same, etc. They are made to fit all parts of the body, easy of adjustment, and as comfortable to use as ordinary underwear; being well ventilated, they are cool, and the infusion of magnetism into the system produce a cool, pleasant feeling in the hottest weather, and will cure any of the following forms of disease: RHEUMATISM, GOUT, LUMBAGO, PARALYSIS, NEURALGIA, DYSPEPSIA, LOCOMOTOR ATAXIA, SPINAL DISEASE, ASTHMA, BRONCHITIS, DROPSY, TUMORS, CANCERS, and others not necessary to mention, as I claim that disease in any and all of its forms originates from one primary cause, a breaking up of the Ganglionic Nerves, preventing a flow of Odic or Vital force from the Medulla Oblonga a at the base of the brain to various parts of the body (just as the severing of a telegraph wire would prevent the message being sent), the result being the iron particles in the blood become demagnetized; congestion and disease follow; if in the small of Back, Lumbago and Kidney trouble; in the shoulders, Rheumatism; in the Head, Nefraigia or Neuralgia, and so on in any part of the human organization. We have a thousand and one different names for disease, though produced by and through one source only, and it is by strengthening the Ganglionic Nerves, conserving the vital forces, and infusing magnetism into the system, I effect so many marvelous cures after all other means have failed.

REMARKABLE CURE OF PARALYSIS.

NOV. 13, 1883.

DAVID J. COTTER, Dear Sir: In reply to your inquiry as to the effects of the Garments sent me I am pleased to say the result has been astonishing to myself and friends. The first two pieces sent gave me such relief that I had great confidence of being entirely cured when I obtained the others, and I was not disappointed My paralysis has entirely disappeared and I am altogether a changed woman, and it is only two weeks since I got the full set. I suffered very much with weakness in my chest and lungs. Now I can sing and talk as well as ever, also read aloud without the slightest difficulty. I can safely recommend the garments to any persons suffering as I was.

MRS. E P. PLEASANTS,
Alderson, Monroe Co., West Va.

P. S.—My daughter has also found great relief from the use of your garments. See her note inclosed.

CURED OF NERVOUS PRESTRATION AND HYSTERIA.

DR. COTTER, Dear Sir: I am very happy to state that my general health has improved wonderfully since the application of your garments. From undergoing the operation to my eye my health had become fearfully impaired, until my attending physician feared for the results; but from the first ten days of wearing your garments I began to improve. I seemed to get new vitality, and with renewed health my sight got wonderfully better, until now I feel myself perfectly cured, and I am out of my physician's hands. I cannot feel too thankful for the benefit I have derived from your appliances and shall always bless the name of Dr. Cotter for his wonderful invention for curing disease without medicine.

Hoping thousands of others will be cured as I have been, I am, sir, Respectfully yours.

MISS MARY C. BURTON,
Alderson, Monroe Co., West Va.

CURED OF ASTHMA.

FEB. 4, 1884.

DR. D. J. COTTER, Dear Sir: I had suffered with Asthma for years in its worst form, and never found anything to help me until I put on your Garments, in February, 1883. since then my Asthma has disappeared, and I have not been troubled about breathing in the least.

Money could not buy the Garments I have if I could not get more.

I forward you this letter hoping it may be the means of inducing some poor sufferer to use your health-giving appliances, Yours very respectfully,

W. C. FARNHAM.

The Bad 'Squire.

The merry brown hares came leaping
Over the crest of the hill,
Where the clover and corn lay sleeping
Under the moonlight still;

Leaping late and early,
Till under their bite and their tread
The weeds and the wheat and the barley
Lay cankered and trampled and dead;

A poacher's widow sat sighing
On the side of the white-chalk bank,
Where under the gloomy fir-woods,
One spot in the bog throve rank.

She watched a long tuft of clover,
Where rabbit or hare never ran,
For its black sour haulm covered over
The blood of a murdered man.

She thought of the dark plantation,
And the hares and her husband's blood,
And the voice of her indignation
Rose up to the throne of good.

"I am long past wailing and whining,
I hav wept too much in my life;
I've had twenty years of pining.
As an English laborer's wife;

A laborer in Christian England,
Where they cant of a savior's name,
And yet waste men's lives like the vermin's,
For a few more brace of game.

There's blood on your foreign shrubs, 'squire,
There's blood on your pointer's feet;
There's blood on the game you sell, 'squire,
And there's blood on the game you eat.

You hav sold the laboring man, 'squire,
Body and soul to shame,
To pay for your seat in the house, 'squire,
And to pay for the feed of your game.

You made him a poacher, yourself, 'squire,
When you'd giv neither work nor meat,
And your barley-fed hares robbed the garden
At our starving children's feet,

When packed in one reeking chamber,
Man, maid, mother, and little ones lay,
While rain pattered in on the bride-bed,
And the walls let in the day.

When we lay in burning fever
On the mud of the cold-clay floor,
Till you parted us all for three months, 'squire,
At the dreary workhouse door.

We quarreled like brutes, and who wonders?
What self-respect could we keep?
Worse housed than your hacks and your pointers,
Worse fed than your hogs and your sheep.

Our daughters with base-born babies
Hav wandered away in their shame;
If your misses had slept, squire, where they did,
Your misses might do the same.

Can your lady patch hearts that are breaking,
With handfuls of coal and rice,
Or by dealing out flannel and sheeting
A little below cost price?

You may tire of the jail and the workhouse,
And take to allotments and schools,
But you've run up a debt that will never
Be paid us by penny-club rules.

In the season of shame and sadness,
In the dark and dreary day,
When scrofula, gout, and madness
Are eating your race away;

When to kennels and liveried valets
You hav cast your daughter's bread,
And worn out with liquor and harlots,
Your heir at your feet lies dead;

When your youngest, the meally-mouthed rector,
Lets your soul rot asleep to the grave,
Will you find in your god the protector
Of the freeman you fancied your slave?"

She looked at the tuft of clover,
And wept till her heart grew light,
And at last when her passion was over,
Went wandering into the night.

But the merry brown hares came leaping
Over the upland still,
Where the clover and corn lay sleeping
On the side of the white-chalk hill.

Leavenworth, Kan. H. H. HUTCHESON.

The Singer's Reward.

Oh, once there dwelt a singer in a valley far away,
Who in the fields with loving art awoke his lute and lay.

Now though his song, nor loud nor long, was strangely sweet to hear,
One day he said, while on his cheek there gleamed a silent tear:

"My note is low, my strain is weak, my singing all in vain;
The little guerdon I desire I cannot hope to gain.

I do not care for lofty fame, for wealth I do not long—
I only wish my fellow-men to love me for my song!"

The kindly zephyrs caught his lays and bore them far and wide,
"Such songs were never sung before!" the people rose and cried.

The great king even listened in his palace by the sea,
And said, "Some day we'll send for him, and honored he shall be."

Alas! no herald ever came, the ancient legend saith;
But when he put his lute away and laid him down in death,

The people made a great ado, and reared a column high,
In honor of the singer they had left in want to die.

A Reply to Mr. Bergh.*

To HENRY BERGH: Your strictures in the Herald of March 10th upon the meeting of the "Association for Ameliorating the Condition of Prisoners," held in Steinway Hall, are so inconsistent with that philanthropy you are supposed to possess for the street-vender's horse, that I think it deserving of a reply. You say the speakers were "eloquent on the wrongs of the poor criminals, and scarcely a word on the wrong of the poor public who are their victims." It is on wrongs we can be eloquent. Even Vanderbilt said, "The public be damned!" You "believe every subject has two sides to it," and volunteer to champion the public in a style that Guiteau might envy in his palmiest days. You claim that "every man and woman in this country can secure employment if they would." This statement is made in face of the fact that tens of thousands of men and women are seeking work and can not find it. Advertise for an employe, for any occupation you please, and the street is bombarded with applicants. And if you travel for work, you are pounced upon as a vagrant and sent to prison. You say, "The demand for laborers exceeds the supply, and the wages paid enormous, compared with those of Europe." We ask you to read the following extract from the Herald, which explains to you why criminals are so numerous:

"A party of thirty-six Italians will start tomorrow to return to their nativ land by way of Belgium as steerage passengers on the steamer Rhynland. They came to this country a few months ago, and were employed as laborers in building a railroad in Texas. They say they are completely disgusted with their experience in the 'land of the free,' and are firmly resolved never to try their fortunes here again. They complain bitterly of their treatment in the Lone Star state. They were obliged to work knee deep in water at times, whereby many of them hav contracted rheumatism. Having secured their pay on the recent expiration of their contract, their first move was to invest it in passage tickets for home."

The wages in Europe enable the laborer to liv and appear hearty and robust, as their appearance denotes on landing, while the work and wages of the laborer in this country do not allow the laborer to liv out half his days, and the half he does liv is a life of fear and suffering and poverty.

I call your attention to a second extract from the Herald:

"While the ferryboat Westfield was off Robbin's Reef lighthouse, last evening, on her six o'clock trip from this city, a carpenter named Heinrich Schaedler, of No. 130 Mulberry st., jumped overboard. The ferryboat was stopped and backed to where he was swimming. A line was thrown out, but Schaedler put his head under the water and tried to drown himself. A lifeboat was lowered, and the would-be suicide was taken from the water. He said his wife and children were without food, and as he had no work he wanted to die. He was taken to police headquarters at Stapleton.

"A Herald reporter called at No. 130 Mulberry street last night, and on the second floor found Schaedler's wife and three little children. The place bore every indication of the extreme poverty of the inmates, but was scrupulously clean. Mrs. Schaedler said that her husband had been out of work for two months, having injured one of his hands so that he could not do anything at his trade. He had, she said, become despondent, and after the death of one of their children recently began to act like one insane.

"There is but little doubt that the poor man was driven out of his mind by his inability to get bread for his wife and little ones."

I ask you how far these facts go toward bearing out your statement that "every man and woman in this country can secure employment for support."

Denham, in describing poverty, says:

"Such madness, as for fear of death to die,
Is to be poor for fear of poverty."

This language of Denham, strong as it is, simply expresses the truth, for thousands commit suicide annually from this very fear.

You say, "The multiplicity of criminals is the laxity of the laws." This completely stultifies the fable of the sun and the wind in their contest to compel the traveler to take off his coat. Like excites like; business begets business; and all experience proves that the more murderers you hang the more murders are committed. The more criminals you send to prison the more there are to be sent. You seem to be disgusted with politics, and think "the criminals elect the officials of government." In this we can almost agree with you, judging by our servants at Washington.

Your slur at foreigners is in bad taste for one whose "country has but a century's nationality," and owes its material prosperity to the labor of foreigners. If we mistake not, the largest contributor to the society for protecting dumb animals is a foreigner.

The rum monopoly you speak of as a monopoly, and so detrimental politically, could be best remedied by permitting free rum, the tendency of which would be to drive the business out of the hands of the "respectable." Could the East river flow with rum, we believe there would be no demand for rum; the coming generations would learn to shun it as the upas-tree. The glorious example you speak of in "sometimes arresting a respectable rum seller," reminds us of the society for the protection of dumb animals, who arrest the poor street vender, who is compelled to pay a license fee for the privilege of earning a living, while the rich owner of the Fourth avenue surface horse railroad, whose horses do not average the age of three years, after leaving their nativ plains, goes untouched, neither is he compelled to pay license to drive four in hand through the streets, for the fun of the thing. One word more in regard to what you term "foreigners." To whom does the North American continent owe its existence but to foreigners? They wrested the country from the nativs two hundred years ago. From England one hundred years later. And in the civil war against the Southern states, who stood at the front? Indeed, does any sane person believe the so-called Union would hav been sustained but for the imported substitute? You inquire, "Hav you ever thought of the possibility, nay, probability, of the dangerous classes utilizing their power for their exclusiv interest?" Well, this is cool. Whose interest should they use their power for but for themselvs? For whom does the capitalist utilize his power? Please tell us how long since water ceased to run down hill, or trees grow upward. We rejoice you are exercised in your mind upon this subject; and, in view of the fact, the poor, which we are told we must always hav with us, out-number the rich ten to one. It would seem natural for natural causes to take effect sometime. "You demand some power to prevent certain persons from taking their seat in Congress when elected." We thought you had that power, and used the power effectivly in case of Tilden versus Hayes.

And now you turn your thoughts to Utah, and say, "She should hav no representation in Congress." And pray, why not? She believes in revelation; driven by persecution to the wilderness which she has made to blossom like the rose, she has become numerous in spite of you. Pray tell us what you can do with the man when you could not crush the bantling. Again you turn your lamentations toward Long Island, whose people you term, "bullet-headed, bull-necked, low-browed wretches." In this choice malediction you include the masses generally.

Would it not be well to re-import the missionaries we hav sent to carry the "old version" to the heathen, and hav them take a twenty-cent copy of the new version to that lone isle? Mr. Heywood, of Princeton, Mass., and D. M. Bennett, of New York, were sent to prison for endeavoring to remedy the defects of the "bullet-headed, bull-necked, and low-browed." Did you lift your voice in their behalf? Again you are objecting to so many men and women sympathizing with those in prison. Will you tell us whom we shall sympathize with, unless it's the distressed? And shall we seek for the sheep out of the fold, or confine our attention to those who need no repentance? Please turn your eye to an old version of the New Testament, Matt. xii, 7; xxiii, 5, 24; xxv, 39, 40: Mark ii, 16, 17; Luke vi, 36, 37. Indeed, you might read this entire chapter with profit. Now will you please turn to John v, 15; viii, 3–11. Do not confine your theology to 1 Cor. x, 24. Will you read this extract from the Herald?

"A middle-aged man, clad simply in a tattered coat and a torn pair of pantaloons, stepped up to the sergeant's desk at the Oak street station last night, and, after asking for a night's shelter, reeled and fell to the floor dead. He was evidently an unfortunate tramp, who had not partaken of food for some days. His death is attributed to starvation and exposure."

You tell us too much clemency is shown to the criminal, which is in direct contradiction to the divine rule that "to err is human; to forgiv, divine," or the jurist law, that "ten guilty men better go free than one innocent one to suffer."

Again you say, "The criminals think no treatment too good for them." This is natural, and speaks well for their intelligence. There should be no abuse beyond confinement from society, who really make him what he is. Again you take issue with the superintendent of the Elmira Prison, for saying the striped garb of the prisoner tends to degrade him. Is this not true in all instances? Would you not feel your father was degraded if you saw him in the uniform of a footman? You speak of "maudlin sympathy" for our brother man—the prisoner. Please inform us what kind of sympathy you call that which sheds tears at the sight of a sea-turtle on his back in an express wagon, which he would be most of the time in his natural element. Again you say, "Human justice should be modeled on the divine." Presuming our early teachings to be correct on divine justice, you would make this earth a hot-bed. You "want more prayer." We don't see how you could hav more than in the case of Garfield, and less come out of it. We hav known rain come when prayed for, but that was when the wind was right. You claim the deity has the "sovereignty on earth." If so, it is not much to his credit in view of all the misery and suffering on earth. Yet we are not surprised, if he permitted his only son to be killed instead of the devil, who seemed to hav originated all the mischief. And now, Mr. Bergh, remember the same force of circumstances that gave you your position, gave the bullet-headed, bull-necked, low-browed their position.

New York. GEO. M. DAVENPORT.

*This reply to Mr. Bergh was refused by the Herald on account of "disrespect expressed toward the deity." The same reason was assigned by the editor of the Irish World, and, we believe, by John Swinton's Paper The daily Truth agreed to publish it, but after keeping the manuscript two weeks returned it to the writer. Mr. Davenport was obliged to fall back on THE TRUTH SEEKER, the only paper in New York not afraid of the deity or his antagonist, nor the men whom they divide between them. This will account for its late appearance.—ED. T. S.

RICHARD'S CROWN

HOW HE WON AND WORE IT.

This is a book of 300 pages, embodying the most graphic, vivid, and thrilling portrayal of Society Life as it now exists.

The third edition of this remarkable book has just been issued by its author, Mrs. Anna D. Weaver. It is a story of thrilling interest, thoroughly dramatic, pathetic, fascinating, forcible, and graphic. What "Uncle Tom's Cabin" was to the slavery question, "Richard's Crown" is to the cause agitating the masses of the people of to-day.

Printed in large, new type, on fine, heavy paper. Beautifully illustrated with eleven engravings, handsomely bound in cloth; title in gilt, embossed on the back and side of the book. Price, $1.50. For sale at this office.

Man—Whence and Whither?

By R. B. Westbrook, D.D., LL.B.,

Author of "The Bible.—Whence and What?"

About all that can be said for the existence of God and the future life of man, is here pungently presented, with an incidental discussion of many collateral questions, from a rationalistic standpoint.

D. M. BENNETT'S LAST WORK.

A TRUTH SEEKER

Around the World.

FOUR LARGE VOLUMES.

With a steel plate engraving of the author in Vol. I. and each volume illustrated with forty-seven cuts.

BY D. M. BENNETT,

Late editor of THE TRUTH SEEKER, author of "A Truth Seeker in Europe," "Gods and Religions of Ancient and Modern Times," "The World's Sages, Thinkers, and Reformers," "Champions of the Church," etc., etc.

Handsomely bound in red cloth, $6.50; in leather, red edges, $9.50; in morocco, gilt edges, $10.50.

Readers of THE TRUTH SEEKER know the circumstances under which this work was written. The last words penned by the great author were for the fourth Volume which was nearly completed at his death, and which will now contain an account of his world-lamented death and burial. MR. Bennett was a very patient and faithful chronicler of the habits and customs of the different peoples of the many places he visited. The every-day life of all nations is laid before the reader by one who has visited them and beheld them with his own eyes. Particular attention is paid to the progress of Freethought in the various countries he visited, and the morality of so-called pagan nations is contrasted with the morality of Christian countries, much to the detriment of the latter The work is a

Freethinker's History of the World.

This work and "A TRUTH SEEKER IN EUROPE" should be in every Liberal's library Besides its intrinsic worth it is a memento of one of the greatest Freethinkers he world has known—of one who ranks with Voltaire and Paine in the force and clearness of his writings.

TESTIMONIALS:

Read the following testimonials, and be convinced our claims are correct in every particular and that your ailments can be eradicated without the aid of MEDICIN. THESE APPLIANCES ARE THE ACME OF PERFECTION:

Remarkable Cure of Paralysis in One Week.

CINCINNATI, Dec. 19, 1882.

DR. L. TENNEY—Dear Sir: As I feel greatly indebted to you for the benefit I hav received from your treatment, and the use of your Magnetic appliances, I can say without hesitation to those afflicted as I hav been that the effect was simply marvelous. Two weeks ago I was stricken with paralysis in my right arm and could not use it at all, but after wearing a suit of your MAGNETIC CLOTHING for one week, can use it quite as well as ever. I hav also been troubled with Dyspepsia and Kidney Complaint for a number of years, from which I hav suffered intensely, and, although doctoring all the time, never found but temporary relief. Since putting on your appliances I hav experienced great benefit, and if I improve as rapidly as I hav in the past two weeks, will soon be well. I would, therefore, recommend to those suffering as I hav your Magnetic appliances as the only means of effecting a sure cure. Yours respectfully,
WM. H. CLEMMER,
No. 80 Eastern avenue.

Remember that the same appliances which will effect a cure in a case of Paralysis will at the same time eradicate CATARRH or DYSPEPSIA in the same patient. We do not, like the Old School Physician, change medicins every day until, after dosing the patient almost to death, he may possibly strike something (if he is very skilful) that brings relief for the time being.

Neuralgia of the Heart of Six Years Standing Cured in Three Weeks.

SHULLSBURG, WIS., Dec. 11, 1882.

DR. L. TENNEY—Dear Sir: After wearing one of your MAGNETIC VESTS for about three weeks, I was entirely cured of Neuralgia of the Heart and Side, which had been a source of misery to me for the last six years. I had tried numerous remedies before without benefit, but as soon as I put on the MAGNETIC VEST I got relief instantly. With unbounded gratitude, I remain
Yours respectfully,
H. A. BROWN.

Ladies, read the following testimony from a lady who had been under drug treatment for eight years with nervous prostration and female weakness:

OSBORN, O., Dec. 15, 1882.

DR. L. TENNEY: Your letter just received; also the Clothing on Tuesday last. Fitted perfectly. FELT BETTER FROM THE FIRST HOUR I HAD THEM ON. Am not joking, and if I improve as rapidly as I hav since Tuesday, will soon be well. Will report again soon. Respectfully yours, E. J. K.

This lady reports herself entirely cured in less than six weeks after putting on the garments, and, although in bed, unable to get out, when applied, she nevertheless was able to ride twenty miles in two days after the application. The lady's name can be had upon application at this office, by anyone desiring to communicate with her.

Ladies, read the following testimony from a lady who had been suffering for two years with an Ovarian Tumor, and who had been told that nothing but the knife would save her life, and the chances were as 9 to 1 against recovery. In four months' time she is perfectly well, and has not taken a dose of medicin since putting on the appliances. Consult us when your physician tells you he can do nothinog for you; it will pay you.

SHULLSBURG, WIS., November 19, 1882.

DR. L. TENNEY, Dear Sir: About two years ago my health began to fail me; I became nervous, lost all desire for food, and, in fact, began to fail rapidly, so that I became alarmed and consulted several physicians of St. Louis, at which place I was then stopping, all of whom declared that I had an Ovarian Tumor, and that the only thing that would save my life would be the knife. About six months ago I grew rapidly worse, and had about made up my mind to take the only course that seemed left to me, and submit to an operation, when my attention was called to the Eureka Magnetic Appliances. As a drowning man will catch at a straw, so did I catch at this faint hope of a cure. Four months ago I purchased a suit of your appliances. From the very first I felt invigorated, the tumor, which had extended entirely across my abdomen, began to decrease, my pains became less from day to day, until now I am as well as I ever was in my life. Since putting on the appliances I hav not taken a single dose of medicin. My bowels, which before were constipated, are now regular. I would therefore cheerfully recommend them to anyone suffering as I hav, believing that they will do all and more than you claim for them. I remain,
Gratefully yours, MRS. MARY J. STEWART.

Remember that these appliances are not worn next the skin, but over the under-garment, and, unlike all other appliances in the market, they impart no shocks and leaves no sores.

Any of the above garments sent to any address upon receipt of price, and we will return the money if they are not as represented in every respect. If you are uncertain as to what would best suit your case send us word stating symptoms, and we will advise you what would be best suited to treat you. While our appliances are offered at less than one-third of what others are selling worthless appliances for, yet we will guarantee that the magnetic quality is a hundred fold superior to any other appliance ever offered the public, and will outlast the garments themselves. Every magnet is put through a particular process, and hav raised five times their own weight six months after being magnetized, while not a single appliance in the market will attract the smallest particle of iron, the majority of such worthless appliances having so-called magnets made of material no better than hoop-iron, and not capable of retaining magnetism for a moment. All of our garments are made from the very best material for the purpose, and will outlast any and all other garments now before the public. Every magnet is arranged in the garments upon scientific principles, and not haphazard as in all the others. We offer you therefore

The Only Scientific Magnetic Appliance Ever Constructed.

And challenge comparison with any of the so-called magnetic garments now offered under that head. At the same time the application of labor-saving machinery in our manufacture enables us to offer them about

ONE-THIRD THE PRICE HERETOFORE CHARGED,

Gems of Thought.

LET justice and right be the standard by which you govern your actions, and never forget that the grandest thing a man can perform is to do what is right under all circumstances. The greatest virtue which men and women can attain to is to do their full duty to their fellow-beings, and to do naught that will cause pain or sorrow to visit a fellow-mortal. That is the highest duty we are called to fulfil. —D. M. Bennett.

MEN must liv together and work for common objects, even in priest-ridden countries; and those conditions which, in the course of ages, hav been able to create the moral sense, cannot fail, in some degree, to recall it to men's minds and gradually to reinforce it. Thus it comes about that a great and increasing portion of life breaks free from priestly influences and is governed upon right and rational grounds. The goodness of men shows itself in time more powerful than the wickedness of some of their religions.—Clifford's Ethics of Religion.

IT is a good thing for a nation to hav rich mountains—mountains in which mineral treasures abound; to hav broad plains, on which the golden crops of grain ripen, and rivers on which proud navies go forth to the ocean; it is a good thing to hav all these things which add to a nation's material wealth; and it is a good thing also to hav halls of learning and galleries of art, for by these the mind is strengthened and refined. But it is a better thing than all this for a nation to hav virtue, and men who protect its virtue, for without that all these other things are but corroding substances that bring on more speedily and surely the progress of natural decay.—Felix Adler in Radical Pulpit.

THE great end of life is not to earn food and clothing, though this is to most one of its first and most pressing necessities. If this were all of life it would not be worth living. And so the true end of education is not simply to enable the man or the woman to earn food and clothing. It is to develop the thinking faculties, and so to raise the individual to higher possibilities of enjoyment and of influence. These possibilities are quite independent of the daily employment. The man or the woman who has learned to think, who has acquired the capacity to enjoy a good book, to pursue a useful investigation, to hold intercourse with people of intelligence and thoughtfulnsss, to reason soundly and clearly on solid, moral, and religious problems, which are constantly presenting themselvs for solution, has reached a higher and happier level of humanity than the less fortunate neighbor. And there is no necessity for such to change their spheres of life. With the advantages of modern labor-saving appliances and the exemption they bring from the necessity for exhausting, unceasing toil, there is no reason why the farmer and the mechanic should not be the peers in general intelligence of the lawyer, the doctor, or the minister. Such an ambition is worthy of being cherished by every youth in this land of schools.—Toronto Globe.

HOW we drift like white sail across the wide ocean, now bright on the wave, now darkling in the trough of the sea. But from what port did we sail? Who knows? Or to what port are we bound? Who knows? I at least will shun the weakness of philosophizing beyond my depth. What is the use of pretending to powers we hav not? What is the use of pretending to assurances we hav not respecting the other life? If there is a wish for immortality and no evidence, why not say just that? If there are conflicting evidences, why not state them? If there is not ground for a candid thinker to make up his mind, yea or nay, why not suspend our judgment? I weary of these dogmatizers. I neither affirm nor deny. I stand here to try the case.—Emerson.

THE only one of the New Testament writings which contains a clear affirmation of its own inspiration is the one which, in all ages, has been regarded as of the most doubtful authenticity, viz., the Apocalypse. It was rejected by many of the earliest Christian authorities. It is rejected by many of the ablest critics of to-day. Luther, in the preface to his translation, inserted a protest against the inspiration of the Apocalypse, which protest he solemnly charged everyone to prefix who chose to publish his translation. In this protest one of his chief grounds for the rejection is the suspicious fact that this writer alone blazons forth his own inspiration.— Greg's Creed of Christendom.

WE do not believe that we are totally depraved, we do not believe the human race is lost, we do not believe in sin, we do not count ourselvs to be "miserable sinners." We believe in the power of thought, in reason, in conscience, in the strength of our heart to subdue the world. We believe that man is his own providence, his own deliverer, his own regenerator. We do not look for a supernatural redemption. To us the story of the birth of Christ is legendary, it is a myth. . . . To us the Christian mythology is like any other, rich and beautiful, it may be, but mythology still, created by imagination; a fantasy, not believed to be in the domain of history.—Frothingham's New Song of Christmas.

ALWAYS suspect a man who affects great softness of manner, an unaffected evenness of temper, and an enunciation studied, slow, and deliberate. These things are unnatural, and bespeak a degree of mental discipln into which he that has no purposes of craft or design to answer cannot submit to drill himself. The most successful knaves are usually of this description, as smooth as razors dipped in oil, and as sharp. They affect the innocence of the dove which they hav not, in order to hide the cunning of the serpent, which they hav.—Colton's Lacon.

THINK not so much of what thou hast not as of what thou hast; but of the things which thou hast select the best, and then reflect how eagerly they would hav been sought if thou hadst them not. At the same time, however, take care that thou dost not, through being so pleased with them, accustom thyself to overvalue them, so as to be disturbed if ever thou shouldst not hav them.—Antoninus.

Please cut this petition out, attach it to a blank sheet of paper, sign your name and address to it, get all your friends and neighbors to do the same, and then send it to this office.

A PETITION FOR STATE SECULARIZATION.

To the Honorable Senators and Members of the House of Representatives of the United States Congress:

A republican form of government being based on liberty, equality, and fraternity, as both means and end, involves the separation of Church and State, whose union is the worst form of class-legislation and the most infallible sign of arbitrary power. A house divided against itself cannot stand. The institutions of this Commonwealth should be made homogeneous throughout. Impartial protection of all citizens in their equal rights and liberties, by encouraging the free movement of mind, promotes the establishment of truth in whatever direction. Any infringement by government of this absolute equality of its citizens is the parent of manifold evil, a national crime committed against that natural "justice" which, as the Constitution declares, this government was founded to "establish."

And yet, though the first amendment to the Constitution of the United States says, "Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion or prohibiting the free exercise thereof," there does exist a union of Church and State, which gives to Christianity moral and material aid, and so proscribes other religions and forms of belief and unbelief, while taxing these also for the support of that special religion.

The ways in which this old alliance between Church and State still survives among us are:

1. Recognition of God and Christianity in State Constitutions.
2. Exemption of Church property from taxation.
3. Appropriations of public money for sectarian purposes.
4. Religious exercises, as the reading of the Bible, etc., in the public schools.
5. Laws enforcing the observance of the Sabbath on the authority of the Bible.
6. Religious test-oaths in courts of justice and on instalment into office.
7. Chaplaincies in the Legislature, the Army, and the Navy.
8. Fast and Thanksgiving Proclamations, which contain theological ideas that may or may not be acceptable to the citizen.

The necessity for this separation of Church and State is more apparent now than ever before, because of the still greater diversity of religious beliefs, the many forms of dissent from the religion which receives State patronage, and the growing signs of sectarian strife and ambition in the arena of politics. And emphasis needs to be given to the fact that the union of Church and State is a great hindrance to the employment of right methods in dealing with many questions of reform now demanding attention. And most essential is it at all times, and especially in the present, in order to secure for the law its due respect and observance, that the people's representatives should exhibit the strictest fidelity to their trusts by following the law in its letter and spirit.

Your petitioners, therefore, pray that immediate action be taken by the law-making power to bring into harmony the theory and practice of our government in making the following principle a part of the fundamental law of the land by amendment to the United States Constitution:

The total separation of Church and State, by prohibiting Congress or any State, County, Municipality, or Township from enacting any law that favors religion in any of the eight ways specified, or in any other way, or prohibits the free exercise thereof.

Odds and Ends.

"I WANT a Chaucer," said a customer to a clerk in a bookstore, looking over the list of English poets. "Fine cut or plug?" inquired the young man, putting his hand in his pocket.

BEECHER says that the angels hold their noses when they look down on a Wall-street man. A Wall-street man was never known to steal noses. They ought to hang on to their pocketbooks.

JUDGE: "Your client had better make a compromise. Ask her what she will take." Counsel: "My good woman, his honor asks what you will take." Old woman: "Thanks to his honor, I'll just take a glass of warm ale."

"WHAT is more awful to contemplate," said the lecturer, glaring about him, "than the relentless power of the maelstrom?" And a hen-pecked looking man in the rear of the building softly replied: "The femalestrom."

A CONNECTICUT paper raises the following difficult question: "In waltzing with a young lady not over seventeen years, pretty, and one of the never-get-dizzy sort, does the young man go around the lady, or does the lady go around the young man?"

"MOTHER, what was that you was sayin' about the children of Adam sufferin' for somebody's sins, last night?" "What I meant to say was that because of the sin of Adam, the father of mankind, in eating the forbidden fruit, his children all are punished." "Well, then, accordin' to that, if my pap does something wrong I ought to be licked for it, eh?" "That'll do sir. Now hurry out after the coal."

A YOUNG man who believes in self-improvement, having recently married, suggested to his wife that they should argue some question frankly and fully every morning, in order to learn more of each other. The first question happened to be, "Whether a woman could be expected to get along without a hat," and he took the affirmativ, and when he was last seen he had climbed up into the hay-loft and was pulling the ladder after him.

TWO guests were seated at a table in a hotel when a dog came up to them in a friendly manner, and sat down by the side of one of them. This led the other to ask, "Is that your poodle?" "No," was reply, "he belongs to the landlord, and a mighty cunning dog he is, too. Between us, he is a good deal smarter than his master." "Yes," returned the first speaker, "there are such animals, I know. In fact, I once owned such a dog myself."

THE SONG OF THE TENANT.

With fingers weary and worn,
With knee-caps tender and red,
A tenant strove in his old store clothes
To hit the tack on the head.
Rat—tat—tat—
Till his head went round in a hum,
And then, with a growl, he sat him flat,
Lamenting a mangled thumb.

LAST Sunday one of the pastors of the little village of Pownal was walking to church, when he saw a man with his coat off, digging in his garden. The good man beheld with grief and astonishment, and, coming up to the fence, began to recite in a solemn voice: "Remember the Sabbath day to keep it holy. Six days thou shalt labor and do all thy work—" "See here," said the man in the garden, looking up, "be you talkin' to me." "Yes, my poor man, I am." "Wal, you needn't worry about me, then. I ain't agoin' to do any work; I'm only diggin' worms to go a-fishin' with."

THE performance of the locomotiv whistle, we are told, says the Rehoboth Herald, has been systematized on a Western railroad. Seven whistles are to indicate "down brakes;" thirty-two whistles, "up-brakes;" forty whistles and two snorts a "back-up." The instructions add: "In case of doubt, whistle like the d—l;" at street crossings, "whistle considerably." Again, "Always whistle before dinner. Require the firemen to keep the whistle valve open during dinner. After dinner whistle and squirt water, then back up. Then go ahead with a whistle, a squirt, and a ring."

MORE heavy poker playing in late years has gone on in Chamberlain's old club house than in any other building in Washington city. Fortunes were made and lost there. The place is now owned by the Young Men's Christian Association. Soon after the change was made a well-known sporting man dropped in one evening, a trifle mellow by some brandy a friend had given him to sample. The new occupants were holding a praise meeting, and a dozen of them were singing the old refrain:

"There is always room for more,
Come in! come in!"

He thought he appreciated the situation, and blandly replied: "No, gentlemen; play out the deal. I'll come in on the next hand."

THE MISGUIDED YOUTH.

A cowboy dropped into church,
Intent on goodness purely;
He went away up to the front,
And took a seat demurely.

He felt a little out of place,
But thought he ought to try it,
And, watching what the others did,
Maintained a perfect quiet.

He didn't make a single break,
Nor show the least deflection,
Until a little deacon came
To take the church collection.

The plate came to the cowboy first,
Of course with nothing on it.
He looked up at the deacon, then
Down on the plate a minute.

He couldn't tell the game at all,
And didn't dare to doubt it.
The more he tried to find it out,
The less he knew about.

At last he spoke right out in church:
"Now look 'e here, old Banty!
Don't try to bluff—I'll take the chips;
Jist sing out what's the ante."

THE TRUTH SEEKER

A JOURNAL OF FREETHOUGHT AND REFORM.

Entered at the Post-Office at New York, N. Y., as Second-class Matter.

Vol. 11. No. 23. | PUBLISHED WEEKLY. | New York, Saturday, June 7, 1884. | 33 CLINTON PLACE. | $3.00 per year.

Notes and Clippings.

MR. BRADLAUGH thinks that England's course in the East must involve the annexation of Egypt. This he deplores.

THE Slavery Abolition Society has petitioned the minister of the colonies to stop the flogging of negroes in Cuba. The minister has promised a stricter execution of the law.

THE recent report of the National Board of Fire Underwriters shows that no fewer than 2,872 hotels in the United States hav been destroyed by fire during the past eight years, an average of 359 yearly.

THE Sunday Gazetteer says: "Brother Cox is going to organize another church in Denison. He says our city has a Democratic Methodist church, a Republican Methodist church, and he insists upon having a Greenback Methodist church. His party wants all the religious advantages."

A TREATY was signed on the 14th ult., by the United States and the Prince of Narez of the Siamese Embassy, for the regulation of liquor traffic in Siam when conducted by American citizens; and it is now announced that this treaty was the main purpose of the Prince's mission to this country.

SPEAKING of Sir William Thompson's announcement of a belief in a "possible magnetic sense," the Alienist and Neurologist thinks that we might as well be logical and liberal, and add to the present senses the touch sense, the self sense, the power sense, the logical sense, and the physic, muscular, and electro-magnetic senses. To divide and subdivide is believed to be a growing habit with medical writers.

ON Sunday, May 11th, remarks the National Reformer, the feelings of the average pious Scotchman and women must hav been sorely tried by the opening at the Corn Exchange, Galashiels, of the first exhibition of pictures ever attempted in Scotland on a Sunday. The collection belongs to a London art dealer. During the four hours the exhibition was open it was visited by upwards of three thousand persons.

A MEMBER of Professor Adler's Society writes to a Boston journal: "The tenement house reform movement has by far exceeded our expectations. A Tenement House Building Association has been formed, with an almost unlimited capital, some of the wealthiest gentlemen in New York being at the head of the company. The association is not connected with our society, but still is an outcome of Professor Adler's lectures on this subject."

AN old woman named Gordon in the north of Scotland was listening to the account given in scripture of Solomon's glory, which was read to her by a little female grandchild. When the little girl came to tell of the thousand camels which formed part of the Jewish sovereign's live stock, "What," cried the old woman, "a thousand Campbell's, say ye? The Campbells are an auld clan, sure eneuch, but look an' ye dinna see the Gordons, too."

PARSON NEWMAN, Grant's peripatetic consular theologian, said to a small audience in the Jane street Methodist church recently that "Universal suffrage may prove universal ruin. A restricted suffrage may be essential to the perpetuity of this republic. The coming of the stranger has been the downfall of many republics. Foreigners should be in this country twenty-one years before they should be allowed to vote. The typical American should govern America." Newman is a typical Christian, believing in liberty for himself but not for others.

THE Catholic Union attempts to make a "point" against Col. Ingersoll by saying: "Forepaugh's clown had scarcely gone when another buffoon—the notorious Ingersoll—came the way with his little side show. Each charged fifty cents a head for the performance." In New York it costs ten cents to get into a Catholic church building on Sunday. That is also the price of admission charged by the museums on the Bowery. It is true that many of the dime museums are humbugs, but so are the Catholic churches and the Catholic religion. This doesn't place the churches and the monkey shows in the same category throughout, but the Catholic Union likes that sort of comparison, and it is a poor rule that won't work both ways.

KATE FIELD is very angry at Felt, a Mormon elder. He once told her, in Boston, that no Mormon practiced polygamy without the consent of the first wife, that women did not object to polygamy, and that polygamous families were filled with the spirit of peace. She finds, on visiting Salt Lake City, that his matrimonial career is not proof of happiness incidental to celestial marriage. She delares that when he said that women never complained of polygamy and lived harmoniously in it, he quite forgot his mother's experience, that of his father's plural wives, and lost sight of his own second wife's broken spirit.

Truth was not quite right in its story about Bismarck complaining of being checked for whistling on the Sabbath in Scotland. What he said was: "The English and American mode of Sunday observance is a terrible form of tyranny. The first time I set foot on English soil was at Hull, and I began whistling in the streets, when an English fellow-traveler said, 'Oh, pray don't.' 'Why,' said I, 'is it prohibited?' 'No,' was the reply, 'it's not against the law, but don't you know it's the Sabbath?' I was so angry that I left the town at once and took the next steamer for Edinburgh." Here the chancellor seems to hav whistled along Princes street with impunity.

THE Roman Catholic bishop of Atlanta, Ga., recently addressed a large assembly of Sunday-school children, and wound up by asking in a very paternal and condescending way: "And now, is there a-a-n-y little boy or a-a-a-ny little girl who would like to ask me a question?" After a pause he repeated the question: "Is there a-a-n-y little boy or a-a-n-y little girl who would like to ask me a question?" A little shrill voice called out: "Please sir, why did the angels walk up and down Jacob's ladder when they had wings?" "Oh, ah, yes—I see," said the bishop; "and now, is there a-a-n-y little boy or a-a-n-y little girl who would like to answer little Mary's question?"

THE pope's recent encyclical against secret societies givs special interest to some piquant revelations made not long since with regard to the organization of the Italian Freemasons. They hav, it appears, three centers—Naples, Rome, and Turin. The Roman Grand Orient, though it affects to speak with authority on behalf of Italian Masonry, is far less important than the Turin section. Both, however, are more "advanced" than the Neapolitan Masons, by whom, about a year ago, they were solemnly excommunicated. The number of Masons in Italy is small, and tends to grow smaller. But, as in France, Spain and Germany, among them are many prominent politicians hostil to Catholicism. The Turinese Masons are trying hard to oust the Romans from the position they hold in the confraternity.

THE bark Athena was bound from Liverpool to Quebec with a crew of twenty, all told, in charge of Captain Lorenzen. On the 29th of April, the bark went ashore near Wolfe Island, one of the Magdalen group, in a dense fog. The captain at once said the Athena would soon be no more, and immediately engaged in prayer, inviting all on board to join. The second mate, Hans C. Engoe, endeavored to persuade the captain and crew to exert themselvs for their own safety. They paid no heed but continued praying and singing, and no attempt was made to lower the boats. Engoe returned on deck just as the bark broke in two. A heavy sea broke over him, and he thought himself a doomed man. In some unaccountable manner he found himself upon a plank, and on this he drifted ashore, benumbed by cold, and more dead than alive. He found himself a short distance from a lighthouse, which he reached next morning after enduring fearful privations. The total loss of life was nineteen, all the praying men being drowned, while the one who refused to pray was the only one saved.

"ARE you not afraid of snakes?" a reporter asked Nala Damajante, the Hindoo snake-charmer with Forepaugh's circus. "Are you not afraid the great anacondas may some time crush you in their powerful folds?" And the tender-hearted reporter shuddered as he thought of the pictures in the school geography of a snake eleven feet long crushing a full grown elephant into a pulpy mass of bonedust and mince meat, preparatory to ringing up the dinner act in the prodigal son drama. "Afraid of being squeezed to death?" said Nala Damajante scornfully, "la, no! I lived in Connecticut all my life, and our pastor—his wife wasn't congenial, you know, and he was one of these old bald-headed boys who are always yearning for an affinity and all that sort of thing—oh, my, he could just giv a python points on squeezing."

REFERRING to the dynamite scares the San Francisco Argonaut remarks: "Whether the church of Rome could, if it desired, and whether it desires to if it could, arrest this mode of warfare, we do not know. The institution is a very powerful one. It is very secret. Its Jesuits make splendid detectivs; its confessional is well calculated to find out secret criminal conspiracies, and we are inclined to the opinion that most of the dynamite criminals kneel before its altars. Nearly all who hav so far gone to the gallows hav been Romanists, and hav received from the Roman priests a remission of their sins, and hav been ticketed with a through pardon to Abraham's bosom, and guaranteed an eternity of bliss. Most of those persons now awaiting trial hav the daily consolation of religion administered by priests of Rome. Whether the church, in order to save its own property, would contribute to the protection of property it did not own, we do not know. We are inclined to think it would."

SINCE the death and incineration of Dr. Gross one of the chief social topics in Philadelphia has been the cremation of the dead. A correspondent of a daily paper reports that a movement is now fairly on foot to organize a stock company which will build the largest and most elaborate crematory in the United States. The capital will probably be fixed at $100,000, and the stock will be placed among the wealthy members of the community. Dr. Leidy, Dr. Samuel Gross, and many other distinguished physicians of the city are warm in their advocacy of the advantages of incineration over burial in the ground. Dr. Leidy speaks with much energy on the subject. "If any city in the world ought to burn its dead, that city is Philadelphia," said he. "Several of its largest cemeteries are located on the banks and above the level of the Schuylkill, the stream from which we draw our water supply. It does not require a scientific mind to realize the terrible effect on the health of our people. Much of the poisonous matter from the thousands of graves at Laurel Hill, for instance, finds its way into the water and is taken into the systems of the living. Isn't that an argument in itself sufficient to enforce the the burning of the dead?" This argument comes with double force at a time when Philadelphia is spending half a million of money to excavate for and lay a sewer pipe from Manayunk to a point below Fairmount dam, in the hope of carrying off the coloring matter and acids that are poured into the Wissahickon and Schuylkill from the paper, woolen, and carpet mills of that activ manufacturing suburb. It is charged by sanitarians, and not denied, that all the rags and bandages from the hospitals and dispensaries of this great city are sold to the paper-makers, and that the water and acids in which they are cleansed prior to conversion into pulp are alowed to flow into the streams about this city. It is certainly not a pleasant subject to talk upon or to write about, but its gravity renders the theme of too much importance to be ignored. So much has cremation grown in general favor that the crematory at Washington, Pa., has been obliged to refuse to receive bodies for incineration from beyond the borders of the county.

News of the Week.

MADAM COLOMBIER'S "Sarah Barnum" has got its author into jail for three months.

FIVE of the six murderers hanged on a recent Friday in this country declared that rum had led them into crime.

THE cold weather last week was accompanied by frosts, which did great damage to crops in the Hudson River valley and in New England.

ROWELL, the pedestrian, has returned to England. His wife, who is a mere girl, remains in this country to complete her education at school.

A CLOUDBURST on Frenchman Creek, near the Nebraska and Colorado line, last week, swept away and drowned eleven cowboys who were in camp there.

COL. NELLIS BORDEN and Capt. Linebeck, two respected citizens of North Carolina, quarreled about a mine in Mitchell county. Linebeck shot Borden and killed him.

TWENTY persons ascended in a captiv balloon at Lille, France, last Sunday. The basket broke and the occupants fell to the ground, killing three outright and seriously injuring the remainder.

AN encyclical letter from the pope was read in the Catholic churches throughout England last Sunday, warning people against joining the Freemasons or other secret societies under pain of excommunication.

MR. KINNEY, who kept a boarding-house at Spokane Falls, Mon., has recently sold out the business for $1,200. His wife was included in the sale. She had been unfaithful to him, and he sold her, along with the furniture and house, to the man who had caused the trouble.

IT has been announced that the dangerous anarchist, Schwartz, has left New York for Austria, bearing with him a quantity of dynamite. The people of Vienna are very much alarmed and the newspapers demand that the manufacture of dynamite be made a government monopoly.

NEW YORK'S free baths opened on June 1st. The city furnishes nine of these useful institutions for the use of its poorer citizens who would perhaps otherwise scarcely ever get a bath. The baths are open sixteen hours per day—four days in the week for males and three for females.

JOHN C. ENO, defaulting president of the Second National Bank of New York, was captured last Sunday in Canada. He had but $1,000 with him when arrested. "Father" Ducey, a Catholic priest who accompanied Eno in his flight, is not to be found. It is thought probable that Ducey has the stolen thousands taken from the bank.

DECORATION DAY was observed in New York in the usual manner, with parades, processions, speeches, games, races, and so forth. The Hon. Benjamin F. Butler was in town, and, as usual, received the lion's share of applause as he passed through the streets. President Arthur and Gen. Grant might command the respect of the populace, but it was left to Mr. Butler to arouse their enthusiasm.

PARSON NEWMAN'S church givs its pastor a vacation from June 15th to October 5th. Newman gets $10,000 per year salary, and some of the congregation wish to dismiss him in order to avoid paying the $3,500 which he will earn while vacating. The congregation is described by one of the deacons as poor, the church likely to be sold under foreclosure of mortgage, and the organ in a fair way to be ruined by a leaky roof.

AN explosion of dynamite occurred outside of the detectiv office, London, on the evening of May 30th. A corner of the building was blown off to a hight of thirty feet. No lives were destroyed, but thirteen people in the vicinity were injured by flying bricks and glass. The perpetrators of the outrage are unknown. O'Donovan Rossa, the Irish-American advocate of assassination, applauds the work, and says he expects more of it.

A Freethought Romance.

Waifs and Wanderings.

BY SAMUEL P. PUTNAM.

CHAPTER XXXII.—(CONTINUED.)

There was silence in the room as these words, freighted with the intensity of an absolutely truthful soul, were poured forth. Only once in a while does the world witness such splendid reality. Almost all are a bit afraid of genuine truth—of the naked fact of things. Royal is that soul that dares to face it all; to deal with no makeshifts; to accept no golden coloring of fancy, but to front nature with the unflinching gaze. Out of the tragedy of her life Amy had reached this glorious hight, or, we might say, this lofty deep, whereby the very essence of things was revealed to her unconquerable mind.

"I am sorry for this," said the judge. "I cannot argue, but this confession precludes your testimony."

"Do you not believe that I desire to tell the truth, and nothing but the truth?"

"Indeed I do. I would not doubt your word, but the law forbids. If you could only somehow say that you believe in God, there would be no question of the admission of your testimony."

"If I lie, or can lie, then I am to be believed; but if I stand by the truth, then I am to be disbelieved?"

"Not exactly that," said the judge. "You will admit the imperfection of language. Can you not make the word God cover something of your belief?"

"Not without a wrong to my conscience."

"I hope that is not so," said Harry to Amy. "You see the extreme difficulty of the case. I cannot think you and I differ essentially in our belief, yet I can say I believe in God. Could you not do the same in a vague way, sufficient at least to open the gates of justice, that you may testify for what is most precious to you and others?"

"What is a truthful expression for your thought, Harry, is not a truthful expression for mine. Our thoughts may be the same, but they come forth in different garb, and conscience must clothe the thought as well as make the thought. I cannot use your language. It would be a lie to my soul."

"I will not insist. The very curse of my life is that I hav not been as absolutely truthful as you are now. Oh! this paltering with words and thoughts. It is slow murder. It rots and it buries."

Nothing could he said. The conflict was inevitable.

The judge was deeply troubled. Evidently his heart was with Amy, but it was utterly impossible for him to go against the plain wording of the law. He was willing to use subterfuge and circumvent the law in behalf of justice; but he was not willing to actually destroy the law, for in some shape or other the law was to him the supreme thing. He might even accept contradictory interpretations of the law for the sake of what seemed to him right, but the law itself must evermore be sacred.

The issue was direct. Amy did not believe in God, whether definable or undefinable, and the law said distinctly that, in order to give her testimony, she must believe in some kind of a God, definable or undefinable.

"I am sorry," said the judge, "that testimony so important, so absolutely necessary to the discovery of the truth, must be excluded."

Bolton and Sandy chuckled audibly. Legally they had won the day. Their evidence was uncontradicted, and according to that the judge must decide. Such is human justice when made dependent on a written law, which is like binding the ocean to an iceberg. No one set of circumstances is like another set, and therefore each must discover its own law. To govern by precedent simply is to govern by barbarism.

"In a question like this," said the judge, "I must decide according to the sworn evidence. I cannot go beyond that, whatever might be the dictates of my heart. We must aim for general justice, and not for particular justice. We cannot satisfy the claims of all. There must be some wrong in order that the universal welfare may be maintained. There must be forms of laws to be obeyed in all circumstances. Unless these are inviolable there is no certain standard. In this case we must take the established rule, though it seems to work harshly. The evidence is almost altogether in favor of the marriage claimed, and I must declare that the ceremony was performed as sworn to—that Amy is the wife of Sandy, and the girl Bessie is his daughter."

"Impossible!" cried Amy; "how can there be such injustice?" and mother and daughter were clasped in each other's arms.

"Four years fighting for liberty, and the prison walls yet!" cried Cupples. "I thought that when I saw the flag floating so gaily we should always be happy, and now my little Bessie is a slave again."

Sandy would have fared badly but the police officers protected him. He didn't like the looks of Cupples a bit. There was a small volcano in him, evidently.

Bolton, elder, was jubilant, and gave Sandy a most congratulatory grasp of the hand. His Harry was now free to some more worthy match—that is, to a fortune as well as a wife.

"Is there no remedy for this? Is this the law?" cried Harry.

"I could not decide otherwise," said the judge. "I would if I could."

Without doubt the judge declared his honest feeling. To obey was martyrdom—but it was duty.

"I swear," said Jones, "I can't understand this. It's plain as day the woman never was married, and yet she is married. The law says so, and the law—well, what the law is no fellow can find out."

"Law and theology," said Dr. Dobson, "are twin brothers. They both burn us at the stake. Perhaps medicine is the same thing. There is a damnable wrong in it all somewhere, but I can't just exactly tell where. I sometimes think that right and wrong are twin brothers too, and forever and forever hav to go together; and at times they do look so very much alike! I would pray for an infallible pope, but the more we have of 'em the worse off we are."

"I submit to your honor," said Sandy, "that this woman is my legal wife. Should she not follow me and live with me."

"So says the law, but I cannot compel, and if she does not choose to go that is the end of it."

"But this child—is she not mine?"

"She is, and must go with you. There is no help for that."

"Must I go with him?" cried Bessie. "He is not my father. I hate him."

"You must go with him. The law compels. Legally he is your master."

"Must I leave my mother, Cupples, all?"

"You must do as he says. Until you are of age he has sole authority. The law says he is your father. As such, he must command."

"O mother!"

"O my sweet Bessie!" cried Amy. "There must be some escape, though it is now dark as midnight. Let me put this on your neck, dear one. I have worn it ever since I can remember. It is a charm, they say. I give it with all my love and all my hope. Keep it, and be patient. We can conquer, we can conquer!"

She kissed her daughter, she embraced her, amid flashing tears. The sweet lips touched with luminous grief. The mother flung from off her heaving neck a circlet of ebony beads of quaint fashion, such as is frequently worn by the dusky and sometimes fairer children of the South, in whom there is a sweet, strange faith in these mystical ornaments. Amy had always worn this. She could not tell why. It seemed a part of her flesh and blood. She twined it with passionate caresses about the glowing neck of Bessie.

When Judge Arno saw these dancing ebony beads, clasped together by a grotesque image whose eyes blazed with emerald fire, an awful paleness overspread his features. He seemed ready to faint. By a strong effort he recovered himself.

"Let me see that necklace," said he. "I have not seen anything like it before, except once."

He graciously took the shining circlet darkly flashing, and gazed upon it with a far-away look.

"It reminds me," said he. "No matter. I only took it for that. How like—as if it were the very same!"

With a quick movement he pressed the relic to his lips, and kissed the curious image by which the beads were caught together.

"I remember this, I remember this," he said. "It cannot be! Lo, it is! Ah, the picture!"

He touched a spring, and the tiny image opened, and right within its bosom burned forth the glowing face of a woman, lovely as the wave when full of summer's smile, radiant as a star.

"I never saw that before. What does it mean?" said Amy.

Judge Arno looked at Amy's brilliant face, flooded with excitement, while her lithe form bent forward like a flame, and glittered with wondrous loveliness. The piercing glance of the judge seemed to rend her very soul. Then with a mighty cry he clasped her to his arms.

"My child! my child!" he said. "My long lost Leonora's child!"

[CONCLUDED NEXT WEEK.]

A Suggestion for the Coming Convention.

I beg leave to offer a suggestion relativ to the convention to be held at Cassadaga Lake, hoping that if found available, and one in which others may acquiesce, they will express themselvs freely through THE TRUTH SEEKER. The question for the managers of the coming convention is, How can we produce an effect that will be the most lasting and beneficial to our cause? I suggest that the committee assign to each speaker such a subject as he or she is best qualified to present, and that the selection of subjects be placed in the hands of those best acquainted with the immediate wants of the people, so far as enabling them to break loose from the slavery in which they are held. Every move should now tend toward strengthening our cause. Let us hear from others on this question. A. E. RINGER.

Talmagian Philosophy.—Concluded.

"Just as soon as a missionary begins to doubt whether there was a Garden of Eden, or whether there is a place of future punishment, he comes right home from Beyrout and goes into the insurance business." All the better for Beyrout! Just as soon as a man begins to doubt he begins to get too honest to hold an agency in the old, played-out hell-fire insurance business, and it is only natural that he should look about for some business that has an honest phase to it.

"Orthodoxy, beginning with the Sandwich Islands, has captured vast regions of barbarism for civilization." Were you ever on board one of the early missionary vessels, Mr. Talmage, when the cabin was crowded with missionaries, and the hold stowed full of rum? Did you ever see one of these converted barbarians dance with delight as he saw the vessel coming in, and hear him shout, "More good missionary, more good rum?" And hav you ever found out why it was that the most loathsome disease broke out amongst them immediately after the advent of the missionaries?

"Ninety-nine out of every hundred of Protestant churches were built by people who believed in an entire Bible." And no doubt every one who had a hand in stealing Girard College away from the Liberals "believed in an entire Bible." Some of the greatest robbers and most bloody monsters the world ever saw "believed in an entire Bible." Most of the bank defaulters and those who get away with vast sums of the people's money are members of orthodox churches and "believe in an entire Bible."

"On that same street, and not far from being opposit, stood Park Congregational church, called by its enemies 'hell-fire corner.' Theodore Parker died, and his church died with him. Park church still stands on 'hell-fire corner,' thundering away the magnificent truths of orthodoxy, just as though Theodore Parker had never lived." And I will guarantee that for every one who ever heard of "hell-fire corner," or anybody who ever preached there, a hundred hav been delighted with the sermons and sayings and writings of Theodore Parker. He had too much good sense to run a "hell-fire corner."

"All that the world ever got that is worth having came through the wide aqueduct of orthodoxy from the throne of God." Well, now, if that isn't a specimen of orthodox cheek that an army mule might covet! If Mr. Talmage had stated that the rack, the ripping-knife, the iron boot, the thumbscrew, and all the tortures of the Inquisition had "come through the wide aqueduct of orthodoxy," he would hav been nearer the truth. I wonder if Mr. Talmage ever read about the Dark Ages, a period of about a thousand years, when Christianity had everything its own way; when there were no institutions of learning only for the priesthood; when not one in a hundred could write his own name. That long, dark night of ignorance "came through the wide aqueduct of orthodoxy." This worse than midnight darkness Mr. Talmage cannot lay to Infidelity, for it was a cardinal doctrin of the church "that it was better to kill heretics and send them to hell, where they belonged." To express a doubt was to meet death "through the wide aqueduct of orthodoxy."

In the reign of Elizabeth, that "most Christian queen," the prisons were filled, men and women were hanged, roasted, boiled, beheaded, ripped up alive, quartered, and otherwise tortured by every means that fiendish ingenuity could contrive. There were penalties imposed by acts of Parliament for different degrees of heresy, and sanctioned by Elizabeth, "the most Christian queen."

Is it possible that Mr. Talmage never read about these acts of Parliament? Is it possible that he never read about these Christian persecutions under Elizabeth? Or is it, as I hav long believed, that every Christian will lie for his religion? For these things "came through the wide aqueduct of orthodoxy," and I believe Mr. Talmage knows it.

"Who had the greatest human intellect? Paul. Orthodox from scalp to heel. Who was the greatest poet? John Milton. Orthodox from scalp to heel. Who was the greatest reformer? Martin Luther. Orthodox from scalp to heel." Who murdered James A. Garfield? Charles Guiteau. "Orthodox from scalp to heel." Who murdered his little daughter in imitation of Abraham? Freeman. "Orthodox from scalp to heel." Another father in like manner plunged a huge knife to the heart of his little boy. "Orthodox from scalp to heel." A dozen Molly Maguires were jerked to kingdom come in one day, attended by their priests, and are no doubt now waiting to giv Mr. Talmage a welcome to the New Jerusalem. "Orthodox from scalp to heel." All who had a hand in whipping women and hanging witches and banishing Quakers were "orthodox from scalp to heel."

All who had a hand in murdering and torturing and mutilating the thousands, in the days of the Inquisition, were "orthodox from scalp to heel." I wonder if Mr. Talmage has ever heard of a party of Frenchmen under the command of Ribault who were inhumanly massacred by a band of Spanish desperadoes, after being promised protection by the Spanish commander. After being killed their bodies were cut to pieces and the pieces hung to the limbs of a tree, to which was attached the following inscription, "Not because you are Frenchmen, but because you are heretics and enemies to God." "Orthodox from scalp to heel!"

I could fill a volume with the acts of orthodox tyrants—with murders and robberies and seductions. If Mr. Talmage is ignorant of these facts, he had better exchange with the Rev. John Jasper. Jasper would be quite a curiosity up North, and Mr. Talmage would hav a success down South where Jasper has convinced them that "the sun do move."

"O man, believing in a Bible in spots, where are you going when you quit this world? Answer. Going into a great to be, so on into the great somewhere, and then I shall pass on through the great anywhere, and I shall probably arrive in the nowhere."

It must hav taken a deal of mental training to produce so lofty a sentiment. He must hav dieted a long time before giving birth to such language. I wonder how much brain food it took to enable him to produce such a sky-scraping thought. Nothing but the biggest kind of codfish, and a great many of them, could fit a man for the effort.

Mr. Talmage gulps down "the entire Bible from lid to lid." He doesn't believe it "in spots"—not a bit of it. He believes the world was made in six days; no "indefinit periods of time" for him. He believes in the snake story, and the flood story, and the Jonah story, and the Samson story, and if the "Arabian Nights," with "Sindbad the Sailor," had been added, he is a man of such "unbounded stomach" he could gulp them all down.

Moses and Aaron turned all the waters of Egypt into blood. Mr. Talmage believes it. Then the magicians did the same with their enchantments. Mr. Talmage understands just how it was done, and if the statement had been that the waters were turned into blood fifty times in a day, it would all be as easy for Mr. Talmage to believe as it is for an ass to talk, or for a woman to turn into a pillar of salt, or for a regiment of dead men to march up out of their graves and never be heard of any more. "I am going to my father's house; I am going into the companionship of my loved ones who hav gone before." How do you know that, Mr. Talmage? How do you know that your loved ones hav gone before, or will ever follow after? According to the Bible, it is a very uncertain thing. If your loved ones happen to be among the rich, they can no more enter the kingdom of heaven than a camel can pass through the eye of a needle.

Your loved ones must be able to heal the sick, speak with new tongues, handle rattlesnakes, tarantulas, and cobras, drink any kind of deadly poison, and cast out devils, because these are the signs which are to follow those who believe; and unless your loved ones can show these signs and hav been baptized they are to be damned, and there's the end on't, Mr. Talmage. But, no matter, if Mr. Talmage does not find his loved ones there, he will twang his harp and flap his angelic wings, and strut and spread his tail all the same, for when once a Christian gets his little shriveled-up soul into heaven, the little unimportant circumstance of his wife and mother and children being in hell don't even rumple his feathers.

"Brooklyn and New York would be better places to liv in with Raymond-street jail, and the Tombs, and Sing Sing, and all the small-pox hospitals emptied on us, than heaven without a hell." Of course every Christian will enjoy his heaven a great deal better if he knows some one else is roasting in hell. Rob a Christian of his hell, and his "pipe is out." "Take any shape but that." One is three and three is one —"believe or be damned." Every one of sense knows the class of people who "believe," and therefore will never envy Mr. Talmage his "companionship" when his wings begin to sprout.

"Nearly all the heterodox people I know believe all are coming out at the same destiny—Thomas Paine and George Whitefield, Charles Guiteau and James A. Garfield, John Wilkes Booth and Abraham Lincoln."

Yes, Thomas Paine must go to hell, not because his life was not worth more to the world than a hundred Whitefields', but because he did not believe as Mr. Whitefield did. This is the magnanimity that comes of Christian teaching. "The world is my country, to do good my religion," is a grander sentiment than Mr. Talmage, or any minister, or Paul, or Christ ever uttered.

How an intelligent man should get those names so jumbled is passing strange. Garfield only believed the Bible "in spots," while Guiteau was "orthodox from scalp to heel;" he believed the Bible "from lid to lid;" he has gone home to his "Lordy," and, no doubt, Mr. Talmage and Guiteau will twang their harps in unison and suck ice-cool lemonade through the same straw, while Mr. Garfield "will fetch up in the nowhere."

According to the Talmagian philosophy, Booth must be in hell, and Mr. Lincoln could not possibly get into heaven, because he was an Infidel, so that they will both be together after all.

"Those who deny the Bible, or any part of it, never die well." No doubt John Calvin, after roasting Servetus in a slow fire, "died well." Torquemada, after murdering and torturing scores and scores of human beings for opinion's sake, "died well." Constantine, who murdered those of his own household, and then made Christianity the religion of the state, "died well;" while such men as William Lloyd Garrison, Wendell Philips, Charles Sumner, Ethan Allen, Abraham Lincoln, Thomas Jefferson, and hundreds of other good and true men could not "die well," because not one of them believed the "entire Bible" from "lid to lid."

It must be a grand thought for Mr. Talmage that all of these noble, self-sacrificing men are suffering the torments of hell, while such Christian monsters as Constantine, Calvin, Guiteau, and Torquemada are going to flit around the New Jerusalem.

"This world will never advance one inch beyond this old Bible." Not if Mr. Talmage and the Christian world can help it. No morality beyond that of the bloody old lecher, King David; no knowledge beyond a flat earth; nothing more clean and decent than the story of beastly old Lot; nothing more rational than the Mosaic creation; nothing more humane than the character of plundering old Joshua.

Mr. Talmage would like to keep the people in the "old paths," and make himself conspicuous, not by elevating himself, but by lowering down the masses. What a pity it is that he cannot get the people back to the ignorance of the dark ages and once more enjoy the luxury of burning heretics. Make the people ignorant enough, and Mr. Talmage would be a great man. Thomas Paine was great because he made the people free. Mr. Talmage wants to bring himself into notice by forging chains of slavery, and keeping the people in ignorance. He says that "God has not learned anything in a thousand years." Neither would any Christian if knowledge were not forced upon him by "advanced thought." All who hav believed in an "entire Bible from lid to lid" hav ever been fighting "advanced thought." They hav tried to hold the world down to the "Old Bible." How desperately they fought for a flat earth! Even after Magellan sailed around it they quoted scripture to prove that there must be some mistake about it.

A thoroughly honest belief in the perfection of the scriptures would hold the world down to a level with the dark ages in which they originated. Doubt is the mother of progress. None, except a few lunatics like Mr. Talmage, believe that the Bible is a perfect revelation from God, and the world will grow better as their number grows less.

Hundreds who hav heard and read Mr. Talmage's sermon on the "Splendors of Orthodoxy" will regard it as unanswerable, and yet, in the main, it has no foundation in truth. A greater regard for God and the scriptures than for truth and humanity has spoiled many men before Mr. Talmage. How long will the people believe a lie, for God's sake?

My article is now entirely too long. I hav only referred to points in the sermon which were without any show of truth, and calculated to deceive. But I will say that there is not one paragraph in the whole sermon that is entirely true. JOHN PECK.

The Petition for State Secularization Considered by a Druid.

I hav read with much interest the text of the "petition for separation of church and state," and am ready to co-operate in the matter to the furthest extent of my power, and that without delay. This matter exactly suits me and matches the general tenor of my life purposes. I beg leave to suggest a few points. I believe it would hardly do to cut out the impression of the text in current TRUTH SEEKERS and use it, and that the only orthodox method is either to copy it or reprint it as heading on petition blanks. My first impulse was to print off these here; my second was to get a stereotype of the text. I shall wait a while in order to see if there may be some alteration of the text. I shall work with you in this concern most heartily, and continue to do so indefinitly. You were quite correct in eliminating the side issues from the text, as the text will do for Druids as far as its substance is concerned, while in all or any respects there is no serious objection to it. The words, "State Secularization" are all right; the word "Sabbath may be criticised by the Sunday men, forasmuch as Saturday is the Sabbath both in philology and in fact. Druids hold in memory the history of the terms "church" and "ecclesia," and insist that the ecclesia has no right whatever to the title "church." The terms "religion and the state" would suit us well. Either a modification of the terms or the addition of an explanatory phrase would please us. We want a prohibition of the prevalent methods of prostituting the goddess of liberty to the purposes of religion in any form whatever. You are of the same mind, I see. In order to insure hearty co-operation, the text of the petition should be as satisfactory all around as possible. Take it altogether, you hav produced quite a good one. Suppose we say, "total separation of religion and the state, by some entitled church and state," etc.?

I shall distribute blank forms among about 100 leaders, in which case I shall want them printed all ready for use. We will pursue this matter without flinching as long as the end remains unaccomplished.

Then what will be the effect of the insertion of the words "liberty, equality, and fraternity" which occur in the first line? They seem to be the recognized triad of the republicanism of France. Hav not we in America got anything of our own? Such a small thing as this may make a material difference in the great struggle. Liberty and equality are all right, but fraternity is of very doubtful application. I think I hav seen some more appropriate triads, but cannot call them to mind. We would rejoice to hav identity of text with you.

As the Druidical laws of 1878 testify, we were going to make a movement sooner or later on our own hook. You hav burst forth ahead of us. Take the lead, then; your boldness entitles you to the position.

Again, in reference to the term "church." What ecclesiastical institutions we hav among us are of Latin origin, with the exception of the Greek church, and possibly a little of the Coptic. The English language is hardly a means of criticism in ecclesiastical terms. The Reformation, it is true, brought forward English translations, or what may be regarded as equivalents, and among the rest the word "church" (kirk) was harnessed in and prostituted to the cause. Of course it had been used by the Christians before the time of the Reformation. It was popularly used in Scotland and England for the Christian assemblies after the expulsion of Druidism in all its forms from those countries. But in Wales, where Druidism continued under the name of Bardism (its truest name), the word kirk was not suffered to be prostituted, and Bardism holds it well clinched to this day. In Scotland the Christians stole and prostituted the term clachan also, which meant the whole church-yard, or what was inclosed within the outer kirk (or circus). The same thing was done in Wales, where Lhan (or clachan stripped of the internal guttural digamma) is used for a parish church and its yard; and the reason for this is, forasmuch as the property was entitled clachan or Lhan, which was confiscated for Christian use and ownership, kirk and clachan are, no doubt, two separate terms, both Keltic and Druidic, and each had its own particular signification. Clachan is certainly derived from Gaelic clach, a stone; plural, clachan. Kymmric (Welsh), Lhech, a flat stone. Clachan was a term applied to the nucleal portion of the parish; and was, and even is now, equivalent to the Cornish term church-town, or the hamlet or village around a parish church.

It is well known that ecclesia originally was applied to the assembly of the Christians. It really meant the invited or the called-forth, or perhaps the elect. Eventually, it was applied to the place of meeting. Wherever Greek Christianity traveled, the term ecclesia was on hand. Latin Christianity did not despise it for its Greek sound, but took it and used it almost exclusivly. It is the word now in Italian, Spanish, Portuguese, and French, and even in Welsh. But the reason for its presence in Welsh ("Eglwys") is but a little different from the cause wherefore it stands in the other languages named. In Italy it did not succeed the kirk, for that had degenerated ages before into the circus (kirkus).

All the pagan religious institutions differed too much from infant Christianity for an immediate union between them, nor would the pagans allow it. In Italy the ecclesia made its own independent start, with and under its own name of ecclesia, a Greek word of open import, and scarcely a proprietary with any institution previously, any more than the word assembly is now with us. After the coalition of the ecclesia and the pagan religion, before and at the time of Constantine, the Christians retained the term ecclesia. The missionaries carried the term to all countries whither they went. It was planted among the Kymmry, or Welsh, at an early date, and they hav it to-day; but it is to be remembered that the missionaries in Britain, who brought it, were looked upon as Hebræo-Greeks, rather than Hebræo-Romans, though they might hav set forth from Rome itself. The kirk was a Druidic circle, and in vogue not only in Britain but even in in Germany. Even the name was in vogue in Germany, and has continued to this day. The philology of the term shows that German and Gothic afford not even the pretense of an etymology for it. Gaelic and Kymmric, both of them, present us with a clear and undoubted origin for it. At the same time neither Latin nor Greek can afford a root for kirk or circus. For this reason the English Misokeltic scholars and the clergy hav ransacked everything in order to find a Christian proprietorship for the word. After a good deal of overhauling they settled on a supposed Greek compound, kuriou-oikos, meaning "Lord's house!" Marvelous! monstrous!

Yet this Lord's-house title may now be classed among what are called secondary or accidental etymologies, provided the fact be noted and kept in remembrance. Circ, or kirk, is a Kymmric word, also a Gaelic; and identical primarily with the present Kymmric word kerrig, plural of carreg, a stone; hence kyrch, a circuit, a religious circle, or a procession. I referred to the Druidical circle of stones, which were sometimes twelve in number, sometimes thirty, sometimes one hundred, etc., but in Cornwall nineteen, the number of the lunar cycle, forasmuch as the Cornish are the remains of the third sub-nation or grand tribe, entitled Lhoegrwys (Ligurians, Lunigeri, moon-men, moon-rakers). The English nation is a mixture of the Ligurian grand tribe and various foreign elements, Gothic, Saxon, Anglic, Danish, Belgic, and Norman. The Kymmry, or first sub-nation, were children of the sun, and furnished most of the Druids, and built their kirks according to solar numbers. The second sub-nation were the Britons, and had the care of war, and to them generally belonged the commander-in-chief of the army. Hence the reason that in the time of Cæsar all the people were called Britons by the Romans. Nearly every attack made by the Romans was directed against the territory of the Ligurian grand tribe, which was the agricultural sub-nation.

Such is the kirk in its origin. It is evident the ecclesia has no claim to it. And even the clachan is stolen property.

Much more inappropriate still is the term "church," applied to a Methodist or Congregational conventicle, as is the custom in America. It is a stealing again of stolen goods—worse than ordinary thiefdom, for there is some kind of rude honor among thieves.

I hav digressed much, undoubtedly, in order to elucidate the cause of a piece of laudable pedantry to which Druids are prone when they contemplate their ancient property. Now I will return to the matter in hand, secularization. You hav eight counts. That is not quite right. Seven counts would be well, but a good criminal number is nine, the number of Noah and his ark. Let me see—I hav it—you hav forgotten the subject of marriage. In several states of the union religious solemnization of marriage is wedded with the civil law in a very unpleasant manner. It is necessary for the civil law to formally withdraw from the unhallowed touch. Religious people may still hav their rites in connection with marriage. Marriage is a natural act as birth is a natural fact, neither of them being per se religious. Druids hav their marriage ceremony, and one that for beauty may compete with any other whatever, and their priests of the white order are in many cases licensed as such to solemnize marriages by the civil authorities in the United States. Druids are willing to forego this privilege in states where such licensing is practiced, that they may help in the purification of the raped and befouled blessed Virgin, the goddess of liberty. The proper carrying out of this point would forever settle the vexed subject of polygamy, which is distinctivly a religious marriage.

Count 7. There are other chaplaincies besides those named.

Taking a view of the whole subject of secularization, I venture to assert that it was the intention of the original inaugurators of the American commonwealth to exclude religion just as much as to exclude George III. from participation in the civil machinery. It is true that even some of the leaders were religious and did not hav any idea of killing religion—neither would they kill George III., were they to get hold of him, but pamper him and giv him the best beef of New York and the richest pork of the interior, and the wines of many lands to wash them down. It is conceded that there must hav been many people in America in those days who desired a continuation of state religion, and showed themselvs very officious. These were confronted with the cold and ominous absence in the Constitution of any provision for the fulfilment of their desires. The intention of the Constitution is known to us; it is unmistakable. And we know that the spirit of the Constitution has been miscarried and flagrantly thrust aside. The time has come for something more than a weak protest. Men and women, sons and daughters of liberty, wake up and see the perilous situation; seek to be piloted therefrom without delay. Since the quadrennial election is close at hand, let us canvass the candidates with reference to this important matter of separation of church and state. I hav no doubt that the great majority of American citizens will favor this reform eventually, wherefore the necessity of enlightening them without delay, that the realization of it may not be unduly protracted.

Yours faithfully, CORAVAR AMERIG, Arch-Bard.

COLONEL KELSO'S "Bible Analyzed," says T. C. Leland, is a big book, and "analyzed" is a big word. It takes a big book and a big word to deal with "the book"—the word of God. Analyze means to pull to pieces, to rip up, to tear down, to turn inside out, to examin piece by piece and in detail. This is what has happened to the Bible under the buzz-saw analysis of Col. Kelso. Millions of the human race are yet under the dominion of this Bible. Millions are enslaved by it, and are suffering torments and terrors on account of it. It is a mercy to free these slaves and relieve these sufferers. Col. Kelso's book will help to do it, or perhaps wholly emancipate any Christian who will follow him in his analysis. Liberals who are themselvs out of the Bible woods should help their benighted neighbors by calling their attention to this work. Thousands of inquiring minds would be glad to giv $3 for this medicin and ministration to a mind diseased. Let them know of it.

A Reply to Mr. Chavannes.

IN THE TRUTH SEEKER of May 24th, Mr. Albert Chavannes, editor of the Sociologist, of Adair Creek, East Tennessee, takes the kindly trouble to review, in part, my recent lecture before the Liberal Club, as reported in a previous number of THE TRUTH SEEKER. Judging from a somewhat slight previous acquaintance with Mr. Chavannes, and from a thorough reading of his interesting journal, I think him in a high degree competent to the intelligent and effectiv discussion of the high class of subjects to which he recalls our attention. He seems to me courteous, candid, and able. If I am not mistaken, he is a man of that logical order of mind that he will know when he is answered; and it is a pleasure to hold intellectual communication with such men, who are really the few.

In so far as my lecture was a review of Mr. Spencer, it has the good fortune to meet with the entire concurrence of Mr. Chavannes. He says, "I heartily agree with Mr. Andrews in all the points he makes, and feel highly gratified that such a thorough answer should hav been made to Mr. Spencer's fallacies." His criticism bears only, therefore, upon certain points of my rejoinder to my critics. The first and main position assumed by me, to which he takes exception, is that in which your report makes me say that "the great question in Sociology for me is not what is necessary to-morrow, nor what is adapted to the low condition in which people are to-day, but, first and foremost, What is the High Ideal of a perfect human society?" adding that "the shortest way to progress is to study out, What are the fundamental principles in regard to what would be a perfect order of human life for perfect men and women?"

To these propositions Mr. Chavannes objects, first, by asking, How shall we know that our high ideal of a perfect society is correct? Then he affirms "that our knowledge of the future is altogether dependent upon our knowledge of the past," and that "the past furnishes us with no safe data that can enable us to conceive what constitutes a perfect society;" that "it has entirely failed to evolve a common idea of what would constitute a perfect order of human life for perfect men and women." He then mentions a series of leading minds who hav attempted to achieve such an ideal; and he adds, "When they fail, as all hav and all will," etc. He holds that it is given to no man to achieve such an ideal, and that no two "will ever agree entirely as to what constitutes this high order of society."

In reply to these positions of Mr. Chavannes, I hav now to say that the few hurried remarks upon which he comments were given oratorically, and must not be taken in all respects too literally. When I said "the great question," I meant, of course, the greater question as compared with another, the necessity and importance of which were still not denied. As to how we are to attain to a high ideal of society, or of true men and women, the subject is a large one, and we can do but little more than to enter upon it here; and then as to how we are to test the accuracy of our ideal, my answer is that we are to do so by scientific methods similar to those by which we test scientific prevision in other respects. And here, first and foremost, I wish emphatically to deny Mr. Chavannes's assumption that "our knowledge of the future is altogether dependent upon our knowledge of the past." This assumption is virtually the same as to assume that we hav no other mental faculties but observation and memory. But we hav also reason, which is allied equally with the past, present, and future, which transcends mere observation and memory, and which teaches us what will be, because in the nature of things it must be; whether our experience has ever exhibited to us the same concatenation of circumstances, or not. We work out new problems in mathematics every day, and know that we are right, although no human observation or memory has ever been there before—not from any experience, but from the knowledge of the abstract and guiding principles applicable in such cases. The statement here criticized, and now prevalent among positivistic scientists, has only a very partial and limited aspect of truth. It is true that we hav to walk, as upon legs—when we look to the present or future—upon our observation of the past and upon our memory of that observation; but it is not true that we hav no higher faculty than those legs, giving us prevision or the power to foreknow. It is therefore too much to say that we are altogether dependent upon them. We are, in a certain low and primitiv sense, dependent upon them; after which we transcend their range, and graduate into the higher spheres of our existence. The proposition in question is as if it were to be said that all literature is altogether dependent upon the alphabet and the spelling-book because it is through them that we get our initiation into literature; and this would be again the same as to say that there is nothing in the sublime productions of a Homer, a Dante, and a Shakspere, which was not derived from the alphabet and the spelling-book.

I agree fully with Mr. Chavannes, that no two minds will every agree entirely as to what would constitute a high order of society. It is this word entirely which makes all the difference. In details and particulars we shall always differ, but in the great outline conception of what constitutes true men and true women, and a true and modelic human society, there has always been, and will always be, a basis of substantial unity. The existence of such words as gentleman and gentlewoman, as nobleman and noblewoman, in all languages, bears testimony to the fact that in all nations and ages gentleness and nobility hav been reckoned among the characteristic properties which should and do indicate the superior type of humanity. Without, therefore, the need even of any new and special modes of test of the the proximately perfect order of human beings, and of society, it is obviously possible for us, by a proper analysis of what men instinctivly deem superior, to evolve a general type of human excellence.

But as I really meant, when I spoke the words to which Mr. Chavannes objects, something far more definit, and of a more scientific cast than this general instinctiv estimate, it is only fair dealing to answer, with more specification and directness, his question as to how we are to know the higher type conception of men and women and society to be the true one.

Still speaking at first, however, somewhat generally, I will say that we are to previse the future and higher outcome of humanity, individual and collectiv, precisely by the same means and methods as those by which science previses or forcasts its definit and reliable prognostications in other spheres of being. It is one of those curious paradoxes in the history of thought, while modern scientists are pretty loudly and generally affirming, along with Mr. Chavannes, that we "can only know the future by our knowledge of the past," and that our only method of discovery is "to feel one's way along, in order to get something to-morrow a little better than to-day," that they in the same breath are affirming just as loudly, and more truly, that the distinctiv office of science is prevision. Comte affirms, and rightly, that the absolute test of the arrival of any science at its culmination or perfected stage of being, is its ability to foretell the future with accuracy; as, for example, in astronomy, to calculate eclipses.

The way in which this contradiction seems to hav got lodged in the modern scientific mind is this: Theology predicates the hypothesis that God created the world for certain definit purposes or ends; that he knew the end from the beginning; that his purpose was the cause—in the sense called final causes, or such as look to the future or the outcome of things—of his act of creation. The science of final causes, allied with prevision, or the knowledge of the future, also came, in philosophy, to be called teleology (from the Greek word telos, end or aim). When, then, our Agnostic scientists discarded theology, they incautiously discarded teleology also, inveighing against it as something purely theological. At the same time they were discovering that the very gist and core of science is teleological; which property of science they announce and affirm under the name of prevision.

Lester F. Ward is the first among these Agnostic scientists to hav taken himself out of the snarl by affirming and making much of sociological teleology (the power of man to foreknow in respect to human events), while denying or ignoring theological ontology (or the supposed power of God to foreknow and plan with regard to universal events). Leaving aside the theological question, I stand with Mr. Ward in the stanch assertion that the governing feature of a true sociology is to foreknow the outcome to be desired and aimed at in our reformatory exertions, in order to devise and apply the best methods of effort for the accomplishment of those ends.

But I hav still not arrived at the specific and determinate answer to the question of Mr. Chavannes. My answer is, in fine, that there exists a new discovery and a new science of which Mr. Chavannes knows as yet hardly anything, and which furnish a new and supplementary method for conceiving, measuring, and testing human character, human institutions, and human designs, as much in advance of all that I hav previously spoken of as modern navigation by the aid of the mariner's compass is in advance of that ancient navigation which crept cautiously along the shores from headland to headland, having no other means of forecasting the voyage than observation and memory. This new element in sociological prevision is what I had definitly in mind when I spoke as I did at the Liberal Club. It is something specifically new; as much so as was the mariner's compass; and is precisely of the character of that which Mr. Chavannes affirms, that it never has happened, and never will. It is a perilous position for any one to assert, these days, of anything, that it never can or never will happen. What I refer to here is Universology, and Universology is too recent a discovery to hav become generally diffused in the scientific mind. In order, however, not to leave this statement hanging too much in the air, or seemingly altogether mystical, I will close for the present by propounding the following Universological dicta:

Everything, whatsoever, in the whole universe of being (which is not aborted and inverted into dissolution) undergoes three Successiv Stages of evolution. These are:

I. A crude, partially chaotic, and primitiv stage; technically denominated naturismal.

II. A regulated and regulativ, or exactified and exactifying stage; technically denominated scientismal.

III. An orderly, adjusted, harmonic, and culminating stage; technically denominated artmismal.

With this chart of human evolution before us, and here applied within the scope of human affairs, it becomes possible to correlate the past, the present, and the future of humanity, with a certain amount of scientific precision. The human world, until now, has been passing through its naturismal or semi-chaotic career. In the present age, with the definit institution of the science of Sociology, and specifically, with the discovery of Universology, it enters upon its second or scientismal career; and out of these combined, and transcending them, with something higher than either, in respect to harmony or perfection, will ensue the third or artismal stage of human development.

The career which is thus sketched by the inherent laws of being, now discovered and demonstrated, as science, for humanity at large, or the Grand Man, is the same career which every man and woman must go through in his or her own individual development, in order to be fitting members for society, in these several successiv stages of evolution.

In order, then, that we may become intelligent and efficient co-workers with Nature in forwarding her designs for a superior, collectiv humanity, it is necessary that we should become able, individually, to read our own characters, and stages of development, in the light of the new science. In this manner it becomes as possible to precalculate and to prearrange human destiny, individual and collectiv, in its great outline features, as it is to precalculate and prearrange the long sea voyage across immense oceans by the aid of a piece of magnetic iron which points to the north; and so to abandon, in the major degree, the method of "feeling one's way along in order to get something a little better to-morrow than to-day;" as the navigator, supplied with the compass, has abandoned, in the main, his watching of the coasts from headland to headland.

STEPHEN PEARL ANDREWS.

The Proposed Change in the League.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE TRUTH SEEKER, Sir: I hav just read your editorial article, entitled as above, and although I hav but a moment of time, before taking the cars for the Waterloo meeting, I cannot forbear sending you my full indorsement of all you say on this subject. From the first I hav felt that the League should strictly confine its platform to the "Nine Demands of Liberalism;" and, until those demands are fully granted, we should not enlarge the platform.

I hav yet to find a professed Liberal in the United States who objects to any one of these "demands." And I believe that if the Congress of the National Liberal League will, at its next session, plant itself squarely on these demands, ignoring all other issues, it will go forward to victory.

Some time since I asked a leading advocate of woman suffrage if her society would adopt state secularization as a part of their platform? And she replied, "We cannot afford it, for there are many who believe in woman suffrage who do not indorse state secularization." And she was right. There must be a separate party for every great reform movement.

I heard Col. Ingersoll say, "If you find two thousand persons who will stand upon one specific plank, add another specific plank, or another question, and you will cut the number down to one thousand; add another, and the number will be diminished to five hundred; add a fourth specific plank, and you will hav but two hundred and fifty to indorse it."

There is much truth in that. Liberals are honest people, and will not, therefore, compromise their honest opinions. Therefore, if you intend to unite a large body of them, you must put into your platform only those things upon which they all agree.

This is saying nothing against the opinions of others. For my part, I am in favor of woman suffrage, but as there are many Liberals who are not in favor of it but who favor secularization, I am opposed to having it a part of the Liberal League platform. Good, honest Liberals honestly differ on the question of prohibition, therefore that question does not belong in the League platform. There are Greenbackers who believe in state secularization, and hard money men who are as zealous in its behalf. Therefore the League should not interfere with that question. And for my part I believe that there are Freethinkers who are equally honest who differ on the question which has proved such a great stumbling-block, the repeal or the modification of the "Comstock laws," who should be permitted to act together. I was much pleased with the noble stand taken by Man on this subject of a "new deal," and was sorry to see that the Index had not the liberality to meet Man's generous proposition in the magnanimous spirit in which it was made. If we are to hav a great union of all our forces each should be willing to concede something for the good of the cause.

H. L. GREEN.

The Goodness of God.

Christians vaunt the goodness of God as the reason why all should believe in, love, and worship him. Continually they reiterate the following and kindred texts: "Like as a father pitieth his children, so the Lord pitieth them that fear him" (Ps. ciii, 13). "The Lord preserveth all them that love him, but all the wicked will he destroy" (Ps. cxlv, 20). "But the salvation of the righteous is of the Lord: he is their strength in the time of trouble. And the Lord shall help them and deliver them" (Ps. xxxvii, 38, 40).

How can any sane person believe these texts, these blessed promises, these comforting scriptures, these pure and holy words of God? Does not every day's experience prove them falsehoods? If God is our heavenly father, he is a very bad one. What father having the right and power to interfere and prevent would stand by and see his child racked, tortured, burnt alive? The cyclone, the flood, the mine explosion, the fire, the shipwreck! Does the Lord pity the sufferers, even as a father pitieth his children? The innocent children, the devoutly pious, cry to God for help, to save them, spare them such terrible suffering. Yet this loving, merciful God, this heavenly father, is deaf to their entreaty, unmindful of their agony, for saint and sinner suffer alike. If he has the power and does so pity them, why does he not spare, save, relieve, deliver them?

Can there be a more palpable falsehood than, "The Lord preserveth all them that love him?" Did the cyclone, which Christians tell us is a dispensation of divine providence, spare the innocent, the Christian? Did it not strike the church, and spare the grogshop and brothel? In the shipwreck did the righteous find strength above all others to endure the storm, the starvation? Did the Lord help and deliver them, and destroy only the wicked? In the late mine explosion horror did the Lord help and deliver the righteous?

All nature in her movements is controled by eternal laws. In the action of the forces of nature we see at times terrible slaughter, but nature makes no distinction, is no respecter of persons; the earthquake, flood, fire, tornado force all in their way to pay the penalty.

The physical constitution of man is governed by law, and every violator of physiological laws must suffer disease and death. The plea of innocence and ignorance avails nothing. No God, no savior, no vicarious atonement can save from the consequences.

The texts we hav quoted are among the most prized in the Bible, yet they are worthless, deceptiv, proved false by every human experience. If this is true of the best texts that can be found in the Bible, what can be the value of the balance—the recitals of wars, butcheries of maidens and babes, intrigues of kings, wantonness and immorality of priests and saints?

Many think it a waste of the precious space to publish articles in THE TRUTH SEEKER, exposing the inconsistencies, falsehoods, and absurdities of the Bible, because faith and reverence for it are fast dying out. No men of science, very few of intelligence or ordinary scholarship, even among the clergy, but admit certain parts of the Bible hav no reasonable claims to divine inspiration.

But we call attention to the immense amount of money expended every year in publishing and forcing Bibles into every house; of the mighty power of the Sunday-school; and the blind worship and veneration the women of our land manifest for it; how under the instruction and influence of the clergy the mothers insist on the children's attendance at Sunday-school, and their study of the Bible lesson, instilling in their children's mind awe and reverence for the Bible as God's holy word, heaven's best and most precious gift to men.

There is need, not alone of articles in our Liberal papers making plain the truth, but that in every town and village Liberals should organize, establish science schools, to counteract the evil influence of the Sunday-schools, so that the rising generation may be released from the shackles of superstition, and the cruel bondage of fear, and be helped to rejoice in the glorious light of science, reason, truth, and common sense.

CHAS. B. REYNOLDS.

Obituary.

I do not feel like letting pass unnoticed the death of a noble and remarkable mother in our Liberal Israel, who, if she was not really a distinguished personage, ought to hav been so. I refer to Mrs. Clarissa Bartlett Spear Wing, widow of Moses Wing, who died at Brunswick, Maine, May 22d, aged ninety-one years. Mrs. Wing was a truly noteworthy personage, not only for her age, but for her remarkable domestic career, for the wide circle of her influence, and of the high sentiment of esteem which environed her; as, also, for her stanch advocacy of every reform. Her progeny has consisted of no less than thirteen children, forty-nine grandchildren, fifty-six great-grandchildren, and a small number, not ascertained, of great-great-grandchildren. For many years she has resided in Brunswick, surrounded by her numerous family. It was there that I made her acquaintance, many years ago, but when she was already advanced in years; and I hav seldom met with any person whose nature, intelligence, and force of character impressed me more. Every subject of human interest interested her. Religiously educated, and still retaining her connections with the church, no kind or degree of radicalism alarmed or offended her. She sought for and read all the organs of Freethought and progress, and all radical and progressiv books. This greed for knowledge and new thought lasted with her until the end. It was only for a month before her death that she knew suffering or sickness. In body and mind she was a whole woman. Parker Pillsbury once remarked of her that she ought to hav been the president of Bowdoin College at Brunswick, rather than any one whom he saw in that seat of learning.

Mrs. Wing was the mother of Mrs. Elizabeth G. Varney, of Brooklyn, so widely and favorable known for many years past amongst the Liberals of New York and vicinity; and the grandmother of Mrs. Varney's daughter Louisa Varni Gardinier, the successful Brooklyn artist, whose memorial picture of your present correspondent was purchased by my friends and presented to me as a birthday surprise, some three or four years ago.

Mrs. Wing was a direct lineal descendant of Elder William Brewster, and, also, I believe, of Miles Standish, of the Pilgrims and the Mayflower.

Lectures and Meetings.

LADIMER KLAEEL, the Bohemian philosopher and Freethinker, will be honored on June 29th at Belle Plain, Iowa, near which many Bohemians liv, by the unveiling of a monument.

THE directors of the Michigan State Spiritual and Liberal Association, at a meeting held May 24th, decided to hold their summer meeting at Nemoka, near Lansing, convening July 25, 1884, and closing August 4th. Distinguished talent will be present, and as every effort will be put forth to make the meeting one of instruction and pleasure, the directors hope that a goodly attendance may be secured for the whole session. The Nemoka camping grounds, eight hundred acres, are situated on the banks of Pine Lake, about two miles from the Capitol, on the Chicago and Grand Trunk railroad; are easy of access from all points, and in many ways furnish almost surpassing opportunities for the pleasure seeker. W. Cronk is president of the association, and W. R. Alger, of Flint, is secretary.

C. B. REYNOLDS, the eloquent ex-Adventist preacher, desires further lecturing invitations. He is hopeful of doing a great work this summer and fall, and will be pleased to book engagements for months ahead. He would like to make a trip West, particularly in Michigan, where the Adventists are plenty, and among whom he anticipates he could make many converts to Freethought. But he is not at all particular where or how far he goes, provided appointments are made so as not to lose time. If he can lay out a route, or get engagements in consecutiv order, he will lecture at very low rates. Mr. Reynolds is a stirring man, and will do great good for Liberalism in every town he visits. He roused the Christians of Pittsburgh, and filled the Liberal halls to overflowing. Giv him a call and keep him at work. If there is a minister in your town who would like to discuss the issues between the church and the Freethinkers, Mr. Reynolds holds himself ready to accommodate.

A LARGE audience assembled at Paine Hall, Sunday afternoon, May 25th, to hear Mr. W. M. Chandler deliver Col. Ingersoll's famous Decortion Day oration, recently published in "Prose Poems." Horace Seaver presided and made the following introductory address: "We meet to pay a tribute of gratitude, honor, and admiration to the heroic soldiers who gave their lives in the war of the Rebellion for the preservation of that Union for which Washington fought and Thomas Paine wrote. They fought, they died, that you and I might liv in a land of freedom, where no chattel slave shall tread the American soil as long as the republic stands. May it endure forever as the home of liberty, the asylum for the oppressed of all the nations of the earth. As long as the human race shall survive, let the memory of those soldiers be honored and revered. Nor, in our admiration of the departed, shall we forget the living, who from the battle fields where victory was declared returned to cheer homes and make firesides bright. All honor to the living and the dead of the great Union army, who preserved the nation, overthrew slavery, and established here a land of liberty which, to-day, is the marvel and the admiration of the world. Our young friend who is to speak to us will read that great oration of our matchless orator, Col. Ingersoll, and I now take great pleasure in introducing our young Liberal friend, Mr. W. M. Chandler." Mr. Chandler said: "I am proud to know that Col. Robert G. Ingersoll, king of the platform, in my judgment the greatest orator that the English speaking race has produced, has a heart filled with love for man, woman and child; and that he has the ability and genius to thrill, inspire, and lead them on to the promised land—filled with milk and honey—which, thanks to the scientific civilization of the nineteenth century, is not far off. When a mass of American citizens are met to decide which is the best course for the ship of state to take, no one can giv them more light than he. When a jury are trying to make the scales of justice balance, no one can better adjust the weights than he. When the theater or lecture hall is packed with an audience, as the Boston Theater was two weeks ago, eager to settle the disputes between theology and common sense, no one can make plainer which is common sense. When a little group of mourners stand with bleeding hearts around the upturned sod, no one can better wipe away the tears of grief. And when gratitude seeks to express her thanks to the soldiers of the republic, living and dead, who kept the old flag floating above the capitol of every state, no one can more eloquently giv her voice." Mr. T. W. Henry, cornet soloist of the Boston Cadet band, with a young lady accompanist, furnished delightful music, and the audience went home well pleased.

The Efficacy of Prayer.

The maddening rush of mighty waters over some fearful jutting cliff, the vivid lightning's gleaming flash, and the reverberating, echoing thunder-peal incite in the mind of the savage a feeling of mingled terror and awe. In this entanglement of phenomena his feeble intellect fails to discern law or orderly connection, and he attributes these inexplicable effects to a supernatural agency. He sees in the flow of the cataract the leap of a spirit, and in the crashing thunder-peal the hammer-clang of an exasperated God. He seeks to propitiate these terrible powers, and he offers up sacrifices to the demons of the earth and the air. Man, surrounded by incomprehensibilities, instinctivly appeals to a higher power, and propitiation of nature is the first rude effort of supplication.

The savage attributes death and disease to the working of evil spirits, and it is the duty of the medicin-man to exorcise the malignant and supplant it with the good. He is summoned to the bedside of the sick Indian, and appears, attired in the skins of wild animals, covered with venomous reptils, his hair streaming Medusa-like over his face and shoulders, inspiring awe, if not terror, in the mind of the fever-stricken patient. His remedies are exclusivly incantations, and with frenzied pantomimic gesture, accompanied with the wild hubbub of his rattle and his drum, he pounds the earth, utters demoniacal yells, froths at the mouth, marches to and fro, and blows into the mouth of his patient until he declares himself better or well. They claim to see the life or soul pass out of the body, and pretend they can seize it with the teeth and force it back again. Their functions are therefore more spiritual than medicinal. As the intellect expands, however, the idea of a direct personal volition manifesting itself in the economy of nature retreats more and more. We cease to propitiate the powers of nature, cease to exorcise the malignant spirit from the body of the sick, cease to pray for things in direct contradiction to natural law.

"At the approach of the Rhone," says Tyndall, "I met in the summer of 1858 a young peasant, who informed me he had come up to bless the mountains. This was the usual custom of the place, by which he sought to entreat the Almighty to make such meteorological changes as should insure the inhabitants at the foot of the mountains from glaciers, inundations, and floods. The diversion of the Rhone, or the deepening of the river-bed, would hav been of incalculable benefit to his little flock who dwelt below, but the priest would hav shrunk from the idea of asking the omnipotence to open a new channel of the river or cause a portion of it to flow over the Grimsall pass and down the valley of Upharsalia." This would hav been a miracle, but he didn't come to ask the creator to perform a miracle, but to do something which he thought manifestly lay within the bounds of the natural and non-miraculous. He didn't suppose that the prayer which he offered would cause the stream to roll back upon its source; but beyond the boundaries of his knowledge lay a region where rain was generated, he knew not how. He was not so presumptuous as to expect a miracle, but he firmly believed that in yonder cloudland matters could be so arranged that the clouds which caused the stream to rush with maddening torrent might by some process unknown to him be caused to disappear and wane slowly in the untroubled air. The cloud at first, the precursor of the storm, is but a hazy point, barely perceptible; a little wreath of mist, it increases in volume, becomes darker and denser until it obscures a large portion of the heavens. It throws itself into fantastic shapes, it gathers a glory from the sun, is borne onward by the wind, and the fury of the storm depends upon the comparativ attenuity of the atmosphere. Now we can show that the vesicles forming this cloud arose from watery vapor pre-existing in the atmosphere through reduction of temperature. We can show how they assume the form they present. We can assign optical reasons for the brightness or blackness of the cloud. We can explain on mechanical principles its driving before the wind, and its disappearance we can account for on principles of chemistry. The calamity the priest wished to avoid was the storm-cloud. In obedience to the laws of nature the storm-cloud would form, but he firmly believed that the Almighty in his infinit goodness in answer to his supplication would so prevent the play of the forces of nature that it would fade away in the ethereal space.

In the application of law the terms great and small are unknown. "The God that molds a tear also molds a planet," and the dissipation of the slightest mist by the special volition of the Almighty would be as much a miracle as the rolling of the Rhone over the Grimsall pass or the rolling back on itself of the falls of Niagara.

We hav ceased to propitiate the powers of nature, ceased to exorcise the malignant spirit, ceased to pray for things in direct contradiction to natural law, and now in our intercessions we beseech the Almighty to so adjust his laws that they may serve the volition of the petitioner.

In a small village in Pennsylvania, there dwelt a tradesman engaged in the humble but respectable occupation of making plow-handles. He had two sons of peculiar temperament. They were apparently devoted, if not consistent, members of the Methodist church, and were possessed of an unsuppressible ambition of acquiring public recognition. Their intellects were beneath the scale of mediocrity, and not susceptible of much cultivation or improvement. The force of their own mental endowments being insufficient to buoy them up before the public gaze, the arts of fraud and dissimulation were resorted to. One dark night, darker than the night that Falstaff had his immortal combat with the men in Kendal Green, the elder of the two, while returning to his house, was set upon by a robber who struck him with a sharp instrument. The blow was aimed for the heart. It had been true to its aim. The knife struck him directly over his heart; but, fortunately for him, in his side pocket he had his Bible. He always carried the precious volume with him, and the blow of the knife was intercepted in its deadly mission by the volume. The robber fled, and upon examining the book he found that the knife had entered it, and stopped at the very page where the Ten Commandments are, and that the point of the blade had stopped at the very commandment where it says, "Thou shalt not kill." This was a wonderful coincidence. Yet the proof was indisputable. He could show the Bible penetrated by some keen instrument in the manner above described. His brother had a still more remarkable circumstance happen him. He was painting the steeple of a church, and while standing upon the scaffolding surrounding the spire, he suddenly stepped off, and was unconsciously wafted, by some miraculous power in direct contradiction to the laws of gravitation, to the top of a large brick building on the opposit side of the street. Through a trap door on the roof he passed down through the building to terra firma; and, as a proof of his story, he referred the skeptic to the lady who lived in the house, and who had seen him come down from the roof. This story was published in the newspapers, became the theme of conversation, and was actually credited by many. Desirous of exposing this pious fraud, the writer, in company with a number of gentlemen, after urgent solicitation, finally induced him to prove the authenticity of his statement in the manner which he proposed. Upon arriving at the residence where his miraculous transportation occurred, one of our number was just about to knock, when he was caught by the arm and requested not to do so. The reason was obvious. He admitted frankly his falsehood, and requested us to say nothing. This same gentleman studied to be a Methodist preacher, and would hav been a successful candidate, were it not, as his brother said, for "Grief and Hegrew." A short time after this miraculous transportation, he took an activ part in a religious revival. In the midst of the good work he was taken seriously ill, and lay in bed for weeks. The local physicians could do him no good; nor could they successfully diagnose his disease. As a last resort he concluded to try the efficacy of prayer, and, at his request, his friends, and neighbors, and sisters of the Methodist church were called in, and gathered around his bedside. They prayed for him fervently, he joining in with them in their supplications. The effect was magic; his strength almost immediately returned, and he arose from his bed as well as ever.

In the classical precincts of Kendal Creek, near Bradford, Pa., an almost parallel case has recently been developed. A young lady was taken down with profuse hemorrhage. She became so emaciated she could scarcely lift her hand above her head. Everything that human power could do was done for her. The local physicians gave her case up as hopeless. Medical aid having proved futil, her friends as a last resort resolved to offer up prayers to the Almighty asking for the return of her health. She protested, but contrary to her wishes prayers were said every day for her recovery. Day after day from that time a marked change was noticed in her condition. So encouraged were they that they decided to consult Dr. Collis, of the Boston, Mass., "faith cure." He was made acquainted with the points in the case. He wrote back, appointing a following Tuesday as a day when supplication should be offered up for her relief. He advised the assistance of the Christians of the neighborhood, and between the hours of 3 and 4 o'clock in the afternoon, several devoted parties met at her bedside, occupying the time in prayer. Dr. Collis, who remained in Boston, joined in. The effect was, as in the former case, magic. The dry, hacking cough which had grated on the ears of the household for months immediately left. The marble stoneness or death-like pallor of the face was succeeded by a tinge of health; the helpless limbs began to show signs of returning usefulness, and her appetite returned to its normal state. But this wasn't all; while they were congatulating themselvs upon the improvement in her condition, she got out of her bed bright and early Wednesday morning, and she who was as helpless as a babe twenty-four hours before made her toilet, and came down stairs and ate a hearty breakfast.

Stories of the above type appear almost daily in the newspapers of the country; "they amaze the unlearned and make the learned smile." They, however, exemplify the indisputable truth that the fruits of prayer are only developed or garnered among the lowly, the ignorant, the illiterate and superstitious, and that it is merely the faint effort of a feeble mind to gain public recognition by the arts of fraud and dissimulation. In the annals of the past hav we ever heard of a Newton or a Laplace being shielded from the dagger of an asassin, or miraculously raised from a bed of sickness, through the efficacy of prayer?

It is conceded by the clergy that the age of miracles is past, and contended that the efficacy of prayer is not dependent upon a miracle, but that the Almighty is addressed only after the manner of the priest, who merely asked for the adjustment of natural laws, not the change of them. But the adjustment of the law of nature is as much a miracle as the violation of a law of nature. Jove must grasp the lightnings in his hand, and the divine or layman who offers up his supplications to an unknown power incorporates in every prayer a request to the Almighty to work a miracle. We pray for the repose of the dead, for rain, for the safety of the living from sudden death, from famin, scourges, pestilence, and plague, and the answer to all our entreaties necessarily involves the working of a miracle. The efficacy of prayer is therefore dependent upon a miracle. A miracle is its inseparable concomitant. But the age of miracles is past, and the efficacy of prayer has lost its only stable foundation. Scientific laws are invariable, and therefore unadjustable. They can only be obeyed or followed. We may adjust phenomena as in the case of scientific instruments; but to speak of adjusting the laws of nature is a misapprehension of them and of our relation to them. Man modifies phenomena by bringing them under laws, but he never varies or changes or adjusts laws in any way whatever. The fundamental laws of modern science render the efficacy of prayer inconceivable. These laws are the indestructibility of matter; the correlation and equivalence of forces; gravitation, and the law of evolution; and in just the proportion as the intellect becomes able to grasp and comprehend these laws will people come to rely upon them instead of on petitions to alter them.

Science associates natural phenomena with their approximate causes, and man ceases to propitate the powers of nature; the medicin man givs way to the physician and the surgeon, but again appears in the arena of the faithful in the form of the divine and the humble petitioner. The object desired is the same; the manner of supplication alone is different; the rattle and the drum disappear; the intonation of the voice is calmed, and the environment of civilization and the expansion of the intellect relieve him of his hideous trappings, but he still seeks to propitiate an exasperated God by self-abnegation and penances; still intercedes at the sick bed of the patient, and only illustrates the Indian medicin-man in a higher scale of civilization; still prays for deliverance from sudden death, from famin, scourges pestilence, and plague, and but imitates the action of the savage who offers up sacrifices to the demons of the earth and the air. The object desired is the same; the manner of supplication alone is different.

In the fable of Hercules and the wagoner there is considerable latent sarcasm concealed. It is a fair illustration of the scientific aspect of prayer. A wagoner, while traveling along a muddy road with a heavy load, becomes stuck in the mire. He immediately springs off his wagon, gets down on his knees, and entreats Hercules to come to his assistance. Hercules, in obedience to his summons, appears, and is represented, in the illustration accompanying the fable, as lying in a recumbent position stretched out upon a cloud in the sky. He comprehends the situation of the distressed wagoner at a glance, and commands him to discontinue his prayer and put his shoulder to the wheel. He does so, and, shouting at his horses, their combined strength soon extricates him from his difficulty.

While the scientist may believe that prayer does no harm, he will not admit that it will do any good; and he may be impressed with the belief that, in the case of the wagoner, if he had cut his prayer exceedingly short, and almost immediately put his shoulder to the wheel, he would hav been sooner extricated from his difficulty.

But, "touching the ways of God with man," the greatest mind can discover little more than the meanest. In theology the interval is small indeed between Aristotle and a child; between Archimedes and a naked savage; and the most eminent divine, the most learned theologian, or the most illustrious philosopher, after their unavailing attempts to fathom the secrets of the deity, will be forced to exclaim, in the language of a boy of eighteen summers:

"Saddened and softened by the whirling flood
Of doubt, anxieties, and troubled thoughts that beat
And surge in my tired brain, I stand and look Into the trackless, shoreless ether, which contains
The unnumbered secrets of creation's handiwork,
The realm of vacant space, and undisturbed repose,

Of emptiness and all that is intangible.
And as I look into vacuity there comes
Into my goaded mind a question which recurs
Whene'er struck with that superstitious awe that fills
The breast when one is brought to face infinity.
I gaze into the blue, unclouded, pathless vault above!
Can it be true that the departed spirits now
Of those whose material forms on earth
Flooded with warm love the hearts of us poor worldlings,
From the effulgent hights of their elysium,
Look down in pity and in loving tenderness
Upon the toiling, careworn tenants of the earth?
O spirit of the unknown heavens, is it true
That the graves and sepulchers are only trophies of
The airy spirits that hav burst the vision gate,
And only work ruin of the carnal clay?
O ruler of the never-setting sun of time,
Creator of the greater and the lesser worlds,
I, thy poor creature, at thy altar bow,
And with submissiv but with longing lips do cry
To thee, This single mystery reveal to me:
Is there immortality for mankind?"

A Friendly Word to Ray D. Chapman.

The little telltale tells of an episode where laborers (first slaves and then free citizens) were capital in business. As a laborer is not capital unless he labors, I preferred to use the individualization of the action as substitute for the individual, a method sanctioned for a long time past by distinguished authors on two continents, with a full and correct perception of what they speak of, and when, indeed, not in want of instruction on the part of my illustrious corrector.

Permit me to utilize the occasion for expressing a practical view in the premises, for I am a man of labor practice. When Socialists cease to find confusion in every human brain but their own; when they cease to quarrel about words and interpretations; when they become more tolerant than dogmatic sectarians are; when they consider with a good will before they judge as doctrinaires; when they begin to see life and society as they are, and not as bad blood colors them—then, and only then, the people can be made to understand that Socialists are of any practical use to them in solving the problem of labor and capital. Religious Intelligence.

What is Going On in the Churches.

WHAT IS THE MEANING OF "UNPASTORAL?"

The African Methodist Episcopal Conference is going to inquire into the circumstances of Bishop Hill for "unpastoral" conduct, which resulted in his deposition. The ex-bishop claims to be the victim of injustice.

A BLIND MONSTER.

Lizzie Dalton, of Philadelphia, Tenn., who was enticed away by her unnatural uncle, Fletcher Lowery, a blind preacher, has been sent to her home by the city authorities. He succeeded in swindling her out of all her inheritance by false promises, and then left her on the cold charities of the world, penniless and friendless.

"LETTER GENUIN, MAN A FRAUD."

Rev. F. Von Bodenfeld, a book canvasser for W. H. Stelle Co., of New York, recently sold books to A. S. Dealey and Rev. John Gordon, but is said after collection to hav failed to deliver. He exhibited pastoral letters recommending him as worthy of patronage. Among these was one from the bishop of New Jersey. After signing the subscription Mr. Dealey sent a postal card to the bishop and received the following telegram in reply: "Letter genuin. Man a fraud. He swindled many here. Arrest him." Bodenfeld was arrested May 10th.

THE MARKET PRICE OF CONTEMPT.

The Salvation Army leaders—Captain Robert Graham and Captain "Happy Mattie"—who were arrested in Port Richmond, Staten Island, on Sunday, May 18th, charged with noisy conduct on one of the main thoroughfares of the village, thereby frightening the passing horses and endangering the occupants of carriages, were arraigned before Justice Hulsebus on Monday evening. Counsellor Calvin Van Name apologized for their conduct. The court dismissed the accused on the charge of violating the village ordinances, but fined them $5 for contempt of court.

"SUFFER LITTLE CHILDREN," ETCETERA.

The Rev. James E. Irvine and his wife Mary were arrested in Newark lately, on indictments charging them with assault and battery. Their home in Woodside, as the northern part of Newark is called, was known as the Faith Orphanage. Two of the young inmates, Frank Redding, aged 12, and Harry Redding, aged 9, ran away during the last week in March, and on being arrested accused Mrs. Irvine of treating them cruelly. Their story was corroborated, and Mr. Redding, the father of the lads, was allowed to take them to his home in Camden. The case was presented to the grand jury, and indictments against Mr. Irvine and his wife were found. The accused were held in $500 each.

A LIBELOUS BISHOP.

The judgment for over $10,000 obtained by the Rev. Samuel D. Hinman in a suit against Wm. H. Hare, Protestan Episcopal missionary bishop of Niobrara, for libel, has been affirmed on appeal by the General Term of the Supreme Court. Mr. Hinman, who has been for many years a missionary to the Indians in Minnesota and Dakota, was removed by Bishop Hare in 1879. He made a memorial to the General Board of Missions. It was not considered by the Board, and he published it. Bishop Hare in reply published and circulated among the clergy and bishops of the church a statement by which he sought to vindicate himself. He detailed at length the scandalous reports that had been brought to his attention affecting Mr. Hinman's moral character.

FUNDS UNACCOUNTED FOR.

The Rev. Hannibal Godwin, rector of an Episcopal church in Newark, N. J., is the defendant in a suit instituted in the Brooklyn Supreme Court by his cousin, Demas Barnes, to recover $2,000 alleged to hav been advanced to the Hogatype Company at the request of the defendant. Barnes and Godwin are cousins, and hav been lifelong friends. Dr. Godwin owned a process for reproducing plates, and with Barnes formed a stock company, which turned out disastrously, and he wants to get back his money. Dr. Godwin says the money was not advanced by Barnes, but that he (Godwin) deposited with Barnes some $6,000 or $7,000, and that Barnes is indebted to him for a considerable sum.

THE RESULT OF EXCESSIV ACTIVITY.

The Ottumwa daily Democrat of April 22d says: We regret to announce the insanity of Leon Monett, a well-known and highly respected young man of this city. His aberration of mind assumes the form of religious frenzy. This is thought to be the result of too activ participation in the revival meettings held in the city last winter, at which he was a constant attendant and zealous worker. He formerly came to this city from Keosauqua, accepting a position with Morrell & Co., but subsequently occupying the position of bookkeeper for W. A. Jordan & Sons. While at Keosauqua, several days since, he manifested signs of mental aberration, and becoming violent he was yesterday brought to this city, and taken to the asylum at Mt. Pleasant. Another supposed cause which contributed to his present condition is the loss of an only child during the winter. It required the united efforts of three men to handle him while at the depot yesterday.

AN INCOMPATIBLE COUPLE.

The Rev. Samuel Goldstein, of 237 East Broadway, says he was once a colporteur for the American Bible Society at Constantinople, and has lately been a missionary for the American Tract Society in this city. His wife accused him at Essex Market of assault. She said that while she was sewing in the parlor, her husband punched her repeatedly in the right side with his thumb, and then used language to her which made her cry. Their daughter, Elinor, a tall young woman, testified that her father was continually whipping her mother. Miss Elinor added that he whipped her, too, occasionally. Mr. Goldstein testified that he was forced to leave Constantinople on account of his wife's ungovernable temper. She was getting him into hot water there nearly every day. One day she destroyed documents presented to him by the czar of Russia, which he valued at $15,000. She promised amendment when leaving Constantinople, and for a time had improved. Lately she had again became violent, and put him to all sorts of annoyances. He poked her once in the side.

FELONS PROVIDED WITH UNDESIRABLE COMPANY.

The Sedalia Democrat is affected thus: "That was really a pathetic scene at the depot yesterday when Mrs. Haley bid good-bye to her husband, who was going to Kansas City to answer to the charge of a heinous crime. Only two months ago she was happy in the sunlight of a maiden's joy, young and merry, yet pure in heart. The man, who is now her husband, in the livery of heaven, preaching the gospel, teaching piety, morality, and virtue. In his robes of Christianity he wooed and won the heart of his young wife. She listened to his words, and accepted his proposal. She was young, pure, and innocent; she believed he was true and good. She was happy, but in her suitor she saw a new heaven of joy and happiness. She loved him and accepted him for her husband. But that fount of joy has become one of anguish. The happy, exultant bride is now a weeping, heartbroken woman. To her the world is dark and sad; life is dreary; disappointment and sorrow is her companion. He whom she loved and honored, and whom she looked on as a model husband, and in whom she gloried as a man of God, is now among felons in a felon's cell."

TWO WIVES AND PRUSSIC ACID.

Dr. R. H. Williamson, pastor of the First Baptist church of Chillicothe, Livingston county, Mo., committed suicide at that place on Monday night, the 19th ult. Mr. Williamson located in Moberly, Mo., a little over two years ago, where he was a great favorit. Less than a year ago he was transferred to Chillicothe. On Monday evening three deacons of the church of which he was pastor called on him and after a few preliminary remarks told him they had heard that he had a wife and family in the East. The pastor made no attempt to deny the charge, but asked for time to think the matter over. He said he had made an unfortunate marriage, and that his wife had deserted him, but before marrying again he had heard that she was dead. He was informed that news had been received to the effect that she was living in New York state, and that the probabilities were that the Grand Jury of Livingston county would indict him for bigamy. He begged for time, saying he could make things straight. The deacons retired, and Mr. Williams went out for a walk. Not returning, search was instituted, and he was found dead, with a vial labeled prussic acid by his side. His wife says she is unable to throw any light on the affair. She thought him to be a widower, and only knows that his first wife's home was in New York state somewhere.

LOOKING OUT FOR HIS FRIENDS AND THEN SKIPPING.

Adam Brabander, of Erie, Pa., better known as the Erie County Savings Bank, left the city on the night of May 21st. His shop closed its doors next day. The liabilities are reported at $360,000. The assets are not known. The shop had something called a capital stock described as $150,000, of which $15,000 had been put up to begin business on. Brabander is said to hav lost heavily in oil and wheat. Prior to his departure he took several thousand dollars out of the safe, and applied it to the claims of several relativs. The cashier remains and is not suspected of complicity in the failure. Brabander was an elder in one of the leading churches, and a Sunday-school superintendent. Runs were precipitated upon two other savings banks, but were successfully met and the business not interfered with. Brabander told his family that he was afraid to meet the depositors, and must leave the city. On Saturday evening, when the cashier and clerks left the shop, they left Brabander there. He did not set the time combination in the safe for Monday morning, as was his custom, and when Clerk Traut came to light up on Sunday he found the safe open, and $7,000 which had been left in the shop for Monday morning's business gone. In its place were the papers of Brabander's church trustees, and of his friends whom he had notified on Saturday night of the condition of affairs. This indicated that Brabander had been doing a midnight business with his friends. Brabander's standing was such that his shop was a favorit depository for trust estates.

A CHURCH QUARREL—NOTHING MORE.

The staid old Dutch Reformed church-members of Southern Ulster, N. Y., are being split into factions over the discovery that some of the members of the community hav been dancing at a sociable. Plattekill, in the town of Saugerties, has two churches, employing a common pastor. Some years ago Mr. S. T. Cole was the pastor, and under his ministrations everything prospered until a series of sociables began. They at first consisted simply of sitting in the corner and chatting with the girls, but one evening when meeting at a house where there was a piano the younger portion indulged in dancing, and at the next one even went so far as to hire a wicked fiddler, and some even say (although there is no means of verifying the statement) that liquors were drank. This aroused the consistory, who instructed Mr. Cole not to giv notice of the next sociable, and to preach a denunciatory sermon concerning them, which he accordingly did. This course so incensed the member at whose house the sociable was to be held that he, his family and three other families with whom he was closely allied by their influence made it so unpleasant that Mr. Cole resigned his position. Subsequently Mr. Cole was called to officiate at a funeral and was then tendered the pastorship, again. He accepted in the face of considerable opposition, and entered upon his duties. Finding that they had failed in this, the objectors next sent to the Classis of Ulster county, asking them to disapprove the call, which the Classis did by a vote of fourteen to three. The majority hav sent to Mr. Cole, asking him to come and occupy the parsonage end act as a "stated supply" for one year, which he can do independently of the action of the Classis. As a consequence the church is in a ferment.

TREASURES LAID UP, BUT NOT IN THE SCRIPTURAL WAY.

The completion of arrangements for the purchase of Father Taylor's Bethel on Hanover street, Boston, to be used as an exclusivly Italian church, has brought to light a curious, if not criminal, state of affairs in connection with the subscriptions for and purchase of an Italian church some years ago. Land and a small brick building were bought, the intention being for the building to serve a few years until such time as sufficient money could be raised to replace it with a more imposing edifice. Father Joachin, of the Franciscan Order, to whom the property was assigned, was made pastor of the church, and during several years sums aggregating $30,000 passed into his hands for the erection of a new church. Father Joachin continually represented that the finances were in a flourishing condition, but would giv no specific information concerning them. The parishioners subsequently learned that there were no funds; that even the church they then occupied had been mortgaged by Father Joachin for $10,000, and that he had borrowed $10,000 from members of the congregation, many of them loaning him their all. One of the creditors finally asked Father Joachin for his money, and began civil suit against him. Father Joachin gave bonds, mortgaged his library and household furniture for $4,000, and then suddenly went to Europe. The congregation afterward learned that on reaching Europe he had left the priesthood, built a costly residence in Toscana, Italy, and was living in regal elegance. The church property was in the name of the Franciscan Order, and the congregation could get no satisfaction. Father Boniface succeeded Father Joachin, and appeared to adopt the same tactics. Considerable money was turned over to him. but he paid nothing, not even interest on the $10,000 mortgage. Father Boniface is also charged with having adopted. when the parishioners would giv no more money, an un-Christian-like and brutal course toward them, refusing the last sacraments to those too poor to pay for them, and extorting considerable sums from those who could pay. The Italians hav now broken away from their pastor and organized a new society, which will come under control of the archbishop of the diocese.

THE COLORED TROOPS FIGHT NOBLY.

We acquire the following from the St. Louis Republican: Yesterday afternoon several colored gentlemen called at the Third district police station and asked for the loan of two of the stoutest and bravest policemen on the force. They said they were paticularly desirous that the officers should be brave and muscular, as the congregation they represented, the Pleasant Green Colored Baptist Church, intended to try one of their elders for bigamy. The trial promised to be very exciting, and it was likely to end in a rough-and-tumble fight. It was not their intention to "fire" the deacon bodily from the church, but they intended to hav him confronted in a public manner in the presence of the congregation by his several wives. The brother of one of the wives was to be on hand, and the deacons, elders, the treasurer, the minister and his entire flock had signified their intention to be on hand and see fair play. All the arrangements having been completed, the trial of Elder Royal, one of the high officials of the Pleasant Green church, accordingly took place in the sanctuary of the congregation, on Ninth near Biddle street, last night. One police officer stationed himself near the door and the other near the pulpit, which was occupied by the pastor of the church, the Rev. Thomas Jefferson. Many violent speeches were made, and much testimony was heard. For a time the proceedings were very stormy. While all the members were trying to obtain the floor, Elder Royal. unobserved, escaped through the front door. Mrs. Elder Royal No. 2, nee Miss Brookes, testified that she married the defendant in Louisiana seven years ago. She could not state the exact year, but she knew it was at the time Hayes was running for the presidency. He abandoned her at Carondelet about two years ago. She had a blank marriage license. upon which his signature and her own had been written. The original license she said she had lost. After she had made her statement the wildest excitement prevailed, as the discovery was then made that Elder Royal had mysteriously disappeared. Some maintained that it was wrong to continue the trial in the absence of the defendant, while others claimed it was his own fault if he failed to return in time to make a speech in his own defense. At this point an old female member of the congregation sprang to the floor and declared she knew the defendant had another wife who lived in an alley near Fifteenth street. This was vehemently denied, whereupon another member took the floor and said she had seen the marriage license of his alley wife. Finally it was suggested that the best thing the congregation could do would be to "fire" Elder Royal from his proud position. It was quite clear that a man could not expect to be an elder in the Pleasant Green colored church and hav a plurality of wives. The female members were in favor of allowing Mr. Royal to hold his office, notwithstanding the evidence that had been adduced against him. All the men voted to depose the elder, and as they were numerically stronger than the women, the unfortunate official was hurled from his pedestal and expelled from the church. Thus ended the trial, which it was feared would result in a general affray.

An Important Meeting.

The 342d meeting of the Manhattan Liberal Club held special services in honor of Decoration Day under the name of "The New Festival of the Dead." The hall was filled. Mr. Samuel P. Putnam presided, and opened the proceedings with a neat speech, followed by Miss Stivers with a piano solo. This was succeeded by Mr. Houghton and Mrs. McCune in a duet song. Mr. Putnam then read a poem on "Decoration Day," and Mrs. McCune sang. The first address was by T. B. Wakeman on "The Dead Past Not Dead." A solo by Mr. Houghton was supplemented with a speech by Andrew H. H. Dawson, his subject being "The Living Present." Courtlandt Palmer read his poem, "The New-Born Soul," and Mr. Stephen Pearl Andrews delivered an address on "The Ideal Future." "Home, Sweet Home," sung by Miss Adelina Peters, closed the services. The hall was tastefully decorated by the ladies of the committee, Mrs. Leonard and Mrs. Macdonald.

This meeting marks, in a degree, a new departure in Liberal gatherings, and shows how the cause may be brought to public attention by popular and at the same time appropriate means. The speeches were able and important. We expect to lay them before our readers in an early issue.

The next meeting in the hall is called for Friday evening, June 13th, in honor of the completion of the Bennett Monument. On this occasion the monument will be formally dedicated and presented to the contributors to its erection, and to the Liberals of this republic and of the world, to hold and keep in their care forever. Those who were with Mr. Bennett from the first, and those consequently who knew him best and admired him most, will deliver the dedicatory addresses. Let the date and place of the meeting be remembered by those who wish to attend, as they will be remembered long after—German Masonic Temple, 220 East Fifteenth street, New York, June 13, 1884.

The Bible Ordered Out of New York's Schools.

The state superintendent of public instruction of New York has rendered a very important decision in favor of Liberal ideas. The decision affects every school district in the state, and if obeyed will work a revolution in the existing order of things. We regret, however, that the grounds upon which Mr. Ruggles bases his order are sectarian and not political.

The order was provoked by the Board of Education of District No. 4 in Orangetown, Rockland county, which wrote that members of Catholic families applied for permission to allow their children to remain outside the schoolroom until after the devotional exercises each morning. The district superintendent says the Catholic children had been asked merely to behave during these exercises, and were not asked to take any part in them. He says that to grant the appeal of their parents causes disorder outside the schoolroom, and disturbance and loss of time when the Catholic children enter the room.

Upon this statement State Superintendent Ruggles decides that under our law all are equal in respect to the free exercise and enjoyment of the religious profession and worship; instruction is free, and the cost is defrayed by a population characterized by dissimilar religious beliefs and modes of worship. He adds:

"If it were possible to devise some limited measure of religious instruction for adoption in the schools, upon which all these diverse classes and sects could harmonize, it would be a gratifying result. But this is manifestly impracticable and impossible. The only alternativ, therefore, to preserve the benefits of the constitutional guarantees, in letter and in spirit, and to secure to all absolute equality of right in the matter of religious predilection, must be, however reluctantly the conclusion is arrived at, to exclude religious instruction and exercises from the public schools during school hours."

This is no new doctrin the state superintendent has enunciated. In 1838 John A. Dix issued an order going a short way in this direction. He held that a teacher might open school with prayer, but must not encroach on the school hours, or exact the attendance of the children. The next year his successor, John C. Spencer, held that "prayers cannot form any part of the school exercises or be regulated by the school disciplin." Mr. Ruggles says: "The principles laid down in these early decisions hav been followed by every one of my predecessors in office, no distinction having been made between scripture reading and prayers, but each having been held, in separate and distinct appeals, to constitute no legitimate part of the business of the public schools. They will be my guide and govern my action in all cases of like nature which may come before me."

We presume that no more attention will be paid to Mr. Ruggles's decision than was paid to his two predecessors' orders. Christians are such arrogant overriders of other people's rights, such insolent assumers of prerogativs clearly illegal, so self-complacent with the idea that the earth is God's and they his agents, that we cannot expect to see the state superintendent's instructions to teachers carried out without a legal contest in almost every school district.

A Connecticut Statute.

From a worker in the Nutmeg state comes this letter:

"GLENVILLE, CONN., May 21, 1884.

"TO THE EDITOR OF THE TRUTH SEEKER, Sir: Can you inform me if by legislativ action the reading of the Bible has been discontinued in any of the states in public schools? Also in which?

"We are to hold a school meeting here soon, and I propose to hav put to vote, yes or no, whether the Bible shall be read or not. If I argue in favor of having it discontinued, and in the course of my remarks should deny belief in it or the trinity, or any part of them, would I render myself liable to any action under Title 20, Chap. viii, Sec. 1, of this state's statutes, viz., 'Every person who shall blaspheme against God, either of the persons of the holy trinity, the Christian religion, or the holy scriptures, shall be fined not more than $100,' etc.? Would you advise running the risk, or submit the vote without argument? Yours truly, H. J. M."

A few Western towns hav, we believe, discarded the use of the Bible in the schools, among them the city of Cleveland, but the names hav slipped our mind. Will not friends residing in any place in which the school authorities hav forbidden the reading of the Bible write us stating how and when it was accomplished? The information would be valuable in cases of this kind.

The advice we should giv as to the desirability of of arguing the question in the school-board would be to go ahead. Connecticut is a pretty pious place, and its ancient history is badly tarnished by the accounts of Christian persecutions of witches and worldly-minded people, but it is inconceivable that its medieval brutality has survived to this day. The statute is one we think even a Leonard Bacon would consider to be more honored in the breach than in the observance. In the last century a court might hav construed a denial of Christianity into blasphemy, but not in this century, so full of heresy and religious bond breaking.

Why not ask the next Connecticut legislature to repeal this relic of barbaric Christianity?

The Difficulties in the Way of Freethinkers.

The charge is often made by dishonest clergymen against Col. Ingersoll that he lectures for popularity. To be sure, as he says, the size of his audiences givs color to the mild accusation, but other people find it different. The following letter will giv a clear idea of the struggles Freethinkers hav to undergo. For obvious reasons we suppress names, only saying that it is from a town in Pennsylvania:

EDITOR TRUTH SEEKER, Dear Sir: I hav acted almost too quick in sending off that petition with these names—not because I could hav gotten more names, though this might not be utterly impossible, but because some of the names represent parties who dare not be connected with a thing like that. The fourth name from above and the last name should, if at all possible, be destroyed from the paper. I presume the paper is yet in your hands and beg leave to entreat you to destroy these two names. —— —— belongs to the order of the Odd Fellows. When he signed he neither thought of the inconsistency of the act, though he is a Freethinker in theory, nor had he told me of his being bound by an oath not to sign anything of the kind. Shortly after I had gotten up the names a terrible commotion made itself felt, as well through the town itself as over the surroundings, as some fanatics had circulated that there was a petition filed and submitted by that Infidel who was about to tear away all churches and destroy all religion, burn the Bibles, and murder the priests, slay the Christians, etc., which immense monstra et prodigia were readily believed, and the factory rabble and the peasants both uttered that I should be shot, and some threatened to tar and feather me. One of the signers had been frightened and undoubtedly gave himself away. Others and their houses were almost stormed by the impetuous questioners and enraged fanatics who were afraid to hav their religion taken away which they love so well.

"This commotion could not be much assuaged by a large six-page explanation of the eight points in question which I issued in two copies, and which were read by some intelligent citizens to crowds on the sidewalks and in the stores; but the most did not, and others would not, understand; nevertheless, it confirmed the few friends of mine in their belief in my benevolent and philanthropic endeavors. The last name is that of a storekeeper, a new beginner, whom the others want to beat out of town or spoil his business by circulating that he signed a petition against the church. Fanaticism and greediness admit of no reasonable explanation—by all means they intend to hav him out. He is a good-hearted, Freethinking man, and will do more for Freethought, if once independent, than his signature could avail to. At any rate, if it is yet possible, destroy these two names; the others do not care, they even say they would sign it a dozen times. This is, on a small scale, a time for this little spot of earth 'that tries men's souls;' this is an occasion to stir up the stagnant waters of religious stupor and indifference. I had received a warning to leave town shortly before I departed, and if I did not intend to liv among civilized people, I would not hav left from fear of being lynched, but from prudenee and not to be compelled to do something hurtful in defending myself, hurtful, perhaps to myself and the cause of Freethought. Oblige, therefore, and await further more explicit narration."

A Common-Sense Decision.

The different marriage laws prevailing in the various states hav given rise to much difficulty in the courts, and been the text for many lurid sermons from priests who wish, from a business point of view, to control the ceremony. By giving it a flavor of "divinity," they are enabled to keep the people in more or less subjection, to the great advantage of their individual pockets and the glory of the clan.

A recent decision of the United States Circuit Court for Rhode Island will upset this attempt of the priests, and remove the cause of judicial complaint at the diversity of state regulations. The decision is that in spite of its contrariety to the statutes of the state in which it may be contracted, a marriage by agreement in the presence of witnesses, and attested in writing, is valid and will been forced by the United States courts.

This simplifies the question of marriage a great deal. Marriage is a purely civil transaction, has nothing divine about it, and only needs the legal protection accorded to any two contracting parties of legal age and common understanding of the obligations involved.

If this decision shall be generally adopted by the courts, the necessity for a United States law is done away with, and the Constitution spared another wrench.

Editorial Notes.

"A BASS drum," said Mr. Beecher last Sunday, "is simply sheepskin over nothing. There is plenty of bass drums in the pulpit."

A HAZELHURST, Miss., jury united in prayer on retiring to the jury room, and then acquitted a murderer, of whose guilt there was no doubt, as the killing grew out of politics.

IN tearing down a portion of the Washington Hotel at Bordentown, N. J., May 30th, a violin with the name "Thomas Paine" branded on it was found in the attic. Paine did considerable of his writing in this old inn.

COL. OLCOTT and Madam Blavatsky are said to be rousing Paris and London with their theosophy. The madam alleges that the colonel has performed several hundred miracles within the past few months. "Lord, how this world is given to lying!"

ROMAN Catholic Bishop Hendriken, of Providence, has issued a rattling order that may reach beyond the confines of his limited diocese. He absolutely forbids church fairs or excursions, picnics, festivals, and what not for ostensible religious purposes. He is much more "moral" than his brethren in Canada, who are the only authorized lottery conductors in the Dominion.

WALT WHITMAN attained his sixty-fifth birthday on the 31st ult. There was no formal celebration of the event, and he says he simply called up the happy memories of happier events to keep him company. He resides in an unpretentious cottage in Camden, N. J., and is a half paralytic. His brain is, however, clear, and he is proud of the fact that he retains his "poetic" fancies to the last.

E. H. HEYWOOD writes that the indictment against him is "disabled." H. L. Nelson, Esq., son of Judge Nelson, volunteered to argue the motion to quash, and did it so effectivly that the government "paused." Judge Pitman, whom Mr. Heywood found unexpectedly Liberal and sensible, reserves his decision, and the case goes over for this term. It is probable the indictment will finally be quashed, but if tried before Judge Pitman, Mr. Heywood says he "should hav beaten them anyway."

MR. BRADLAUGH'S trial at the bar for illegally voting in Parliament on the question of his own admission is fixed for Friday, June 13th. Mr. Bradlaugh is kept very busy with his legal entanglements, and declines two enticing lecturing invitations that hav reached him from Wisconsin, and from Chicago, Ill. There is not much prospect, he says, of his crossing the Atlantic this season, though the journey would be to him both pleasant and profitable.

MR. TUCKER'S Liberty tells the story that when that paper was first started the editor received a very appreciativ letter from Nantucket, the writer expressing his unqualified approval of the political and social doctrins promulgated by the paper. The letter closed by saying Mr. Tucker did not need to know the writer's name, and inclosed a dollar for subscription, to be sent to a post-office box. It now transpires that the letter was from no less a man than the late Charles O'Conor.

THE services at the funeral of Julius R. Meyer, a member of the Ethical Society, of this city, were conducted by Professor Adler. As the friends of the deceased gathered around the coffin Mr. Adler said: "There was a vein of pure gold at the bottom of the heart of the deceased. At the time when the manners and morals of the business community were not of the purest, he was a rising exemplar. He had the courage to stand by the flag of those ideas he honored. He was also one of the most cordial supporters of antislavery before and during the war. These are qualities that shine like jewels from out of the darkness of the tomb. I am here in the name of you all to pronounce the last words of farewell." After addressing a few words of comfort to the bereaved family, Professor Adler concluded by saying, "And now, friends, I say the last word, a long, sweet good-night."

THE Rev. Henry Ward Beecher seems to hav created a sensation among the orthodox clergymen of Buffalo by his recent lecture there on the subject of "Evolution and Revolution." One prominent Presbyterian minister is reported as saying: "I think many of Mr. Beecher's statements were scandalous as coming from a Christian minister. I think they were worse even than Ingersoll's. I hav always felt well disposed towards Mr. Beecher, and sympathized with him through his late troubles, but with what he said here on Tuesday I felt very much pained and shocked. I was ashamed of myself for being among the audience. He said many violent and bitter things which cannot hav other than pernicious effect. I don't say that there may not be something to be said on evolution, but no minister of the gospel has a right to get up and place himself in such direct antagonism to the Bible as he did."

THIS week we again surrender a portion of our space to printing the church news omitted from other religious papers. As the season of ministerial vacations is approaching, it is hoped that the amusements indulged in by prominent lights of the church may be of that innocent variety not necessary to be recorded in these columns. It is of course with more pain than exultation that THE TRUTH SEEKER is called upon to lay before its readers these accounts of aberrant Christians. We would fain leave this unpleasant task to the Advocate and the Independent; but these papers hav up to the present time been remiss in their duty. They hav not come to the front in this matter so promptly as we might be led to expect they would by their frantic efforts to fasten crime upon Infidels, or rather to fasten Infidelity upon those who hav committed crimes. We trust they will see the pointedness of this rebuke and act accordingly.

WHEN the Catholic Union has occasion to refer to THE TRUTH SEEKER it generally speaks of us as "vile." One of our correspondents, formerly a Catholic, who in the Friendly columns of May 24th spoke not very flatteringly of Father Lambert's "Notes on Ingersoll," is described by this eminently Christian paper as an "idiot who loves to pose as a learned Infidel." Now we would remind the Catholic Union that it has taken upon itself the difficult task of clearing from guilt the character of Brother Frank, a prominent and activ—rather too activ—Catholic, who has been convicted, by due process of law, of ravishing a child. With such a burden as this upon his shoulders, we would further admonish the editor of the Catholic Union that he has "bitten off all he can chew," and is in no condition to knock the chip off the shoulder of an able-bodied writer like our correspondent from San Bernardino. When he has persuaded the governor of this state that rape is not a crime when committed by a Catholic priest, he may feel himself better fitted for the task of convincing the world that every man is an idiot who does not believe in the Roman Catholic mummery.

MAY 13th an immense meeting was held in St. James's Hall, London, to agitate for the repeal of the blasphemy laws under which Messrs. Foote, Ramsey, and Kemp were imprisoned. The chairman, of the meeting, in explaining these laws, said that "the bigots had been entirely powerless to touch Mr. Bradlaugh with them, they had only been able to strike Mr. Foote and his co-prisoners. Mr. Bradlaugh proved to be too hard a hitter for them. The bigots tried to fix upon him the publication of another man—a publication with which he had nothing whatever to do. Lord Coleridge described these laws as 'ferocious.' Justice Stephen described them as naked persecution. Where eminent judges differed it would be presumptuous on his part to express an opinion. We hav met to-night to help an association to obtain the removal of these laws, and I am glad that we hav expressions of sympathy with our cause from many clergymen. Under the Indian Criminal Code men could not be imprisoned for blasphemy. England should not lag behind India in this matter. England should be trusted with a similar measure of religious liberty. To remove that stigma is the object of our association." Several clergymen were present and spoke at the meeting in favor of repeal.

AFTER describing the monument erected in Greenwood by the Liberals and quoting the inscriptions thereon, the Philosophic Inquirer, of Madras, India, closes: "Truly, the object of our lives, considered in a purely ethical point of view, should be as what the dead hero dictated as above; and it is perhaps the best unselfish object of man imaginable and practicable on earth. The utterer of these noble words lived true to his maxim in word and in deed. Mr. Bennett's honest belief in a continued individual existence is a belief held and shared in by some of the greatest and sublimest intellects of the East and the West—a belief generally adhered to and sanctioned by the generality of mankind. The belief is merely a hankering of the human heart, a longing of the emotional part of human nature. Whether demonstrable by science or not—if it could admit of demonstration at all—the belief in a continued existence is a harmless one—this is our opinion. We close this piece with a thousand thanks to each of the one thousand friends who in grateful recognition of the grand services rendered to man in general, and to the Freethought world in particular, by our much lamented friend and brother, erected the monument to speak out his name and fame for generations and generations to come. Dear Bennett!"

JOHN SWINTON, in his paper last week, copied the following from the Liberal Club report in THE TRUTH SEEKER, and credited it to Dr. Foote.

"Intellectual superiority has no more right to get the better of an inferior in its kind of power than physical superiority in its kind. The time was when the strong man, physically, ruled merely because he was strong. That time has passed. Now the intellectual man, the cunning man, rules simply because he is most cunning, and law and custom back him up. This mere cunning, however, must be stripped of its power, and the keen head shall hav no more power to tyrannize than the strong arm."

In quoting this sentiment, which is a good and philosophical one, Mr. Swinton committed a number of oversights. In the first place, he omitted to mention that Dr. Foote was merely calling attention to an idea advanced by Mr. Andrews, to whom, by the way, the members of the club are indebted for a good many valuable thoughts. In the second place, the Liberal Club is not mentioned by Mr. Swinton. Again, no credit is given THE TRUTH SEEKER for conveying to Mr. Swinton the proceedings of the club. Mr. Swinton is an old journalist, and understands, if he does not practice, the amenities of journalism. He knows, or ought to know, that he draws his subsistence largely from the ranks of the Freethinkers. His best correspondents are those who hav made their names familiar to the public through the Freethought press. He has no reason to be afraid of giving credit where credit is due, although the act involves the printing of the names of Stephen Pearl Andrews and this paper.

IT will be remembered that when Mr. Foote of the London Freethinker was sent to prison over a year ago, J. M. Wheeler, a dear personal friend, was announced as interim editor, but becoming sick, was superseded by Dr. E. B. Aveling. Mr. Wheeler recovered fully, it was thought, but he has since gone crazy, and was on Sunday, May 11th, taken to a private asylum for treatment. Mr. Wheeler's insanity is owing entirely to the prosecution of the Freethinker and Mr. Foote's imprisonment. "When I saw him the last time for months in the Old Bailey, after Judge North's atrocious sentence on me," says Mr. Foote, "he was huddled up on the floor, in a convulsion of grief; and friends who saw him the same evening say that his mind was clearly unhinged. The bigots had flung their bolts; their stronger victims were only bruised, but the gentler was pierced and overthrown. His insane chatterings furnish the key to his madness. At one minute he talks about Lord Coleridge, and says, 'A fine judgment, my lord;' the next, he cries out, 'There goes old Judge North, off with his wig boys, kick it about.' Sometimes he calls out the words 'George William Foote,' with which Judge North commenced his little sermon to me in the dock. As we were carrying him down the stairs he shouted out, 'George William Foote, you know the agony and bloody sweat I've had for you,' and then, 'Damn old North.'" Mr. Foote adds: "Yes, my dear old comrade, I know it right well, and I am not likely to forget it. I too can curse, not 'old North,' for I despise him too much, but the damnable creed which gave that paltry creature the power to wreck a life like yours." Mr. Wheeler's young wife is being cared for by the Freethought organizations.

COL. INGERSOLL was found by a World reporter last Saturday at the Fifth Avenue Hotel, as he was preparing for his departure for Washington. The colonel was asked: "Are you going to Chicago?" "I don't know. I do not take as much interest as formerly. The matter is getting too personal. The person is the platform. The old issues that made the party sublime hav been almost settled, and the pioneers are getting tired. The Supreme Court abandoned the colored citizens of the South, and turned the 'wards of the nation' over to the tender mercy of cruel negligence of the states. Both parties are divided about the tariff, and there seems to be a general desire to suit all sides. If we can nominate a real Republican at Chicago, one really in favor of protecting citizens at home—one who believes in the Thirteenth and Fourteenth amendments, and is in favor of a tariff for revenue and reasonable protection, then we will hav an enthusiastic and successful campaign, otherwise it will be simply a scramble for office." "Who are you for?" "I believe Gresham is the man who ought to be nominated. He is a real Republican. He was a brave soldier, an honest and learned judge, and he has administered the post-office department with signal ability. He is simple in his habits, fair and honorable in his methods, and would giv the country a real, sound, honest administration. I do not believe a better man can be found. He comes from the right state and from the right part of the country. I am saying nothing against the others, but I believe Gresham to be the best man under the circumstances." "Were you arrested in Philadelphia?" "No. That was all talk. I do not believe the ministers want me punished here. As I am going to a place of eternal torment that ought to satisfy them." "Who will the Democrats nominate?" "Tilden, I think."

AT the late blasphemy demonstration in St. James's Hall, London, Mr. Moncure D. Conway told two stories which admirably illustrate, says Mr. Foote, the laws under which he and his friends were sent to jail. The first story shows what the Christians really mean by their claim to punish those who outrage the religious feelings of the community. Out in Ceylon some Buddhist priests—able, earnest, and gentlemanly men, who are bound to be poor by the vow of their order—started a little paper to oppose the Christian missionaries. They wrote in a very mild, not to say timid, manner; and they chiefly tried to show, by quotations from our leading writers, that Christianity was dying out in Europe while the ideas of Buddhism were spreading rapidly. The missionaries grew alarmed and applied to the authorities for aid. Thereupon the English government swooped down upon these poor Buddhist priests, who were striving to defend the religion of their nativ land against intruders who tried to bring it into "disbelief and contempt," and told them that unless they discontinued their little paper they would be prosecuted for blasphemy. Mr. Conway found these Buddhist priests in a state of trepidation; they had only published one number, and after the warning they had received they were afraid to publish a second. This is the infamous creed which chatters at home about its poor feelings. When it goes abroad, with a government to back it, it plays the bully on every side. The other story was quite as interesting. Mr. Conway addressed some nativ students at Madras, and referred in laudatory terms to the freedom with which speculativ beliefs are discussed among the English. When his speech was over one of the young Hindoos got up and said, "Yes, what you say about your liberty in England is very fine, but how about Mr. Foote?" Mr. Conway said that he never felt so disconcerted in his life. "My beautiful balloon," he added, "was punctured and emptied by that young student's question—'How about Mr. Foote?'"

LLOYD L. MAJORS, who was hanged at Oakland, Cal., May 23d, left the following statement as to his religious ideas:

"I want to say in regard to religion that I consider the Bible and the holy spirit the only rules of conduct for man in this life, and that my faith is the faith of the established orthodox church. With regard to Spiritualism, I wish to say since an attempt has been made by the Spiritualists of Oakland to discover my faith in their system, I therefore state that I believe it to be the most pernicious doctrin taught to-day. And I do not wish to hav any medium at any time in the future to presume that he could communicate with my spirit, or connect it with any such system. I hav no animosity against the parties believing in Spiritualism; it is the doctrin itself that I hate. I hav had some intimation that a medical institution would seek to obtain possession of my body after its burial. In view of the poor health of my wife, as well as for the sake of the commonest decency and charity, I trust that no such attempt will be made. Such a proceeding would be most unkind. I shall enter eternity without any fear or without any doubt. My trust is entirely in the master, and I hav had the full assurance of my acceptance. I believe that every man must be born of the water and of the spirit, and then he is in the kingdom of God, and I believe that there is no other name given among men whereby we must be saved, except the name of Christ. My hope is so strong in him that it bridges over all the present trouble, and by the grace of God he has saved me.

"LLOYD L. MAJORS."

Mr. Majors was formerly a Methodist preacher, president of a Young Men's Christian Association, and a Good Templar. The murder for which he was hanged was exceptionally atrocious. His incentiv was the meanest that ever sways mankind—plunder. And he was a coward as well as a murderer and a thief. He had not the nerve to do the deed himself, but he incited two wretches to murder two old men for the sake of the money they were supposed to hav in their cabin. He furnished his assassins with money and arms. He directed the plan of attack. And when the deed was done and the bandits returned to him without the expected plunder, he hastily rode to the cabin and ransacked it for money while one body was still warm on the floor, and the other lying in a field close by. Then he set fire to the cabin, and watched it burn till the body on the floor was charred past recognition. Commenting upon his legal taking off, the San Francisco Chronicle says: "If anything were wanting to complete the measure of public disgust inspired by this miscreant, it would be the record of his last hours. Under the ministrations of an Episcopal minister, he took religion. His last days appear to hav been equally divided between appeals to 'the grace of God' and an inordinate appetite for ham and eggs. He would 'talk to no one but his spiritual adviser,' and to him he unctuously confessed that in his opinion 'the Bible and the holy spirit are the only rules of conduct for man in this life.' He spoke of his coming execution as 'an entrance into eternity without fear and without doubt.' It never occurred to him to think of other entrances into eternity, such as that of the old men he had helped murder, or his little daughter, who died of grief a few weeks ago. His 'hope in the name of Christ' was so strong that, together with abundant dishes of ham and eggs, it 'bridged over all present trouble, and, by the grace of God, had saved' him. There was no penitence mingled with the hope, no remorse, no sorrow for the widow and the children he left behind in want and shame, no pang of agony when he thought of the gray heads he had trampled in blood and dirt—nothing but a selfish hope for himself, based on a lot of theological cant and strengthened by regular supplies of ham and eggs. To many reflecting persons the whole performance will appear simply disgusting and calculated to turn the offices of religion into ridicule. Without intending to embark in religious controversy, it may fairly be questioned whether teachings which so obviously tend to make a theological controversy take the place of all feelings of home, wife, children, and duty will long command the adherence of men of common sense, and whether the revolting mixture of sham piety and real ham and eggs which marked the closing hours of the murderer's life will not suggest the expediency of excluding the clergy hereafter from the prison cells of the condemned."

MR. EDITOR: I see that there is still some lacking for the monument yet, so I will send in my mite if it is not too late. Inclosed find one dollar to apply to that fund. Although I never expect to see the monument, I am anxious it should be completed to help keep guard over the old TRUTH SEEKER, for I should be lost without it. Long may it liv!

MRS. SARAH CLARK.

HANOVERTON, O., May 21, 1884.

MR. EDITOR: Inclosed please find three dollars to pay for THE TRUTH SEEKER another year. I am a natural Infidel. A little over a year ago I first saw Freethought sentiment on paper, when I pulled my feet out of the miry clay and began to tell the truth and talk back to ignorant superstitions and vile persecutors. But I don't hav much talk nowadays, for the bigots are giving me an extensiv letting alone. I bespeak a safe voyage for THE TRUTH SEEKER. I would be sorry to hear of its being lost with John Peck aboard. J. T. JOHNSON.

LUDLOW, ILL., May 19, 1884.

MR. EDITOR: Inclosed please find one dollar for the Bennett Monument Fund. The dear TRUTH SEEKER, always so welcome to us, is welcomed by our little girl and boy now (thanks to Miss Wixon), and the Children's Corner has our attention, for the little ones should be served first. It was a pleasure to hear of Mr. Chainey in last week's paper. He is an admirable man. W. S. Bell is lecturing in Minnesota on his trip through the West. He is one of our best logicians. Wishing you a long and successful life, I remain your friend, MELLIE G. NEWKIRK.

BIG BEND, KANSAS, May 10, 1884.

MR. EDITOR: I send you a new subscriber to-day, one who I think will stay. Rationalism is spreading in this state. I meet many people who express their opinions very freely to-day who would not hav dared to utter them at all a few years ago. Just the other day, a very estimable old gentleman, one who stands high with the people of this county, said to me that he had always had a very great respect for the Bible, but that it had always been the very hardest kind of work for him to believe it. Poverty is our great trouble out here, not having raised much of any crops for the past four years. I could get you many subscribers if the county would produce better. Accept my very best wishes for THE TRUTH SEEKER; may it liv for ever. Yours fraternally, S. M. TRAVIS, M.D.

LOWELLVILLE, OHIO, May 20, 1884.

MR. EDITOR: In reply to Mr. J. Petty in THE TRUTH SEEKER of May 10, 1884, I wish to say that freedom of the will, or free agency, and necessity are not irreconcilable propositions, but harmonious and true. In all that we do, we act from choice, in accordance with the preponderance of motiv or motivs, the preponderance constituting the necessity to act just as we do. But at the same time we act freely, always choosing to do just as we do in accordance with the weight of motiv. And we cannot conceive of free agency at all, only as choosing from motiv or motivs, and the preponderance constitutes the necessity, and free agency cannot exist without it, for without motivs from which to choose there could be no free agency whatever. If Mr Petty goes to New York, he goes impelled by motiv or motivs, and yet goes freely, choosing with all possible freedom, or free agency, to do just as he does. And here we see necessity, and free agency necessarily connected, linked together, and dependent upon each other, and cannot be separated, and both true to nature. WM. WATSON.

MERIDIAN, TEXAS, May 12, 1884.

MR. EDITOR: I hope that every Liberal in the United States will call R. G. Ingersoll and George Chainey to organize on the principles of secularism as formulated in THE TRUTH SEEKER of May 10th. The principles as laid down in that number will, I think, stop the good from having to pay the debts of the bad. It was asked in one number of your paper if there was not some one who could lead the Liberals and organize them into a good working body, and I think you stated that there was one man that could if he would. I hav named him in this communication, and he will work if called and called aright. I think when he is asked he will lead in the reform.

J. D. Shaw has organized a Liberal church at Waco, in this state. Let them formulate a creed or set of articles and send men out to preach. Tell them to go and preach the truth. If I recollect, some hav asked Ingersoll what they should say and how they should say it. We want a head. It may look too much like a church, but we can't help that. Some one must drive. The people are ready and willing.

MR. EDITOR: Having been a teacher so much of my life, and being thoroughly acquainted with the practical advantages of as many letters as sounds, I am often dumbfounded at the idea that an intelligent people will consent to pay, both in money and time, for the perpetuation of an absolute absurdity. I often speak out loud to myself, Why will the people cling to an inconsistency that does them absolutely no good, but a damage at every step in the path to intelligence? And how it is that Liberals, shaking off the shackles of religious superstition, should not also shake off as false, damaging, and barbarous orthography, I cannot see. Briefly, to show its damage to us, I will present a statement. In the New York Tribune, some time ago, I saw statistics saying that in the United States 3,000,000 children begin to go to school every year. Competent teachers in England and America say that on an average two years of time to every student would be saved in the course of his education. Now, suppose we allow ten years for a student's education under this present system, but under the new idea would obtain as much in eight as now in ten years, it would be a saving of 6,000,000 of years to the people, besides the costs of money, wear, and tear of that amount of school time. And after the first eight years it would be that amount every year. Just think what that would do toward improving the intelligence of the nation. But farther, in nearly every state there is a blind asylum, and why should the blind be forced to learn an orthography almost as blind? I am professor of English phonology. Yours, A. B. PIKARD.

MELVIN VILLAGE, N. H., May 19, 1884.

MR. EDITOR: I wish to pay one dollar toward the Monument Fund if I am not too late. I think it a most worthy object. I am one of your new subscribers, and I cannot speak too highly of THE TRUTH SEEKER. It is indeed what its name implies, and I could not do without it. I wish that others of my family could think as I do about it. My husband says that he shall never giv up his God or his Bible. Now, reading the Bible made an Infidel of me. Is it not strange how people differ in their opinions?

There are two churches in this little village, and not to belong to one or the other is to be very unpopular, but I am willing to be unpopular as long as I am true to myself. The people here are all enemies to progress and Freethought, but it is cheering to know that the wheel of progress is moving, and I believe that the time is not very far distant when ignorance and superstition will be vanquished by the light of truth and knowledge. I am the only one who takes THE TRUTH SEEKER at this post-office.

I could not get one to sign this petition. I commenced in my own family first, and was met with only insult and abuse elsewhere. Wishing you and THE TRUTH SEEKER happiness and prosperity, I am Yours truly,

MRS. MARY A. HORNE.

BEAVER CROSSING, NEB., May 8, 1884.

MR. EDITOR: I would like to say a few words in reply to Robert Gunther. In THE TRUTH SEEKER of April 12th, in reply to Mr. Hacker's article on land reform, Mr. Gunther makes some very wild statements. He says your correspondent, J. Hacker, givs himself a great deal of unnecessary trouble in regard to government land, and goes on to say the troubles he complains of exist, but they cannot be avoided in the way he proposes. Now, I think J. Hacker's theory is right and just, and that the evils he complains of can be avoided. If a person obtains money or goods under false pretenses, there is a law to punish him. If the law is not enforced, that is not the fault of the law. And again he says that out of one hundred persons who pre-empt or homestead land, there is not one who takes it in good faith. That statement is absolutely untrue, as far as Nebraska is concerned. I took a homestead in Nebraska in the spring of '69, hav lived here ever since, and I know that the most of the people who settled Nebraska took their homesteads and pre-emptions in good faith. I do not think that out of one hundred persons over ten obtained their land through fraud. His innuendo concerning the class of people who are homesteaders and pre-empters is unmanly, ungenerous, and illiberal, to say the least. If thirty men out of one hundred obtain land through fraud, that is no just reason why the other seventy should be deprived of their right to a homestead or pre-emption. I think that the class of people who settled this western wilderness will compare favorably with the people of any state in the Union, California not excepted, as to honesty and intelligence. B. N. TROTTER.

BURTON, TEXAS, May 12, 284.

MR. EDITOR: No truer words ever fell from a pen than those of J. L. Andrew in THE TRUTH SEEKER of the 3d inst. I hav fully experienced it all; and seeing this, those solid in my belief, hereabouts, consider it binding them to act the hypocrit, and nominally take sides with an institution they abominate and would assist to overthrow at any time were it safe to their business interest for them to do so. No few of those exist, and hence our strength cannot near be told; they are counted in the orthodox ranks, therefore we appear so inferior in numbers beside them. Several of my neighbors borrow papers of me, and read them eagerly on the sly, that would be glad to subscribe themselvs but for the ostracism in business, and society as well, they know would surely follow. I offered to pay the fees of some I know to be good Liberals if they would consent to let their names be enrolled in the Freethinkers' ranks for Brother Green, but no, such a thing could not be thought of. We need bold lecturers, and plenty of them, like Remsburg; may they soon appear, is the wish of Yours fraternally, H. B. JONES.

P.S.—I giv them the best I can on all occasions, knowing matters cannot be made worse, for they hav failed as signally to starve me out as did their prayer for God to remove me from the earth he made especially for his flock. And judging from what I see and hear very often, they would readily undertake the job themselvs but for fear some of them might visit the celestial abode of gold-paved streets a little premature of their God's call. I inclose the sum for FREETHINKERS' ALMANAC; it is both interesting and instructiv, and cheap at the price asked. H. B. J.

CAWKER CITY, KAN., May 12, 284.

MR. EDITOR: I hav been waiting several weeks to receive the shots from free-land gentlemen. They now seem to hav done, and I survive; but not, as some suspect, a land grabber. I do not own more than two acres, not a great lot, surely, when I could hav got 160 if I had liked to, but I am an incapable, and know and acknowledge it. If I were going to benefit mankind by a land grant, I should provide them with money to go where land is to be got, and where they could be useful if capable; but, I repeat, the great demand is to provide for the incapable. If I were to tell how I worked it, it would seem purely egotism; hence I forbear. But I am a physical incapable all the same, and I think it is from that fact that I hav been more observant and acquired more knowledge in that direction. I wish the land reformers would giv us a general plan of their mode of procedure to place all men in possession of a home, and keep them there. It might possibly gain by a little criticism. So much for the land question.

I see by THE TRUTH SEEKER that W. H. Burr does not take in the Laplace theory of the origin of the world, and I shall not sustain it. But Mr. Burr says that all worlds are growing by meteoric accretion. This he has made no attempt to prove. The proof would be interesting to me, at least, as I hav always understood that meteorites were detached pieces from one or more planets, and consequently this planet was growing by accretion at the expense of another; but if all are gaining by the same process, from where does the material come? I find that they are composed of the same material as is this planet, with one exception—the mineral schribersite is not known here. But Mr. Burr's article was very short. Perhaps he can fully explain at more length. I hav no doubt that he is correct, though at variance with a host of philosophers, that the heat of the interior of the earth is produced by pressure of gravity. GEO. W. CHAPMAN, M.D.

NORTH BENTON, OHIO, May 19, 1884.

MR. EDITOR: Inclosed please find $2, for which continue my paper and send me the TRUTH SEEKER ANNUAL for 1884. I cannot do without the paper. On May 18, 1884, in the afternoon, while the rest of the family were at the schoolhouse attending Sunday-school out of curiosity to see the performance of the cranks under the guise of religion, and hear them explain how Joshua made the sun stand still, and such like, I sat in the parlor reading THE TRUTH SEEKER, that being my favorit paper. I saw one of the nicest freaks of nature that is commonly seen; in fact, volumes can be learnt from it—more than could be learnt in Sunday-school in a lifetime. There was a turkey hen with thirteen small turkeys in the orchard near the house. I heard a commotion with the turkey hen; she kept up a rumpus for some time. I walked out into the orchard to see what the trouble was. I saw in the apple-trees two hawks, and also the turkey-hen on the top of an apple-tree. I looked around for the young turkeys, but could see none. I sat down under an apple-tree. In about ten minutes the turkey hen flew down and went about five rods, and commenced calling her turkeys. She very readily found eleven that answered to her call. She strolled off with the eleven turkeys about eight rods. Apparently dissatisfied, she stopped and surveyed the premises, and commenced calling, but no young turkeys answered. I supposed the hawks had got them. She fussed around some five minutes. The eleven that she had with her huddled close together, and the old one started back on a run over the eight rods and commenced calling for the young turkeys. She soon found the two missing ones, and led them to the eleven that were huddled together. Then she appeared to be satisfied. Now, how she knew there were two missing is the enigma, for they were huddled close to the ground, under the grass, and made no noise, and she appeared not to discover the loss till she got about eight rods away with the eleven. The question with me is, Was the discovery of the last two young turkeys instinct or knowledge? What more could a man hav done in that stage of development? Such streaks of development can be seen in almost all the animal race. The development in man is slow. The Bible says man has been on the earth six thousand years or thereabouts; science says many millions; yet I hav lived longer than or before steam, telegraphy, etc. CHESTER BEDELL.

A LETTER TO COL. INGERSOLL.

66 WEST 4TH ST., NEW YORK, MAY 24, 1884.

HON. ROB'T G. INGERSOLL, Dear Sir: I see in the TRUTH SEEKER of New York (Sat., April 26, 1884) "A New Lecture by Col. Ingersoll."

In the third paragraph you say: "There was a time when the astrologer sought to read in the stars the fate of men and nations. The astrologer has faded from the world, but the astronomer has taken his place."

I cannot but believe that you, having alway been an advocate of reason, freedom of thought and speech, and justice, would intentionally make a misstatement, or, having done so, would not hesitate to retract it were you shown to be in error. I wish, therefore, to ask you, Are these your words, and where is your authority for saying the "astrologer has faded from the world," or do you of your own knowledge know it to be so?

You will excuse me for troubling you, but I am very much interested in such matters, and I think if you examin into the subject you will find that astrologers hav not all faded from the world. It is true that they are not as common as they were centuries ago, but that is not for the reason that astrology has lost any of the truths it has always contained, but because of the bigoted theological element in the world who hav endeavored to carry out the words of the God in the Bible who is said to hav told the children of Israel, "Thou shalt not suffer a witch to liv," and the so-called civilized nations of late years hav done everything possible to exterminate astrology, knowing not the difference between it and witchcraft.

When the persecutions of astrologers hav ceased, and the time comes when men will not be reviled, proscribed, or condemned for their belief in subjects that they been compelled to admit to be true by rational and unbiased investigation, then you will find the astrologer has not faded from the earth. You state, "The astronomer has taken his place." This is the first intimation I hav ever had that astronomers hav ever attempted to read the fate of men and nations. You speak of the great discovery in astronomy by Kepler, from which we may almost date the "birth of science." Are you aware that Kepler made equally as important discoveries in astrology? And "Kepler's Aspects," which he discovered, will be known by his name equally as long as his first, second, and third laws in astronomy.

Is it not strange that the ancients, who excelled in poetry, sculpture, mathematics, architecture, and also in astrology, putting it to the test every day for thousands of years, never discovered the falsity of it; while, in these days when very few persons know anything of the subject, every ignorant person supposes that astrology has been "exploded?"

Probably you were not aware that for thousands of years all the calculations in astronomy were made for the sole and only use of astrologers, similar to the astronomical calculations of the present day being made almost solely for the purpose of navigation. The only person I hav ever read, or heard tell of, that ever attempted, systematically, to explode astrology, was Bishop Butler, author of "Analogy of Religions." He wrote a number of articles against astrology, but finding he was so ignorant of the subject, it occurred to him that he could write against it with more advantage if he only understood the science. He began its study and ended up by writing one of the best works we hav on the science, called "Butler's Astrology." Why has not his "Astrology" been used as a text book in our universities, like his "Analogy of Religions?" Simply because astrology is not fashionable in our day.

Yours respectfully, L. D. BROUGHTON, M.D.

POMONA, May 12, 1884.

MR. EDITOR: This community has been exercised recently over a law suit between two of her citizens; one a follower of the "meek and lowly," the other—well, he is a common man who has not made "his calling and election sure" by becoming a member of the Methodist church to which the other belongs; the bone of contention being a piece of government land which both parties claim. As to the merits of the claims of the respectiv parties I know nothing, nor is it of any consequence to the readers of THE TRUTH SEEKER. But what I am desirous that the outside world know is that the Methodists of Pomona are not a whit behind their brethren elsewhere in deeds of crookedness. The facts in the case are briefly these: The pastor of the little canal-boat and a number of his leading members buckle on the armor of their holiness in defense of their brethren in Christ, and approach one of the associate council of the bad man—the Infidel—by writing him a letter (of which I hav a copy), said associate council being a passenger in the Methodist barge, also Good Templar and prohibitionist, begging him in the name of Christ, Good Templarism, and Prohibition, to betray his client; his refusal to accept the bribe for so small consideration and step down and out has aroused their wrath and set the fires of hell burning in their sanctified breasts, and I am informed that they are now using every means at hand to cause the unfaithful brother to retire from the various orders to which they mutually belong.

Here is a church using its combined influence and power, conspiring to defeat the ends of justice, prostituting its pretended holiness to the level of fraud, in the name of Christ. Doubtless their petitions to the bankrupt court of heaven night and morning are ladened with fulsome praises of their brother and curses for the Infidel land-grabber, asking piece and prosperity for the one "altogether lovely," and hell and eternal damnation for the other; consigning him to the bottomless pit, where he will never be able to get either land or water, or even gaze upon the feathery tribe.

There is enough rascality and rottenness practiced within the church, if publicly made known, to consign its members to "hades" (wherever that may be). Let their crimes become known, and their privilege for wrong doing will cease. Violation of the rights of others in the name of Christ or any other supposed deity ought not to be tolerated by a free and law-abiding people. Let every Freethinker absolutely refuse to giv money or aid in any manner in the building of churches or theological schools; the loss will be felt, and the tax will begin to fall so heavily upon the members that their numbers will diminish, compelling the parson to gain his bread by other methods than preying for it. No respect ought to be shown to a man who gets a living by preying upon the ignorance and superstition of his fellow-being. The parson is of no necessity in this world; let him migrate. Giv him wings and a harp, and let him soar "on high" and join the band where his music may be appreciated; the air here is pure—does not need him to agitate it. Their teaching is an incentiv to crime; they pervert law, mislead and misdirect the young, dwarf their minds to the narrow channels of theological ideas by teaching a religion antagonistic to the wants and necessities of this life—in conflict with the joys of a beautiful home here. Abandon the parson and his supernatual teachings, and the home will blossom with the joyful things of this life; wealth and comfort will take the place of religion and poverty. Drive out the creeds and let in knowledge! Away with the phantoms—the supernatural—and deal only with nature and her laws, and we will be happy "even unto death."

H. L. SHAUG.

FLOYD C. H., VA., April 17, 284.

MR. EDITOR: If you will allow me space in your paper, I would like to say a few words on belief of immortality, and on the opinion that death ends all. Some believe that the death of the body is just the entrance into an eternal life, that our life here is simply the child life of eternity, that we hav to die to be born into the spirit life, that our lives will be lives of eternal happiness or lives of eternal pain, and that our happiness depends on, in the first place, our believing the Bible, although it is self-contradictory; in the second place, you must sell everything you hav and giv it to the poor—I hav often said that I wished that some rich person in my neighborhood would get in the notion of being saved by that clause, but it seems that they ignore that passage of the Bible altogether; but it seems to me the most reasonable of any, for I like to see anyone willing to pay for what they get; but I believe that those who claim the greatest rewards hereafter do the least to merit happiness, and if there ever is such a time as the judgment day to settle up accounts, I believe there will be a great many false claims presented. The idea of getting to heaven without living a self-sacrificing life would be like beating one's way on the train, or getting into a show on a counterfeit ticket, or cheating. The idea of heaven was born of human love. The idea of hell was born of revenge. And the idea that death ends all is born of nature and reason. I will now giv some of my reasons why there is not a creator having all power, and why there is not a future existence. Does it not seem likely that if there was a God innocence would always be protected? Does it seem probable that the innocent babes' brains would be allowed to be dashed out by a highway murderer, or that the murderer should outliv his victim—that the innocent babe should writhe in death's agonies, and the victim sometimes appear to suffer more in death than his murderer? Doesn't it seem likely if there is a future life, a heaven, that some of our dear ones that hav gone on before would come back to earth and visit their old home and their friends? It hurts us to think that they hav forsaken us. We hav friends who hav left us that would hav died for us at any moment of their lives, and whose place we would hav taken on death's sad bed, and we can't believe that they hav forsaken us. Why, if I were to die and reach the promised land, no sooner would I land there and see my loved ones I would retrace my journey back to my dear friends on earth, and cheer their sad hearts and wipe their tear-stained faces, and I would send the joyful tidings all the world around. We love and care for our friends while living, we laugh with them in health, we nurse them in sickness, we weep over them in death, and when burying them we cover their faces with tears. We take our last sad look at them, and with hearts of grief and agony we giv them back to their mother earth. In the time of sickness, at death, and after death for awhile, there are no words sad enough to express our grief for them. We see them in our dreams, they appear to be with us, and sometimes in health; and we can recall in our waking hours every word we ever said to them in anger, and in our mind's eye we see them do over again every kind and noble deed they hav done for us. We keep waiting, watching, and listening for them. But in vain. Years roll on, our eyes grow dim; no sound reaches the echoless shores, and no tidings ever come from the opposit side of the mystic river, and therefore we think that they hav never been called from their slumber, but are at peace in their "windowless palace of rest"—and who is it that is not willing to giv up the idea of eternal happiness to get rid of the idea of eternal punishment? But they say it is not a question of liking or disliking. Surely not. But if there is a God he is certainly as kind and good as a human being. If not, it is degrading to worship him.

Yours truly, ISAAC LEMON, JR.

MR. EDITOR: The difference of opinion between Mr. Kirby, of Doniphan, Kan., and yourself and others is in regard to whether there is a God who created man, on the part of Mr. Kirby; or whether he emerged from protoplasm, through self-creation, by a long line of evoluting changes from a succession of form from the lowest to the highest form of animal life called man, on your part, and all the arguments from authors on either side are of the greatest extremes, and from hereditary speculations, and a wide departure from the fundamental principles of nature. And by so doing you detract from nature (God) the light and power of knowledge. We know nothing of animal life except through our five senses. The knowledge of chemistry shows the component parts of inanimate matter, that they possess life in every part; and if matter is eternal, then life is co-eternal. Nature never changes, except by its own inherent laws, and that only in one direction, and that is only in vegetable and animal manner of life, form, growth, maturity, dissolution, or death, which is nature's transition state. There is more or less time allotted for this transition state, which is divided and applied to every variety of vegetable and animal form, from the lowest to the highest. The average age of individual man is about seventy years. Other animals may hav a shorter duration. So with vegetable life. Death is on our track, and is as inevitable as life, and is a law of nature, and we as individuals only liv again in our posterity. The only manner of the succession of animal and vegetable life is through male and female sexual relations, and is the inevitable law of nature. If we originated from protoplasm through a succession of animal improvement and gradation, why did nature change—why not continue the process? The theory supposes that nature had invented a new scheme, and was the inventor of speculation. No, friend Macdonald, let go all schemes and take nature as our senses now find her, with all her variety of forms, which is in every way self-existent and eternal.

Our senses cannot comprehend a God higher than man. What, then, do we mean by God? The best definition I can giv is, the concentration of all the faculties of the mind upon any object of sense. If a man concentrates his mind or all his faculties upon a horse, a dog, or a woman, that object is his god. And he may change this to another object. But nature is the demonstration of truth evidenced by all his senses. But we need not suppose that nature once was what she is not now. Nay, she is ever the same, but knowledge with us makes all the changes, and that is why I make this assertion, that man is the embodiment of the whole of nature, and when this knowledge is obtained we depend for knowledge on nothing outside of ourselvs. Though we are all immediately connected, we are created, so to speak, from nature's fundamental principle of variety. And when we come to the knowledge that classification is a principle of nature we shall agree to disagree, like the stars in the firmament. Though all connected as parts of the universe, yet each star has its special course of revolution and they never collide with each other. There is no known law in nature to change the species of animals to make a sheep from a goat, to make a cow from a horse, or vice versa, but each is a distinct species, and they cannot be changed other than by improvement, by change in the same species. Thus man from protoplasm, or even from a monkey, is preposterous, and entirely foreign from nature. The study of nature rejects every such idea. When a man by the study of himself finds that he is the embodiment of nature, he at once sees the connection between himself and all others, and he ceases at once all antagonism and becomes an intellectual man, or man of reason, and no more fights the variety of organism, but sees its classification.

ZENOS KENT.

ORANGE, CAL., May 23, 1884.

MR. EDITOR: In commencing this letter I will remark that I am not dyspeptic or bilious, neither do I wear a liver pad. It is plainly evident to those who hav perused "Aunt" Elmina's writings during the past that her organ of hope is about the same size as "Brother" Beecher's back brain—very large, as classed by phrenologists—and to that fact must we look for a solution of the lucent picture which the affairs of this world present to her mind. It is a broad statement to say that nine-tenths, if not ninety-nine-one-hundredths, of human life is spent in comfort and comparativ happiness, and one must either be unfamiliar with the different grades and conditions of society, or mentally color blind, to assert such a thing. The great majority of people in every quarter of the globe are those whose only capital is their muscle, and wealth has become so concentrated in the hands of a few that this majority can barely keep soul and body together, to say nothing of enjoying "comfort and comparativ happiness." They liv and move almost automatically, as it were, and organized capital keeps them in a condition of slavery from which it seems as though nothing but dynamite could free them. Incipient revolutions are agitating the whole civilized world, and never were there such discontent and mental disturbances as now permeate the masses of our country as well as foreign ones, and all because nine-tenths, if not ninety-nine-one-hundreths, of human life is composed of so much happiness! Reformers in every department of life were never so numerous, and though everybody is so happy, "Aunt" Elmina has been trying for years to rectify the condition of society and bring about the millennium by removing this one-tenth or one-hundredth of misery and unhappiness. If the world is so comfortable and happy, what means this universal protest for more freedom, more rights and privileges to enjoy life? Why these labor agitations and constant complaints from the toiling millions? Is it possible there is no cause for complaint except the workings of a morbid imagination, and the absence of hope enough to change black into white and darkness into light? If so, let the Institute of Heredity instruct the people, so future offspring can be born with healthy imaginations, and sufficient hope to discover happiness in slavery, and ten-tenths of joy in poverty and suffering, in physical and mental hunger, and the cravings of the soul that seek in vain for satisfaction. If all the trouble lies in the mind and everything is serene and happy, if we could only think so, what a pity everybody stricken with poverty, hunger, sickness, disease, and sorrow hasn't "Aunt" Elmina's organ of hope to transform everything into sunbeams tinged with joy and peace! How happy those Russian exiles in Siberia could be if they had her "normal" hope; the thousands of soldiers in foreign lands who are compelled to leave home and friends and serve the best years of their lives in a standing army to support effete monarchies; the women and children in English mines, forced to toil their lives away to gain the mere pittance necessary to ward off starvation; the thousands of factory operativs in our own country who can barely exist, to say nothing of attaining enjoyment and recreation for mind or body; the hordes of poverty-stricken wretches in our great cities who liv, the devil knows how, amidst dirt, disease, and sickness, in ignorance and vice, more like cattle than human beings; the inmates of hospitals, prisons, poor-houses, and insane asylums, and all who liv from hand to mouth with no place to call home! What immense happiness they might all realize without change of condition, if they only possessed the requisit amount of hope—the power to look on the bright side, whether a bright side exists or not! Were life such a tragedy as it appears to some, "Aunt" Elmina informs us that few would cling to it as earnestly as they do now; but the fact is, that makes little or no difference, for we are all born with vitativness, and it is so strong in some that no hardship or misery can lessen it, and that, instead of perfect happiness, minus one-tenth, or one-hundredth, is what wards off death and makes people cling to life. Take the case of a man imprisoned for life within the stone walls of a penal institution; what makes him cling to life, with no prospect of freedom? Is it happiness or his organ of vitativness? The latter, most surely; and to say people shun death because they are too happy to desire a dreamless sleep, or the existence believed in by Spiritualists, is an error. Elmina can't see why, if life has been miserable, one should believe in a continued existence or desire it, for, says she, sufferings, sins, sorrows, and crimes cannot be exempt. If there is a continued existence, which I firmly believe, not from faith but from satisfactory evidence, we shall be free from this physical body, which now confines the spirit and requires our constant exertions to provide for it. To fill the belly and clothe the back is all the majority of humanity can do, and the mind, the seat of happiness and joy, suffers neglect in consequence, and we cannot attain that state of bliss for which the soul yearns, while the physical acts as a drawback. When freed from this "prison-house of clay," there can be no more slavery; man can no longer oppress his brother and monopolize land and wealth to such an extent that hunger and want are ever near. Sickness and pain will hav fled, and crime cannot exist when the cause of it is removed. In the land of spirit, the unsatisfied cravings of the soul here will be gratified, and no physical cause will depress the mind nor restrict its freedom. The happiness experienced in this world by the favored few, when compared with that in the other, will be "as moonlight unto sunlight, and as water unto wine." So why shouldn't we desire a continuation of life, whether miserable or happy now? Let those who profess to desire annihilation reply.

"There is no death! What seems so is transition.
This life of mortal breath
Is but a suburb of the life elysian,
Whose portal we call death."

A FAIRY TALE.

They were two princes doomed to death;
Each loved his beauty and his breath;
"Leave us our life and we will bring Fair gifts unto our lord, the king."

They went together. In the dew
A charmed bird before them flew.
Through sun and thorn one followed it,
Upon the other's arm it lit.

A rose, whose faintest flush was worth
All buds that ever blew on earth,
One climbed the rocks to reach; ah, well
Into the other's breast it fell.

Weird jewels, such as fairies wear,
When moons go out to light their hair,
One tried to touch on ghostly ground,
Gems of quick fire the other found.

One with the dragon fought to gain
The enchanted fruit, and fought in vain;
The other breathed the garden's air,
And gathered precious apples there.

Backward to the imperial gate,
One took his fortune, one his fate;
One showed sweet gifts from sweetest lands,
The other torn and empty hands.

At bird, and rose, and gem, and fruit,
The king was sad, the king was mute;
At last he slowly said: "My son,
True treasure is not lightly won.

"Your brother's hands, wherein you see
Only these scars, show more to me
Than if a kingdom's price I found
In place of each forgotten wound."

My First Day in a Sunday-School.

To write a story calculated to instruct and benefit the reader, it should be drawn true to life, and so reproduce the feelings and impressions which transpired at the time of its occurrence, while the later or present thoughts are used to decorate the original facts, and thus bring the old and new thoughts into one picture. When we look back into life we find that all our mishaps were brought on by ignorance, and a disposition on our part to do as we pleased, and act according to our notions; and notwithstanding the pain we were often compelled to endure, it was much better for us to suffer and learn than to mope along like an obedient beast, with no ambition to do or to learn for oneself. In truth, without the development of self-will we could attain to no individuality of character.

The child must necessarily meet with many failures in learning to walk. It is needless for mamma to say, "Take care, darling," for baby is bound to try and sure to fall many times before the center of gravity is formed upon its pedal supports, but while it meets with many failures, and gets many bumps, it never givs up, but will "try, try again," until at last success crowns its baby efforts, and the joyful discovery goes from one to the other of the happy family that "baby can walk." The baby's first tooth and its first few toddling strides are the prime events of every child that comes into existence. The lesson to be drawn from this is that we had better fail often than never try, and a little self-will should not be checked too abruptly in children, though we know it will giv the darling some pain. Better let it be nipped by a little frost, or scorched by a hot poker, than not to learn the use of fire and frost.

About 1834 I attended the first Sunday-school. The good people of that neighborhood, wishing to follow after the originator of that institution, old Robert Raikes, the English cobbler, of whom they had read, they concluded to do as that crusty old man said, and gather all the children into some place to cram their young minds with the same sort of book learning in use in those days. The old man's motivs no doubt were good, his object being to teach the ragged and neglected children to read, but as soon as the sectarian spirit of the world took hold of the idea they saw at a glance that it would be a splendid opportunity to fill the minds of the young with the mysteries of their creeds, and so secure them to their churches as members when the days of catechism and installation should come along. In view of this object the Sunday-school has been turned into a church school, and everything of a secular or a scientific nature completely excluded. They are mostly so pious that to speak of any natural things upon "the Lord's day" is regarded as very sinful. They seem to forget that the same sun shines, the wind blows, the rivers flow, the birds sing and twitter, the beautiful flowers grow, and every other natural thing happens upon that day that happens upon any other day of the week, and if there is any sin about it the Lord of whom they speak so much must be guilty of disregarding this holy day by allowing all those natural things to go on in the usual way. The proper way to reason is this. It must be right to do right upon any day of the year, and it must be wrong to do wrong upon any day, so that the day can hav no connection whatever with the good or bad of an action, and every act of life must stand upon its merits or demerits, regardless of any day or time.

Well, our Sabbath-school was held in a large barn, the threshing-floor of which was cleared off and swept. In one corner was an old windmill with a scoop shovel and striking-board sticking out of the hopper. On the end of the sieve, by turning it away from the wall, were placed the writing materials, books, etc., and it was made to do duty as a desk and pulpit, to hold the big Bible, etc. In the other end were lots of bags of grain that had been piled up out of the way, and I remember two ladders forming a part of the framework to run up into the haymows on either side. These were a constant temptation to the larger boys, and it was quite a job to restrain some of them from climbing up into the lofts. The other temptation was to turn the crank of the wind-mill, and one boy came near doing the job, for a single turn of the crank would hav set the sieves in motion and scattered the religious documents over the barn floor, but his arm was caught in the nick of time and the sacred words remained safe on their shaky foundation, as they probably do to this day in another sense. The middle portion of the barn floor was filled with benches of all lengths and various hights, but not meeting the required wants, Tom, Dick, and Harry were dispatched among the neighbors for chairs, stools, etc., to accommodate the outpouring of women and children. It took considerable time to get started, as everybody did not know just what to do, and nobody could tell them, by which delay it took a long time to do nothing, and after it was over the balance of this "holy Sabbath" was consumed in toting home the borrowed benches, stools, chairs, books, etc., to get the barn in a fit condition for farmers' use.

I was very tired, and continually offered up my child's prayer, "I wish they would quit." My misfortune was to be placed upon a round stool near the wind-mill. In a half hour my limbs were completely numb, as they did not touch the floor. I concluded I could stand it no longer; I must get down upon the floor, but how to do it was the question. I made several efforts; I was in absolute misery. I screwed all my courage up and slid one foot along the stool leg until the toe just touched the floor, and holding on to the top of the rickety thing, cautiously I let my other foot slide down the other stool leg, but the moment I let my weight upon the floor, down I went plump, drawing the long-legged stool on top of me. My limbs were so benumbed I could not stand. This raised a general titter at my expense, for in spite of the fence-rail expressions of countenance, it seemed too irresistibly funny not to laugh at my predicament, which was shared in by the teachers. They laughed while I cried, both with pain and mortification. My teacher (although she had not yet taught me a thing) was kind enough to replace me upon the stool pedestal and admonish me not to go to sleep, thus adding insult to injury. I would like to see a child sleep on such a "lookout" as that. If they had placed me there for a monitor to overlook the whole school there would hav been some sort of sense in so elevated a position.

The whole proceeding was such a torture to me that I resolved then and there that I would never go to that school again if I could help it. And this is what came of it.

Bright and early the next Sunday morning I held a consultation with a neighbor boy about the tumble I got off the stool, and we resolved to dress up and go to the river Schuylkill. He knew of a large buttonwood-tree that a severe storm had prostrated, and we could go and gather balls, and let the hated school keep itself. This resolution we put into effect by hieing off about school time to the big tree. It had lots of balls on it, and we worked very hard cutting and tearing them off until we had gathered about a bushel into a large pile. It was glorious fun, but having picked off most of them along the trunk of the tree, it became necessary to venture out upon the limbs. At this I was only too confident, and my partner, for some jealousy at my success, began to shake the limb I was on. I told him to stop, or he would shake me off; but, watching his chance, he gave the limb a sudden jerk, when down I went about six or eight feet, striking upon a part of a broken limb of the tree upon the ground, and falling so as to bring my arm upon this limb, and under my body, which bent it into the shape of a horseshoe, the hand forced into the soft ground by the side of the broken limb. It was a terrible bend. The arms of children seldom break, on account of the softness and toughness of the osseous or bony matter, but as they become older the bones become harder and stronger, but more brittle, and are then more apt to fracture. The toughness of the bones are all the worse for children when they become bent, as it is much more painful to straighten a bent than a fractured bone. And I found it a tough job before I got over it.

My companion was much frightened at what he had done, and, on seeing my crooked arm, wanted to run away and leave me, but I held on to him with the good arm until he consented to help me off with my coat. After getting a full look at my injuries, for I was somewhat marked and bruised besides, we started home. On my arrival a doctor was soon called, who had great difficulty to get the swollen arm into any kind of shape. It was the most crushing pain I ever endured, as the operation was slow and coaxing, little by little, until it was straight. Some of the family and the neighbors who came to see me during the many weeks it was in process of healing seemed to delight in telling me that it was a direct punishment from God on account of my running away from Sunday-school, and I was not sharp enough to see the fallacy of such reasoning then, and for the time supposed it must be so. I did not then reflect how mean they were making their God, when, to produce the punishment in that way, he must hav inspired my companion with the petty jealousy of my success in gathering the buttonwood balls which he was too cowardly to venture out for. Nor did I reflect on the thousands of other instances where boys did not get their arms broken when doing worse things than that. He could just as well hav let me fall without the aid of that bad boy's act, but this is the miserable sort of sophistical subterfuge and inference that is used to create in the minds of children those superstitions that curse the world by degrading human nature, as well as our conceptions of such a God. The accident I met with detained me so long that the bright and warm days of the declining summer had passed away when I again took up the busy thread of child life, and then the Sunday-school had passed away, never more to be held in the old barn.

Mylapore, India, April 14, 1884.

Dear Miss Wixon: You will be surprised to get a letter from me; won't you? But I know you, although you do not know me. I hav read about you in The Truth Seeker, which comes to friends of my papa every week. I am a little girl. The missionaries say I am a little heathen girl, but papa says that missionaries do not always speak the truth, and that they hav no right to call me such. We like to read about you in our house. Papa says that Freethinkers love us far better than the missionaries, and that your paper is, oh! ever so much better than the tracts. One missionary left a tract at the house of my dear sister Rani, who is married and has a darling little boy. The name of the tract was "Why Will You Go to Hell?" and Rani came to ask papa about it. Papa comforted her and told her that happy days were in store for India, because in America and England there were many, many gentlemen and ladies who were very angry with the missionaries for frightening us so much. Papa is a Zemindar and has, oh! such lots and lots of rupees, or what you call dollars in your country. But he says that he will not giv a single rupee to the missionaries, although they ask him very often. He says that they get salaries. Is it not wonderful, dear lady, that they should think such dreadful things of us, when we are all trying to be so kind and good? Papa says that we must try to do what we consider right and good and never mind the missionaries, and he says that you will quite agree with him. Papa and Rani send their kind respects to you, and I send you a whole heart full of love.

Miss Susan H. Wixon: I hav taken time to make some puzzles, and if you see them fit I hope they will be published. I send you three; a square, a cryptogram, and an enigma. The answer to J. K. P. Baker's metagram in in No. 19 is Gladstone. But tell me please what has become of our puzzlers: H. Van Pelt, H. Tausig, Maggie L., Mrs. Upsham, Mr. Baker, and others? Are they tired already? Hoping to see some of their puzzles and correspondence, I remain

Yours respectfully, R. O. Bert.

DOUBLE LETTER ENIGMA.

My first is in Freethought, but not in belief;
And my second is the same.
My third is in rescue and relief;
My fourth in Garfield's name.
My fifth in real, but not in thing;
And my sixth is also the same.
My seventh is in tail and wing;
My eighth is in colt, not in mane.
Read these lines over and you will find them the same;
A man! A man of great fame.

A TALE OF TEN TRAVELERS.

Ten weary, footsore travelers,
All in a woeful plight,
Sought shelter at a wayside inn
One dark and stormy night.

"Nine beds, no more," the landlord said,
"Hav I to offer you,
To each of eight a single room,
But the ninth must serve for two."

A din arose. The troubled host
Could only scratch his head,
For of those tired men no two
Could occupy one bed.

The puzzled host was soon at ease—
He was a clever man—
And so to please his guests devised
This most ingenious plan:

| A | B | C | D | E | F | G | H | I |

In room marked A two men were placed,
The third he lodged in B,
The fourth to C was then assigned,
The fifth retired to D.

In E the sixth he tucked away,
In F the seventh man,
The eight and ninth in G and H,
And then to A he ran,

Where the host, as I hav said,
Had laid two travelers by;
Then taking one—the tenth and last—
He lodged him safe in I.

Nine single rooms—a room for each—
Were made to serve for ten;
And this it is that puzzles me
And many wiser men.

DAVID J. COTTER'S

BELT OF LIFE,

AND

"WILSONIA"

IMPROVED

Magnetic Garments.

312 MYRTLE AVE.,

BROOKLYN, N. Y.

For the Relief and Cure of All Forms of Disease in its Worst Stages.

Readers of THE TRUTH SEEKER, read the annexed letter from a well-known physician who attended the following remarkable case:

Mrs. L——, a lady residing in Brooklyn, E. D., for two year, suffered terribly with a uterine tumor; her attendant physician advised an operation, but having great aversion to the surgeon's knife, she would not submit to it; some friends having used my garments and been benefited thereby advised her to try them. About the middle of February, this year, a body set, as advised by myself, was purchased for her.

The following letter will show the results and prove the value of my improved appliances in all forms of disease:

MAY 2, 1884.

MR. D. J. COTTER, Dear Sir: Thinking you would like to know of the following, I notify you.

Mrs. L——, a patient of mine, had a uterine tumor of two years' standing and would not consent to an operation; some friends recommended her to use your MAGNETIC GARMENTS (a body set, I believe). Unbeknown to me she did purchase and wear them, for ten weeks, so she now informs me. Two days ago I was sent for to attend her and found the tumor had been expelled entire while standing, without pain or flow.

Have you met with anyting of this kind before by the application of your garments? I should be glad to have some information on the point. Yours respectfully,

DR. A. R PETTIT,
149 Tompkins ave., Brooklyn, N. Y.

COPY OF MY REPLY.

MAY 3, 1884.
312 Myrtle ave., Brooklyn, N. Y.

DR. A. R. PETTIT, Dear Sir: Your favor received. In reply I beg to say I have several such cases, some of many years' standing, cured by the use of my Garments. I would much like to see the tumor mentioned in your letter, it in your possession, if you will name a time I can call upon you. I will then give you all the information possible respecting the above-mentioned cases, and, if necessary, providing my patrons are willing, will place you in correspondence with them, or the physicians who attended them prior to the use of my Garments. I await your reply. Yours respectfully,

DAVID J. COTTER.

Dr. A. R. PETTIT having replied, I called upon him and saw the tumor; it was the fibrous tissue of a large one; all other matter seemed to have been absorbed (by the action of the Garments) before it was expelled. I fully satisfied him of other such cases by letters in my possession from parties cured and their physicians.

The above speaks for itself, as the full name and address of the physician is given, and I have no doubt but he will be pleased to satisfy any inquiring mind of the above facts. D. J. COTTER.

These garments are a decided improvement on anything of the kind ever offered, and only produced after many years of close study and scientific experiment.

Much depends upon the knowledge of how to apply such garments. Many persons have really good appliances to offer, but unless they are judiciously and scientifically applied they are valueless. Any person writing for pamphlet and information; by sending a full statement of their case, how long suffering, and all symptoms, would be advised free of cost, just what garment it would be necessary to use to effect a cure, price of same, etc. They are made to fit all parts of the body, easy of adjustment, and as comfortable to use as ordinary underwear; being well ventilated, they are cool, and the infusion of magnetism into the system produce a cool, pleasant feeling in the hottest weather, and will cure any of the following forms of disease: RHEUMATISM, GOUT, LUMBAGO, PARALYSIS, NEURALGIA, DYSPEPSIA, LOCOMOTOR ATAXIA, SPINAL DISEASE, ASTHMA, BRONCHITIS, DROPSY, TUMORS, CANCERS, and others not necessary to mention, as I claim that disease in any and all of its forms originates from one primary cause, a breaking up of the Ganglionic Nerves, preventing a flow of Odic or Vital force from the Medulla Oblongata at the base of the brain to various parts of the body (just as the severing of a telegraph wire would prevent the message being sent), the result being the iron particles in the blood become demagnetized; congestion and disease follow; if in the small of Back, Lumbago and Kidney trouble; in the shoulders, Rheumatism; in the Head, Nefralgia or Neuralgia, and so on in any part of the human organization. We have a thousand and one different names for disease, though produced by and through one source only, and it is by strenghtening the Ganglionic Nerves, conserving the vital forces, and infusing magnetism into the system, I effect so many marvelous cures after all other means have failed.

REMARKABLE CURE OF PARALYSIS.

NOV. 13, 1883.

DAVID J. COTTER, Dear Sir: In reply to your inquiry as to the effects of the Garments sent me I am pleased to say the result has been astonishing to myself and friends. The first two pieces sent gave me such relief that I had great confidence of being entirely cured when I obtained the others, and I was not disappointed. My paralysis has entirely disappeared and I am altogether a changed woman, and it is only two weeks since I got the full set. I suffered very much with weakness in my chest and lungs. Now I can sing and talk as well as ever, also read aloud without the slightest difficulty. I can safely recommend the garments to any persons suffering as I was.

MRS. E P. PLEASANTS,
Alderson, Monroe Co., West Va.

P. S.—My daughter has also found great relief from the use of your garments. See her note inclosed.

CURED OF NERVOUS PROSTRATION AND HYSTERIA.

DR. COTTER, Dear Sir: I am very happy to state that my general health has improved wonderfully since the application of your garments. From undergoing the operation to my eye my health had become fearfully impaired, until my attending physician feared for the results; but from the first ten days of wearing your garments I began to improve. I seemed to get new vitality, and with renewed health my sight got wonderfully better, until now I feel myself perfectly cured, and I am out of my physician's hands. I cannot feel too thankful for the benefit I have derived from your appliances and shall always bless the name of Dr. Cotter for his wonderful invention for curing disease without medicine.

Hoping thousands of others will be cured as I have been, I am, sir, Respectfully yours.

MISS MARY C. BURTON,
Alderson, Monroe Co., West Va.

CURED OF ASTHMA.

FEB. 4, 1884.

DR. D. J. COTTER, Dear Sir: I had suffered with Asthma for years in its worst form, and never found anything to help me until I put on your Garments, in February, 1883, since then my Asthma has disappeared, and I have not been troubled about breathing in the least.

Money could not buy the Garments I have if I could not get more.
